IN MEMORY OF

VED RATAN MOHAN

Col. Ved Ratan Mohan, M.P. was born at Rawalpindi on July 30, 1920. He graduated from the Punjab University and later took his Master of Commerce Degree from Delhi University.

Shri Ved Ratan Mohan's father Shri N.N. Mohan was a prominent industrialist and a generous philanthropist. Shri Ved Ratan Mohan made his own memorable contribution to the success of the enterprises in which his family was interested. He also took active interest in public life and supported many worthwhile causes.

In 1961, the honorary rank of Captain was conferred on Shri Ved Ratan Mohan; in 1966, he became a Lieutenant Colonel in the Territorial Army; in 1972, the honorary rank of Colonel in the Territorial Army was conferred on him.

He was elected as Deputy Mayor of the Municipal Corporation, in Lucknow. Later he was elected to the office of the Mayor. In 1964, he was nominated as a Member of the Uttar Pradesh Legislative Council. In 1967, he was awarded Padama Shri. In 1971, he became the recipient of the Padma Bhushan Award. In 1972, he was elected to Rajya Sabha, the Upper House of Indian Parliament, from Uttar Pradesh.

He died on July 28, 1973, deeply mourned and widely lamented.

He had travelled extensively and had a wide range of interests and accomplishments. Photography, painting, music and poetry had a claim on him. Equally, he gave generously of himself to the solution of public problems and to personal hardships of individuals in distress. He was deeply interested in Indian culture and in educational institutions as vehicles of India's cultural renaissance and socio-economic reconstruction. The Vedas and their message energised his inspiration and impelled him to consecrated action for human welfare.

Preface

The Vedas are the Word of God. At the very beginning of the Creation, man received knowledge of the Vedas. The Ṛgveda is the most ancient of all the holy scriptures in the world.

Knowledge of the Vedas is not intended for a particular race or country. God revealed this knowledge for the greatest good of mankind. This noble objective is reflected in the following words of the Vedic sages :

May all be happy and rid of diseases,
May all have a happy and harmonious life,
May nobody ever be afflicted with suffering.

The Vedas have been translated into several languages. Scholars like Griffith, Wilson and Max Müller have written commentaries on the Vedas in English. But the need for bringing out an unconventional and standard translation of the Vedas has been felt for quite sometime. The task, however, involved dedication, hard work and considerable financial resources.

Col. Ved Ratna Mohan, ex-M.P., was a promising youngman, the scion of a family which had implicit faith in the Vedas. His brilliant career was cut short by untimely death in 1973. His father, late Shri Narendra Mohan, was a leading industrialist of India. Devoted to social service, he took keen interest in the dissemination and distribution of religious literature. He had unshakable faith in God. Daily he would perform yajna and once in a year he would perform this on a big scale when all the mantras of one of the four Vedas would be recited. He had named his eldest son Ved Ratna (Jewel of the Vedas). He had desired the late Ved Ratna to do some service to the Vedas. But fate had willed otherwise. Col. Ved Ratna died before he could fulfil his father's wish.

His younger brother Major Kapil Mohan, who has great reverence for the Vedas like his father, made the noble resolve to get all the four Vedas translated into English and publish them on behalf of the Narendra Mohan Foundation in the sacred memory of his elder brother. This Foundation was endowed by the sons of the late Shri Narendra Mohan, the founder of the Mohan Industries, in accordance with the wishes of their father. A hospital, a college, and several other charitable institutions devoted to public service are being run by the Foundation.

The task of rendering the four Vedas into English was entrusted to the Veda Pratishthana by the Foundation. Dr. Govardhan Lal Dutta, a famous educationist and Head of the Pratishthana, requested the Vedic scholar Svami Satya Prakash Sarasvati to undertake the highly onerous responsibility. Indeed one could think of no other scholar better qualified than Svami Satya Prakashji to accomplish this task. I am happy that Svamiji was kind enough to accede to the request. He is devoting most of his time to the translation work though he is a parivrajaka, a peripatetic monk. In this task, he is collaborating with Pandit Satyakam Vidyalankar.

Thanks are particularly due to Shri Vishwanath for his unstinted cooperation in the excellent printing of this work. No words would be adequate to express my warm appreciation and grateful thanks to Major Kapil Mohan, Svami Satya Prakashji and other colleagues and co-workers of the Veda Pratisthana who have generally helped in the accomplishment of this sacred task.

Our labours would be fully rewarded if through this English translation of the four Vedas, attempted for the first time in India, the divine message enshrined in the Vedas impregnates human consciousness everywhere.

VEDAS : A GLIMPSE

Whilst introducing the Ṛgveda to the Western world by his English translation, Ralph T. H. Griffith quoted the following words of F. Max Müller:

> "What can be more tedious than the Veda, and yet, what can be more interesting, if once we know that it is the first word spoken by the Aryan man?"
> "The Veda has a two-fold interest : it belongs to the history of world and to the history of India. . .As long as man continues to take an interest in the history of his race, and as long as we collect in libraries and museums the relics of former ages, the first place in that long row of books which contain the records of the Aryan branch of mankind, will belong for ever to the Ṛgveda."

The Vedas have been given to us in a language which is itself divine. The Vedic language or classical Sanskrit, with its old and modern descendents, represents the earliest stock of speech. Sanskrit is the eldest daughter of the earliest mother-tongue. Indeed so far as the direct documentary evidence goes, it may rather be said to be the only surviving daughter; for none of the other six principal members of the family : Iranic, Hellenic, Italic, Celtic, Teutonic, and Lettoslavic, have left any literary monuments, and their original features have to be reproduced, as best as they can, from the materials supplied by their own daughter-languages. To the Sanskrit the antiquity and extent of its literary documents, the transparency of its grammatical structure, and the other linguistic and philological details must ever secure the foremost place in the comparative study of the Indo-Germanic speech.

The Veda since the time immemorial has been rightly regarded as of divine origin. The eternal nature of the Veda has been variously discussed and recognized on several grounds by several schools of discipline in India : by the grammarians, etymologists, ritualists and philosophers alike. On the other hand, the historians, evolutionists and the Western critics have tried to interpret the Vedic texts on different lines. In either case, the importance of the Veda is not lessened. Very recently, a young scholar, Jean Le Mee, born in France, but later on settled in the United States, has published a few Ṛgvedic hymns, and verses, very well illustrated by Ingbert Grütner, born in Germany, through his photographs shot in East Africa—Ethiopia, Kenya and Tanzania, because Grütner felt that the timeless quality of the land and the sense of human origin there best reflected the spirit of the Ṛgveda. This perhaps refers to Professor Leaky's discovery of human origin on Tanzania-Kenya borders. Shall we not say that it merely speaks of the universality of the Vedic texts, not confined to a single tract of land or to a single definite age?

Jean Le Mée expresses his sentiments in respect to the Veda in the following words : "Precious or durable materials—gold, silver, bronze, marble, onyx or granite—have been used by most ancient peoples in an attempt to immortalize their achievements. Not so, however, with the ancient Aryans. They turned to what may seem the most volatile and insubstantial material of all—the spoken word—and out of this bubble of air fashioned a monument which more than thirty, perhaps forty, centuries later stands untouched by time or the elements. For the pyramids have been eroded by the desert wind, the marble broken by earthquakes, and the gold stolen by robbers, while the Veda remains recited daily by an unbroken chain of generations, travelling like a great wave through the living substance of mind."

It is one of the wonders of wonder, that the Veda could so well resist the ravages of times and could nourish and give form to the religious and philosophical thoughts of innumerable races from the time immemorial. How could this miracle happen ? The answer is again well given here ;

"The Veda itself is the secret of the Veda. The foundation stone that India contributed to civilization, the Veda, is said to embody the regulations, the laws of the universe as 'seen' by the gifted poets, prophets or seers, the ṛsis." "Set by them," so says Jean Le Mée, "in a special language to be joyfully proclaimed for future ages, it has come down to us through an elaborate oral tradition, consciously designed to prevent any distortion. Even today had we no written record available, it would still be possible to have access to the Veda as it existed when the text was fixed three or four thousand years ago! This supreme monument of an early religion which has left us with no archeological remains, no church, no dogma, no founder, and virtually no history, forms the cannon of the Hindu scriptures, the core of which is a collection of over a thousand hymns, more than ten thousand stanzas in all, known as the Ṛgveda."

To we, the Indians, the authority of the Veda is supreme and final. The Veda was given to man at the earliest stage, when the biological species was sufficiently evolved to receive the divine inspiration. The Veda became the fountain-head of the subsequent knowledge that followed, and it continued to inspire human literature for milleniums of years. In India, the most ancient human literature that we possess now is that of the books known as the Brahmanas, but they were also written thousands of years after the divine revelation. These Brahmanas, all without exception, accept the authority of the Veda. The systems of thought which admit of the validity of the Veda are called the astika (theist), and those which repudiate it the nastika (atheist). To an Indian, the term theism has a deep and wide connotation ; a theist is one that not only believes in the existence of the Supreme Self, but who accepts the same Supreme Self as the first cause of the creation, sustenance and the dissolution of universe, and the source of divine knowledge (cf. Janmadyasya yatah, जन्माद्यस्य यत: and Sastra yonitvat, शास्त्रयोनित्वात् -Vedanta Sutras I.1.2-3). And thus the astika or nastika character of a system does not depend on its positive or negative conclusions regarding the nature of the Supreme Spirit, but also on the acceptance and non-acceptance of the authority of the Veda. And again, the acceptance of the Veda is a practical admission that spiritual experience is a greater light in the fundamental matters than intellectual approach. The Vedic concepts were further elaborated in the text of the Upanisads and in the six systems of Indian philosophy: (i) the Vaisesika of Kanada, (ii) the Nyaya of Gotama, (iii) the Samkhya of Kapila, (iv) the Yoga of Patanjali; (v) the Purva-Mimamsa of Jaimini, and (vi) the Uttara-Mimamsa of Badarayana Vyasa. All these systems accept the authority of the revealed knowledge.

One would naturally like to know about the contents of the Veda, and whenever a question of this type is advanced, one has in his mind the picture of the present day books and treatises of different disciplines, characterized and classified, categorized, systematized and elaborated on certain patterns. The Veda considerably differs in this respect from all such literature. The Veda is a sruti and not a sastra : a sastra is a text of systematized knowledge with a set scientific terminology. The sruti has the potentiality of becoming the source of a sastra, but by itself it is not the sastra. The sruti has the plasticity of the material of a perfect form which could, if so desired, be moulded into a sastra. And thus, for understanding the nature of the sruti, the ancient Indian seers evolved regular systems of discipline known as the vedangas, (the limbs of the Veda) and the upa-vedas (the Sub-Vedas). The vedangas are (i) the siksa (orthography), (ii) the vyakarana (the grammar), (iii) the nighantu (lexicon), (iv) jyotis (astronomy), (v) chanda (prosody), and (vi) kalpa (the system of rituals and ceremonies). The four upavedas are (i) the ayurveda (the system of medicine and cures), (ii) the gandharva-veda (the system of aesthetics), (iii) dhanurveda (the system of defence sciences), and (iv) arthaveda (the system of economics and wealth—its production, distribution and utilization).

The contents of the Veda may, for the purposes of simplicity, be classified under three broad headings : the jnana, or knowledge ; the karma or the code of actions or conduct, and the upasana or coming into the proximity of the Supreme Self, or the spiritual realization. The word ṛk stands for knowledge, the yajuh stands for karma or actions, the duties, and the sama stands for love of God or devotion and dedication. But this does not mean that the Ṛk-Samhita exclusively deals with the subject of spiritual and mundane knowledge; the Yajuh-Samhita deals with the karma-kanda, or the code of conduct (much more the code of ceremonies) ; and the Sama Samhita deals with prayers and chants. There is no rigidity as to the type of classification. In all the four Samhitas, we have the subject matter pertaining to all the three categories enumerated above. The Vedas were not revealed primarily or entirely for the purposes of performing ceremonies and conducting rituals. The Vedic texts have deeper meanings for life and in the most natural language, these texts tried to cover almost all phases of human activity, its purposefulness and attainments. The Vedas do not accept the demarcation between the empirical, ephimeral or mundane world, and the world of Absolute Reality, transcendence and spiritual existence. Whatever is born, movable or immovable, changing and changeless,—the whole of it is isavasya (ईशावास्य), or pervaded by the Supreme Reality and is charged with the existence of the Highest Self. The entire creation exists within Him, and in His extensions. He is far beyond the creation (the vast universe is only a quarter of His, as if).

Lord, the Creator

The Veda has come down to us as an inspiration to the terrestrial man, who alone on this earth, amongst the thousands of species, is worthy of the supreme type of revelation. The solid abode of man, the small planet of his activity is the earth or the pṛthivi, also known as bhumi, and the entire cosmos, to the furthest and farthest ends that he could see with his naked and aided eyes is the realm of effulgence, full of stars and galaxies, the dyau, the heaven or the sky ; and the interspace is, of course, the antariksa (Ṛv.X.121.5) in which clouds move and the lightning thunders. Dyava-pṛthivi (Ṛv. 1.35.9) heaven to earth is also known as rodasi (Ṛv. 1.36.8). There is a realm beyond the realm of effulgence, another realm beyond the visibility, a realm of blissfulness, known as the svarloka, or svah, a realm far-spreading beyond the expanding universe.

Our Lord, He alone, is the originator or creator of this universe (creator, not in the Biblical sense, where the universe has come out of nothing ; the Vedic philosophy is a concept of co-existence of the two eternals, God the creator and the primordial matter or the prakṛti, the multidimensional canvas for the supreme artist for His divine art). He alone is sustaining the cosmos fanning, aspiring and inspiring as if by His two wings.[1] In His supremacy over the universe, He is one and one alone.[2] He alone is the giver of treasures to the bounteous men.[3]

He alone is worth our worship and adoration (namasya).[4] He is, verily, one ; may we know Him as one pervading and circumscribing.[5] He is not assisted in his supremacy by any one second, third or fourth, nor by any fifth, sixth or seventh, nor even by any eighth, ninth or tenth. He is the one, circumscribing, the one alone, this one ought to know.[6] All the Nature's bounties merge out and become one in Him alone ?[7]

God is One Though Variously Described

God, verily, is one, though variously described since the functions are manifold and His divine attributes many.

Compared to Him, we, the tiny little selves, are infinitesimals whilst He is Infinity in all positive parameters. To this divine one, the man, in the words of the Vedic texts, offers invocations in various adjectivals and adverbials, according to His attributes and functions. So often, we prefer to call Him agni, the foremost adorable, sometimes indra, the most resplendent, sometimes varuna, or the most venerable, sometimes as aryaman, the supreme law-giver; He alone is the divine virility and vitality in us, and is therefore, known as rudra ; He verily, is the savitṛ since everything is born of Him ; He is divya, or effulgent; He is the law-abider, and hence is known as yama; He alone is the measure and a benevolent friend to us, and hence, His name is mitra ; He is the supreme Lord and therefore bṛahaspati and brahman; He pervades the entire universe and hence He is visnu ; He is blissful and hence known as soma, and on account of His benevolence and kindness, He is called siva , sankara and mayaskara. The Veda stands for the purest type of monotheism. Here we have a few texts to corroborate this concept.

1. God alone is one, though known as agni, king varuna, mitra, aryaman, or amsa.[1]

2. God is also known as agni, rudra, mahah asura, (ahur mazda) and pusan.[2]

3. God is agni, dravinoda (the giver of wealth), deva, savitṛ, ratnadha (the store of gems) bhaga (effulgent), and nṛpati (Lord of men).[3]

4. He is one, though seers call Him with various names, such as indra, mitra, varuna, agni, divya, suparna,

Cosmic Form of the Creator

Though our Lord exists even far beyond the limits of this extensive universe, the entire universe has been metaphorically regarded as the cosmic form of our Lord, and this form has been variously described in the Veda. He creates the universe (dyava-pṛthivi) and the universe assumes His form;[3] He weaves the entire universe through His divine thread (tantu) of unified law.[4] The entire universe is sustained by great principle (mahi praniti), and protected by undecaying devices of protection (uti).[5] The Atharvaveda devotes an entire extensive hymn, the "Skambha Sukta", to the cosmic creation, and the divine laws that sustain it in a marvellous way. (Av X. 7.1-44) Our Lord is the skambha or the divine support of the entire creation consisting of the terrestrial region, the celestial region and the interspace. He alone balances the entire creation and holds in equilibrium the six dimensions of space.[6] The creation has been compared to the weaving of a cosmic cloth with divine woofs and warps, shuttles and pegs, the art of two divine maidens (day and night) working incessantly in the parameters of space and time.[1]

Our creator has also been called the Final Reality or "ucchista" (ut-sista) for when nothing exists at the time of final great dissolution (maha pralaya) and the creation passes into the primordial matter, devoid of name and form, then the Supreme Self alone persists (since He is not subject to change, decay or death). In the ucchista Brahman is sustained everything, even the Ṛk, Yajuh, Sama, Udgitha, Hinkara,Svara and Saman rhythms and rhymes (samnah medih).[2] Ucchista is the name of great Brahman, since He is the undecaying self; in this ucchista is sustained the entire universe, the heaven and earth, the water, oceans, wind and moon.[3] In the ucchista is sustained the entire creation consisting of name and form.[4] This ucchista is the progenitor of all; He is the father and grandfather,[5] and He is equally the sustainer of the inorganic and organic world, of clouds, lightning and rains.[6] Everything is reborn from Him after the dissolution, the disciplines of divine knowledge, the sense organs, the vital realm, the blissful realm, and all categories of human beings[7] (Av. XI.7.24-27).

We have said that this cosmos is figuratively regarded as the form of our Lord, the Prajapati, the sustainer of everything that He has created. Man would understand Him better, if He is metaphorically described as if He is possessing a body similar to that of a man, or any other creature of our familiarity. But He is very much different from a human form. Man has two eyes, one mouth, two arms and two legs. This Supreme Lord of ours, has, however, innumerable eyes, for there is no direction in which He cannot see and similarly He possesses thousands of mouths all round, thousands of arms and thousands of legs, since everything in this creation is within His reach.[1]

The Atharva Veda (hymns 7,8 of Book X) describes the Jyestha Brahman (the Supreme Lord) and the Sarvadhara (all support) in the cosmic form,[2] the sun and moon being His eyes, the cosmic winds as His vital breath, the celestial region as the head, the mid-space as His belly, the earth as His feet. The same metaphor in another form is expressed in the Purusa Sukta[3] :

The moon was gendered from His mind, and from His eye the sun had birth ;

Electricity and fire (indra and agni) from His mouth

The Atharvaveda abounds in such metaphors, e.g. for God's Glory, brahma-prakasanam, see Parsni Sukta (Av. X. 2).

Creation

One is inquisitive to know how the world has been created, and the philosophers and scientists from time to time, have tried to answer this question in their own way. The world in which we live has a reality, and our existence in the body along which we are born, and which to a small extent is our bondage too, has a reality and purposefulness. The entire creation has a purpose. The creation itself is not simple; it is a creation in multiparameters. In the dimensions of space and time, we have the sun, the moon, the planets, the galaxies with clusters of stars and wonders of the celestial region. On our planet, we have mountains, rivers, oceans, clouds, the solid crust of the earth, the blowing winds and what not. Then again, on this earth, we have plants, shrubs, tall trees, grass, the organic life in the sea, on the earth and in the mid-regions, from the unicellular life to the highly evolved mammals including man. In the complex that we call man, we have an exterior comprising of bones, skin, muscles, fibres, nerves, veins and arteries, secreting glands, the circulatory system of blood, lungs, kidneys, intestines and the fluids of brain. And within this exterior, we have a complex vital system, the breathing system, the motives, which in Indian terminology is known as variously functioning pranas, which dynamize the human machinery. Beyond the realm of the pranas, we have a much more complex region of mental activity,—astounding behaviours of mind, and beyond it,we are told, there is another complex, the transcendental spiritual complex, the domain of the tiny little self,—the jnanamaya kosa and the anandamaya kosa. As we proceed on from our externalmost sheath, the annamaya kosa, to the innermost sheaths of jnanamaya and anandamaya kosas, the complexity increases, and much more intricate is the mutual relationship of these sheaths,—the innerlinks, the interactions. All this is meant for our sake, the tiny little bit known as the lower self, the spirit in bondage, the atman or the soul, that enters the body and then leaves the body to be born again and again, till it attains its emancipation and temporarily lives in the state of bliss in the closest proximity of our Lord, as if, one privileged of belonging to the family of the Master, free from fetters of various sorts.

The creation is the divine art of our Lord, carved on the canvas of prakṛti, the primordial matter, devoid of any name or form, devoid of all attributes, and yet having an eternal existence, (co-existing with our Lord since eternity) with the potential material causality as its only characteristic. It is real in this sense, real in its intrinsic existence, real as the canvas for the divine art in multiple dimensions, but unreal, as if non-existing in the sense, that it is non-manifested, is devoid of name and form ; it is again neither satva, nor rajas, nor tamas, but an equipoise of all the three, with the potentiality that when tickled by the Great Artist, satva (ṛta-satya), tamas, rajas all get manifested. God alone knows how He works out this mysterious canvas. His art is beyond our comprehension; it is only when fully manifested that we become conscious of it. We, with all our limitations and difficulty get a glimpse of this great art, and man from the earliest stages of civilization to this day has been striving to know something of the working of the great artist.

The Veda has at several places given an indication of this creation. We shall refer to a few hymns here. We shall first take up the Hiranyagarbha Hymn (Ṛv. X. 121) —the mighty creator is known as Hiranyagarbha, the source of golden light, the Lord of divine effulgence.

1. In the beginning, there existed the Lord of divine effulgence ; He was the sole Lord of all created beings. He fixed and held up this earth and heaven. To that Lord alone, may we offer our adorations.

3. Who by His grandeur has become sole ruler of all the moving world that breathes and slumbers; He who is Lord of men and Lord of cattle; to that Lord alone, may we offer our adorations.

4. His, through his might, are these snow-covered mountains, and men call sea and rasa (रसा) His possession. His arms are these heavenly regions. To that Lord alone, may we offer our adorations.

5. By Him, the heavens are strong and the earth is steadfast; by Him light's realm and sky-vault are supported; By Him the regions in mid-air are measured. To that Lord alone, may we offer our adorations.

6. To Him, supported by His help, two armies embattled look while trembling in their spirit, when over them, the risen Sun is shining. To that Lord alone, may we offer our adorations.

7. What time the mighty waters come, containing the universal germ, producing agni (fire), thence sprang the God's one spirit into being. To that Lord alone, may we offer our adorations.

8. He in His might surveyed the floods containing productive force and generating worship. He is the God of gods, and none beside Him. To that Lord alone, may we offer our adorations.[1] (Ṛv. X. 121. 1, 3-8)

(Ṛv. X. 121. 1, 3-8)

We have in the Ṛgveda another Hymn (X. 190) devoted to creation, which runs like this :

1. From tapas (fervour, the tickling of rajas) kindled to its height, Eternal Law (ṛta) and Truth (satya) (the satva) were born. Thence was the night (ratri, the tamas) produced, and thence the billowy flood of sea (samudra-arnava, the ocean of cosmic intelligence, mahat-tattva) arose.

2. From that ocean of cosmic intelligence, the year (the time parameter) was afterwards produced, ordainer of days and nights, Lord over all who close the eye.

3. Dhata, the great creator, then formed in due order, as in previous creations, sun and moon. He formed, as usual celestial heaven and earth, the regions of the air and the svar regions beyond.[1]

The description of creation would remain incomplete without a reference to the famous Nasadiya Sukta of the Ṛgveda (X. 129). We are giving here Griffith's translation of this hymn.

1. There was not non-existent (asat) nor existent (sat) ; there was no realm of air, no sky beyond it, what covered in, and where ? and what gave shelter ? Was. water (ocean of cosmic intelligence, salila) there, unfathomed depth of water ?

2. Death was not then, nor was there aught immortal; no sign was there, the day's and night's divider. That One-Thing, breathless, breathed by its own nature (svadhaya); apart from it was nothing whatsoever.

1. ऋतं च सत्यं चाभीद्धात्०; समुद्रादर्णवादधि०;

3. Darkness (tamas) there was; at first concealed in darkness this All (sarvam dam) was indiscriminated chaos (plasma, apraketam salilam). All that existed then was void and formless: By the great power of warmth (tapasah mahina) was born that unit (tat ekam).

4. Thereafter rose desire (kama) in the beginning, Desire, the primal seed and germ of spirit (prathamam retah). Sages who searched with their heart's thought discovered the existent's kinship (satobandhum) in the non-existent (asati).

5. Transversely their severing line extended; what was above it then; and what below it ? There were begetters, there were mighty forces, free action (svadha) here and energy (prayati) up yonder.

6. Who, verily, knows and who can here declare it, whence it was born and whence comes this creation ? The gods (Nature's bounties, devah) are later than this world's production, who knows then whence it first came into being.

7. He is the first origin of this creation, whether He formed it all or did not form it. Whose eye controls this world in the highest heaven (parame vyoman), he verily knows it, or perhaps he knows not !![1]

The technical terms in the above hymn may have multiple interpretations, but the poetry of the hymn is as superb and touching as the depth of its philosophy.

Very often, the Veda talks of a creation of a different type. Creation is our Lord's Sacrifice, a great yajna in which He is primarily involved. There are no limits of

1. नासदासीन्नो०; न मृत्युरासीद०; तम आसीत् तमसा०; कामस्तदग्रे०; तिरश्चीनो०; को अद्धा वेद; इयं विसृष्टिर्यत० । (Ṛv. X. 129. 1-7)

this yajna; it is spread far and wide and beyond dimensions. The text says :

1. The sacrifice drawn out with threads on everyside, stretched by a hundred sacred ministers and one. This do these fathers weave who hitherward are come; they sit beside the warp and cry, "Weave forth, weave back".

2. The man extends it and the man unbinds it; even to this vault of heaven, hath he outspun it.

These pegs are fastened to the seat of worship ; they made the Sama-hymns their weaving shuttles.[1] (Ṛv. X. 130. 1-2)

In the ecstasy of description the text refers to the gayatri, usnik, anuśtup, bṛhati, viraj, tristup and jagati, the well known metres (Ṛv. 130. 4-5) and conjoins them with agni, savitar, soma, bṛhaspati, varuna and mitra, indra, and visvedevah. The cosmic creation was thus conjoined with cosmic worship, and "by this knowledege, men were raised to the highest sublime position of ṛsis."[2] (Ṛv. X.130. 4-6). My Lord is a great weaver and He incessantly weaves with profoundest care and skill.

Family of Three Eternals

Ours is a Holy Trinity, the family of three eternals : the Infinite Supreme Self (the Father) (ii) the eternal primal matter, the Prakṛti (the Mother) and (iii) the numberless infinitesimal selfs (the sons). All the three of us are of the same age, and in this sense, He, the Supreme Self, though our Father, is not so in the biological sense, and similarly, the causal primal matter our mother, but again, not in the biological sense. All the three of us, the father, sons and the mother, are of the same age, and shall continue to exist for ever. None is born and none would die.

Our infinitesimality in all parameters (but of age) imposes certain limitations on us, the souls, the lower selfs ; like the tiny little sparks, we shine in our glory, but to a limited extent. This infinitesimality extends over the dimensions of our capacity to know, capacity to do, and capacity to enjoy. The Supreme Self is infinite in these three parameters, as in so many others. Our inherent infinitesimality in these three demensions incapacitates us to acquire true knowledge, with the result that we do what we ought not to do, and then suffer its consequences. This finally manifests in what we call sin, papa or enas (एनस्) in the Vedic terminology. All of us, who are born with mortal fetters, are prey to this sin. God alone is free from sins since He is perfect, and infinite. He does not assume the body form; He is not incarnated. The last chapter of the Yajurveda describes Him thus :

> He, the Lord, effulgent, without a body, free from wounds and sinews, ever pure and very much above the sins, has been circumscribing us from all the sides. He is the one with penetrating wisdom (a superb poet), intelligence personified, extending in all parameters, self-existing, and judiciously just as much and as it ought to be, He creates commodities (of knowledge and wealth) for His ever-existing people[1]. (Yv. XL. 8)

Here the Trinity is of (i) sah svayambhu, the Lord, self-existing, (ii) sasvatibhyah samabhyah, the innumerable ever-existing people (the lower selfs); (iii) arthan, the matter moulded into the commodities, necessary for the sustenance of people.

The idea of Trinity is equally clear elsewhere in the Ṛgveda and is expressed as follows :

> There are two birds with beautiful wings, related to each other (of the same age) perching on one and the same tree. The one of the two enjoys the taste of the fruit of the tree, whilst the other watches with care the former one, He Himself abstaining from eating (Rv. I. 164. 20)[1].

The tree consists of Prakrti and Prakṛti-born products, and the two birds are the lower self and the Supreme Self.

The same hymn further says :

> There are three fundamentals (kesinah). The first one inseminates seedings in the time-parameter. The second one with its inquisitiveness looks at the creation from all the sides. The third one is such whose manifestations are visible but not her actual form.[2] (Ṛv. I. 164.44) .

Sin, Bondage and Cycle of Rebirths

One of the greatest contributions of Indian thought is the concept of eschatology, the doctrine of rebirths or reincarnations. The self itself is eternal; it neither dies nor decays, whilst it passes on through a cycle of births and deaths, and another wider cycle of bondage and emancipation. One who is born must die some day, and one that dies is born again, and thus the continuity of life is maintained. Hundred autumns or hundred winters is the expected age of a man (not so of other species). Of course, very few live to this age, and still less who would go beyond a century. There are a number of Vedic verses, which clearly indicate that one could live hundred terrestrial years (year as the duration of a revolution of the planet earth round the Sun).

> The sun, the effulgent representative eye of Nature's bounties has already come up. May we see for hundred autumns, live for hundred autumns, speak for hundred autumns, may we live hale and hearty, depending on none, for hundred years, and even beyond one hundred.[1] (Ṛv. VII. 66. 16; Yv. XXXVI. 24)

The same idea has been expressed in a series of fragmentary verses of the Atharva-veda[2] (Av. XIX. 67.1-8). May we all see, live, continue to be enlightened, continue to grow, continue to be sustained, continue to prosper, and continue to develop for full one hundred years, and even beyond one hundred.

By leading a careful and carefree dedicated life, following the disciplines of health, hygiene and ethics, one can go up to a full term of life. Sin is our greatest handicap in leading a full life. The Veda uses four terms for sin : papa, amhas, enas, and agha. The papa is the sin of mind; our thoughts are breeding place of sin, and hence we are told to get rid of the sin of mind : O sin of thoughts (of mind), may you go away from us[3] (Av. VI. 45. 15). The Atharva-veda in Book IV, has a number of hymns (e. g. 23-29) for getting rid of sin.[4] There is a full hymn in the Ṛgveda (I.97) where the line repeated is "may we get rid of our agha or sins".[1] God alone would help us in getting across the sin as one on a boat.[2] God alone knows our actions, good or bad, and hence he can lead us on the path of righteousness; we shall have to struggle constantly with our crooked sins; to that Lord of ours, our most respectful regards and reverences.[3]

God alone is our atonement for the sins committed by the enlightened men of our society (devakṛta); for the sins committed by ordinary men (manusyakṛta), also for the sins committed by our elders in the society (pitṛkṛta); He is our atonement for sins committed by self, also from our sins of sins, consciously or unconsicously committed both, for the sins that may be small or great, for all of them.[4] (Yv. VIII 13).

Of course, one shall have to struggle against his sins, and against the sins committed by others in the society in which he has been placed; one has to be prepared to face the consequences with a determined will, but the sin shall not be extricated away till He comes to our rescue. In our determined efforts to put up a fight against ignorance, evils and weaknesses, He is guide and, strength, He is our vratapa or vratapati (the sustainer in our determined efforts).[5] God is for this reason our ultimate shelter and the final resort (upayamagṛhitosi), and is our final atone-

Sins are not excused by our Lord, but He gives us strength to struggle against the consequences; this struggle itself is the atonement. Sins lead to bondage, and through bondage alone is our atonement and liberation thereafter. The sin is inherent in us in our own infinitesimality, and the cycle of life and death is its atnoement. It appears to be a cruel punishment, but ultimately it is its own reward and one of greatest blessings from the side of our Lord. And there is no escape from it either. Bondage is apparently a tragedy, but effectively it becomes a remedy for the malady and finally a bliss and reward. Sin leads to a cycle of bondages, and bondages to liberation. This is the puposefulness of life.

If not going to be liberated so soon, may we then request for the new and fresh life, a renovated body :

> O Asuniti, the Lord of Death, give us our sight again; give us again our breath and our enjoyment. Long may we look upon the sun uprising. O Anumati, the Gracious Lord, may you favour and bless us.[2] (Ṛv. X.59.6)

We have similar lines in the Yajur-veda, with a prayer for the next body.The old shattered body is of not much use to us now, and hence here is an invocation for a new birth for fresh attainments and atonements :

> Again the mind, again the full age, again the breath, and again the self-possession, may we obtain. Again the eye, again the ear, may we get. The cosmic Lord, devoid of evils, the sustainer of our bodies, the adorable, may He protect us from all unwanted evils.[1] (Yv. IV. 15)

The Atharva-veda is again very clear on the subject of rebirths :

> One, who in the first (life) does actions unto dharma or righteous dictates, on that account he obtains good bodies in the (subsequent) life. That soul, after leaving the first, enters into the (next) yoni or womb. There having been blessed with true divine speech, he enjoys.[2] (Av. V. 1. 2.)

Professor R. D. Ranade refers to a hymn of the Ṛgveda in connection with eschatology. He says : "We have one very characteristic hymn of the Ṛgveda which, we fear, has not been noticed with even a tithe of the attention which it really deserves. The meaning which Roth, Böhtlingk and Geldner have found in at least two verses of hymn has been strangely overlooked, and it is wonderful that people keep saying that the idea of transmigration is not found in the Ṛgveda. The hymn we refer to is the great riddle hymn of the Ṛgveda (Asya Vamasya Sukta, Ṛv. I. 164)." (A Constructive Survey of the Upanishadic Philosophy, p. 147). The verses referred to are 30th and 38th and we can include the 14th and 31st also of the hymn.[3]

   (Ṛv. I. 164. 4, 30, 31, 38)

The earlier verse (4) puts forward a riddle, "who has ever seen the precise mode in which boneless soul, the very life-blood and informing spirit of the earth, comes to inhabit a body tenement?" On this the text says categorically that this breathing, speedful, moving life-principle is firmly established inside the tenements of clay (30). Moreover, he tells us that the immortal principle, conjoined with the mortal one, moves backwards and forwards by virtue of its natural power (the intrinsic potentiality—svadha), but the wonder of it is, the text goes on to say, that the mortal and immortal elements keep moving ceaselessly in opposite directions, with the result that people are able to see the one, but unable to see the other.

In fact, the two verses (30 and 38) were referred to by Roth, Bohtlingk and Geldner as against Oldenberg who held that there is no mention of eschatology in the Ṛgveda. Roth and others are right in regarding that the verses tell us that the soul is moving, speedful life-principle which comes and goes, moves backwards, comes in contact with the body and then moves from it in the opposite direction. Sayana also refers this verse (38) to eschatology.[1]

The infinitesimal soul with almost zero spatial dimensions is bound to the ever-growing body since conception. The body grows whilst the soul maintains its infinitesimality. Seated in a cavity, somewhere at the centre of receptive and directing communications, it functions in a most wonderful way, difficult to comprehend. What binds it to the body is a mystery. This binding force in the Vedic terminology is expressed by the term "varunapasa" (noose of King Varuna, the Law abider Lord, that presides over the destiny of all the mortals). The Ṛgvedic text (I. 24.6-15) refers to King Varuna and His three types of pasas (nooses),—the highest category (uttama), of the lowest category (adhama) and of the middle category (madhyama),[1]—the noose of the first type leads the soul to acquire the supreme virtue; this has to be tightened up (ut); the noose of the lowest category has to be thrown down (ava) and the one of the middle category has to be half-way loosened (visrathaya).[1]

Varuna-pasa is not a kind of dropsy as Wilson or Griffith refers to. Varuna presides over the destiny of mortals. He alone knows what is best in our interests. He provides us with the fetters of body, house of clay as if, and He alone guides us through the process of liberation. We crave for the mercy and His mercy alone.

1. Let me not yet, King Varuna, enter into the house of clay ; have mercy, spare me, mighty Lord.

Varuna, the law-abider Lord, discovers our untruth and helps us in getting rid of it also[2] (Ṛv. VII .28.4). We have again a text :

> While we abide in these fixed habitations, and from the lap of Aditi (Lord the Infinity) win favour, may Varuna untie the bond that binds us ; may you all preserve us ever more with blessings.[3]

Man and His Kinship

The doctrine of eschatology or of re-incarnation establishes a kinship between the far wide-spread organic species, from tiny insects to gigantic paleontological wild life, not by the way of biological heredity but another type of our own heredity, the life history which we all of us individually had in our previous lives. Our life, that we lead today has, of course, the biological heredity of our parents, forefathers etc. with definite ancestoral characteristics repeated in the series. (Negro's children continue to be Negro ; very often the parental diseases pass on to the posterity). But then in addition, my present life also depends on what I was in my previous life, and the lives that preceded that one. This is another heredity which cannot be denied. Our present life is a resultant of all these histories.

This metaphysical background of the universal kinship justifies the interest taken by the Vedic texts whilst referring to the vast fauna which surrounds the terrestrial man. He is not born alone on this earth ; there are thousands of species like his one on this globe. Life is not only on this globe; there are thousands of galaxies in the universe, and nobody knows how many of them would be having favourable conditions of temperature, pressure, humidity and environments favourable for the existence of life of the terrestrial form (or some other form even).

The Vedic texts very frequently refer to the animal life. The animal is pasu (the perceiving creature, one with some sorts of organs of perception). These terrestrial creatures are usually classified under three heads : gramya or cattle, Aranya (आरण्य) or wild, and vayavya (of the midspace, or of air, i.e. such as can fly). There is equally rich sea-life, or the entire life that flourishes under water.

The Yajurveda devotes an entire chapter (Twenty-fourth) on the selected animal life, classified in its own way and devoted to various deities : Prajapati, Agni, Sarasvati, Asvins (twins), Soma-Pusan, Surya-yama, Tvastṛ, Vayu, Indra, visnu (1) ; to Soma, Varuna, Savitṛ, Bṛhaspati and Mitra-Varuna (2) ; to Asvins, Rudra-Pasupati, Yama, Rudra and Parjanya (3) ; to Marut, Sarasvati, Tvastṛ, Indra-Agni, Usas; (4) to Visvedevah, Vak, Aditi, Dhatṛ and Devapatni (5); to Agni, Vasu, Rudra, Adityas and Parjanya (6) ; to Indra-Visnu, Indra-Bṛhaspati, Agni-Maruts and Pusan (7) ; to Indra-Agni, Agni-Soma, Agni-Visnu, Mitra-Varuna (8) ; to Agni, Soma, Vayu, Aditi and Dava-patni (9) ; to Bhumi, Antariksa, Divi, Vidyut and Taraka (10) ; to Vasanta, Grisma, Varsa, Sarad, Hemanta and Sisira (11) ; to Gayatri, Tristubh, Jagati, Anustup and Usnik (12) ; to Viraja, Bṛhati, Kakubh, Pankti and Ati-Chandas (13), and the description goes on in this strain over 40 verses, with a list of six hundred and nine animals (327 domestic+282 wild). It starts with asva (horse) ; tupara (hornless goat) gomṛga (gayal), and ends with khadga (rhinoceros), sva kṛsnah (black dog), gardabha (ass or donkey), taraksu (hyena), sukara (boar), simha, (lion), kṛkalasa (chameleon), pippaka, (vulture) and pṛsata (spotted antelope). In the list we have creatures like mosquito and black-bee, and big animals like buffalo, lion, elephant and camel, and the list includes aquatic life too. The society, inspired with the Vedic culture, was very much fond of animal life, wild, marine and domestic, and it used to have public display of this life on sacred occasions (animal-museums, zoo-fairs, and wild life preserves).

The references to the animals, domestic and wild, destructive and serviceable, occur in the Ṛgveda also. An entire hymn (I.191) is devoted to this subject; it not only refers to scorpions and snakes but also to tiny little insects and pests which are damaging to human culture, and which are fortunately destroyed on exposure to solar radiations. Such creatures, visible or invisible, are known as raksas and yatudhanas, and they flourish in darkness, particularly in damp places. Human society has to put up a fight against such creatures if it has to survive. Here is a poetic description for a devastating campaign against these malignant creatures:

> The fiend, O Agni, who designs to injure the essence of our food, kine, steeds and bodies, may he, the adversary, thief and robber, sink to destruction, both himself and offspring.[1] (10)

> The prudent finds it easy to distinguish the true (friendly to mankind) and false (enemy to our interests); their words oppose each other. Of these two that which is true and honest, soma protects, and brings the false to nothing.[2] (12)

> Destroy the fiend shaped like an owl or owlet, destroy him in the form of dog or cuckoo, destroy him shaped as eagle or as vultures; as with a stone, Indra, crush the demon[1] (22) (Ṛv VII. 104).

This is a wonderful hymn with double meanings. On the metaphysical and spiritual plane, it refers to the destruction of whatever is evil, untruth or false and to support all that is good, true and virtuous. On the other hand, it is an attack on those people also who possess fiend-like characteristics of owl, dog, eagle or vultures and who cause a damage to the peaceful and god-loving society. It also refers to the eradication of those creatures, small or big, which spread diseases and cause the destruction of human society. For this, see Krimi-jambhanam and Kriminasanam Suktas of the Atharvaveda (Av. II, Suktas 31 and 32; also IV. 38; V. 23).

> May our Lord eradicate all the suicidal germs and pests in society, from our hilly tracts, forests, plants, from water and the parasites from our cattle and from our own bodies[2] (Av. II. 31. 5).

The Vedic culture refers to man in his family,—the man as a social being. He is not an individual; he has to play a very important role as a component of the society, the state and the fraternity. Man's family not only includes men, but a few demesticated creatures also, known as gramya-pasu or cattle with the total five. The five cattle are : asva (horse), go (cow) , aja (goat), avi (ewe) and manusya (man) :

> From the yajna or cosmic sacrifice were produced curds and butter. From the same were born animals of three categories: (i) vayavya (flying animals of midspace), (ii) gramya (cattle or domesticated), and (iii) aranya (wild)[3] (Ṛv. X. 90. 8).

> From the same were produced animls having two rows of teeth: horse, cow, goat and sheep[1] (Ṛv. X. 90. 10).

From the cosmic yajna were born men, who were classified into four categories : the brahmanas (the intellectuals who constitute the head of the society); the ksattriyas (the warriors or people of defence, who represent the arms of the society); the vaisyas (businessmen, agriculturists, people of commerce, who represent the thighs of the society) and finally, the sudras (labour class, which represents the feet of the society)[2] (Rv. X. 90. 12).

In some of the texts, the word cattle is not confined to the four animals, horse, cow, sheep and goat (besides man himself), a few more animals have been added to the list like camel, elephant, dog or donkey. They constitute the human family, and deserve kindness, care, protection and affection. The Atharvaveda deals with a "Pasu-Samvardhana Sukta" (Av. II. 26) for animal husbandry.[3]

> Hither let the cattle come that went away, whose companionship, vayu (the wind) enjoyed; whose form- givings tvastṛ knows; in this cow-stall let savitṛ make them fast. (1)
> Together, together let cattle flow, together horses and together men, together the fatness that is of grain; I offer with an oblation of confluence. (3) (Av. II. 26. 1, 3)

A special hymn of the Atharvaveda (II.34) hints at bipeds (dvipadas) and quadrupeds (catuspda) cattle[1] (Av. II. 34.1). All these gramya (domesticated) cattle deserve our care and attention[2] (Av. II, 34.4). We have a reference to land animals (parthivah), celestial (divyah), wild (aranyah), domesticated (gramyah), without wings (apaksah), and with wings or birds (paksinah).[3]

The Atharvaveda gives a detailed account of creatures and insects which are damaging to human society and to cattle and which deserve to be taken care of (see Av.XI.10) We give here the translation of some verses from Griffith for casual reference :[4]

> Let those who hear an evil name, in air, in heaven, on earth, and men,
> After trisandhi's will, revere your power, the sway that knowledge gives, together with your ruddy flags. (2)

> Let beasts of prey and flies attack, and vultures that eat raw flesh mangle and gnaw the carcase. (8) (Av.XI.10.8).

The Bhumi Sukta (hymn pertaining to mother Earth), of the Atharvaveda has also a reference to serpents, scorpions and wild animals like boar, lions, tigers, wolves etc.

> Thy snake. thy sharply stinging scorpion, lying concealed, bewildered, chilled with cold winter,
> The worm, O pṛthivi, each thing that in the rains revives and stirs,
> Creeping, forbear to creep on us ! with all things gracious bless thou us. (46)
> Supporting both the foolish and weighty, she bears the death of the good and evil.
> In friendly concord with the boar, Earth opens herself for the wild swine that roams the forest. (48)
> All sylvan beasts of thine, that love the woodlands, man-eaters, forest-hunting, lions, tigers,

Hyena, wolf, misfortune, ill-things, drive from us, chase the demons to a distance.[1] (49)

Similarly, in the verse 51, we have a reference to the winged bipeds, birds, swans and eagles.[2]

Flora and Medicinal Herbs

Just as the Veda speaks in details about the wide-spread fauna on the terrestrial region of God's creation, so it speaks of flora also. Lord Himself is vanaspati, the Master of Forests, and plants are also known as vanaspati (Av. III.8) and He has created tall forest trees, virudha and vṛksa, osadhi, the medicinal herbs,[3] which sustain our life, is, the food grains, vajam, the cereals, lata, the creepers, the fruit trees and non-fruit bearing trees. There is a full Osadhi hymn, in the Ṛgveda, which describes herbs, known as asvavati, somavati, urjayanti, herbs bearing flowers and fruit, and such herbs also as do not bear them.[4] (Ṛv.X.97 ; also Yv. XII.74-101).

The Atharvaveda refers to several cures with medicinal herbs and otherwise also. The cure for bleeding or haemorrhage has been suggested in Av. II. 3. Water itself is a cure in several maladies (Av. I. 4-6; III. 13; VI. 23, 24; VI.57). For apamarga (अपामार्ग), see Av. IV.17-19; for pippali (पिप्पली), Av. VI.109; for madhula (मधुला), Av. V. 15.5; for pata (पाटा) Av. II. 27. 4. The medicinal herb, prsniparni (पृश्निपर्णी) has been described in Av. II. 25.

The hazard of tuberculosis (yaksma) has been described in several hymns (Av. I. 12; II.33; III. 7, 31; VI. 20, 85, 91, 127; XII. 2; XVII. 23; XIX. 38; XX. 96).

Laksa (lac) has been described in Av. V. 5.

Rtajata (ऋतजाता), rtavari (ऋतावरी), and madhula (particularly madhula) may also be medicinal herbs (Av. V. 15. 1.). In connection with an eye-treatment (aksi-roga, AV. VI. 16), a reference is made to abayu (आबयु), anabayu and its karambha or extract or mixture. Vihahla (विहह्ल) is said to be the father of abayu and his mother is madavati (मदावती). There are certain terms of uncertainty; they may or may not represent diseases; tauvilika (तौविलिका) is the name of an infection, producing certain diseases; nirala (निराल) is also a disease. In connection with these ailments, mention has been made of alsala (अलसाला), silanjala (सिलांजाला) and nilagalasala (नीलागलसाला), which may be grain creepers (Av. VI. 16. 1-4). The veda also mentions a cure for the growth of hair (keshvardhini); rewati (Av. VI. 21. 3) and nitatni (Av. VI. 136. 1) may or may not be herbs. (see also Av. VI. 137)* There is a reference to visanaka (विषाणका) in reference to certain complaints (Av. VI. 44. 3). The medicinal herb jivala (जीवला) is referred to in Av.VI. 59. 3. Relation of particular herbs with the sun and the moon has been referred to in Av.VI.83.1[1], and enyeka (एन्येका), syenyeka (श्येन्येका) krsnaika (कृष्णैका) and Rohini (रोहिणी) have been mentioned in the list (Av. VI. 83.2); these terms may be separate names or adjectivals. In connection with leprosy and leucoderma, mention has been made of asvattha (अश्वत्थ) and for yaksma hiranyayi (हिरण्ययी), and hiranya-bandhana (हिरण्यबन्धन) (Av. VI. 95). The diseases mentioned are vidradha (विद्रध), balasa

An important cure is pippali (पिप्पली), which is mentioned in a small hymn, (Av. VI. 109) of three verses. Cure for gandamala disease (pustules or scrofulous tumours) has been described in Av. VII. 74, 75 and 76.

The Vedic literature speaks highly of these plants and herbs; for example, we have in a verse from the Atharvaveda :

> Sweet is their root, sweet are these plants' top branches, sweet also is their intermediate portion; sweet is their foliage, and sweet their blossom, combined with sweetness is their taste of Amṛt : food, fatness let them yield, with kine-preceding.[2] (Av. VIII. 7. 12)

The plants have been spoken about in reference to health and disease :

> Let plants with flower and plants with bud, > the fruitful, and the fruitless all,
> Like children of one mother, yield their stores > for this man's perfect health.[3] (AV. VIII. 7. 27)

It is not only man that has the familiarity with plant kingdom for health and cure, the animals have perhaps a priority over man in this context. For we have :

> Well doth the wild boar know a plant, the mungoose knows the healing herb.
> I call, to aid this man, the plants which serpents and Gandharvas know.[4] (23) celestial plants which eagles know;

Plants known to swans and lesser fowl, plants known to all the birds that fly;
Plants that are known to sylvan beasts,

Inspired from the contents of the Vedic hymns, the ancient sages of the Himalayas explored the entire flora, for they had read in the Vedic verses the curative specialities of plants :

Hitherward unto thee I bring the plants, that cure all maladies,
All plants wherein physicians have discovered health-bestowing power.[2] (26)

The Atharvaveda, in all mentions about 110 plants, identified and non-identified, used in cure of various body ailments, and most of these remedies did come to occupy very significant places in the Ayurvedic literature of later periods in India and abroad.

Man and Society

Man is not an individual ; he belongs to a family, and the family belongs to the society. The concept of society (samaja, समाज) is different from the concept of herd or group (samaja, समज); some of the insects, including bees, have a highly evolved, instinctively inspired social organization; even the wild beasts prefer to live and sometimes function in small groups. But man primarily lives for the society, and the society nourishes him.

Society begins with the pairing of an individual with his or her mate; and for this purpose, the Vedic literature provides for a highly evolved concept of married life. In the Vedic society, the marriage and its philosphy is not an anthropological evolution, from primitivism to the present day variations and modifications. The Vedic verses have, from the earliest days been inspiring for a highly evolved concept of family. The Vedic verses have their own characteristic style in laying down these concepts. One may refer to the Hymn 85 of Book X of the Ṛgveda (the same occurring with modification in the Atharva, Book XIV). Savitri Surya (सूर्या) is the ṛsika (or the inspired lady interpreter) of the hymn. Again, surya is an ideal lady in general who is going to be married. Savitṛ (the sun as if) gave Surya to a worthy husband. Soma is a worthy brahmacarin, who is highly accomplished and fully matured for the married life; and so is Surya, his fiancee. Soma and Surya are not historical persons; all of us, the males, ripe for the marriage are somas, and the damsel maidens are suryas and both of them have the cosmic counterpart also. I shall quote a few verses from the Ṛgveda for the cosmic counterpart :

ऋतेनादित्यास्तिष्ठन्ति दिवि सोमो अधिश्रितः ।।
Earth is upheld by truth; heaven is upheld by the sun; the Adityas are supported by sacrifice (yajna);
Soma is supreme in heaven. (1)

Hymns were the cross-bars (of the car);
the Kurira metre was the thong of the whip;
the Asvins were Surya's groomsmen;
Agni was the leader of the procession. (8)

सूर्यां यत्पत्ये शंसन्तीं मनसा सवितादात् ।।

Soma was desirous of a bride; the two Asvins were the two groomsmen when Savitṛ gave Surya who was ripe for a husband, (to Soma) endowed with intelligence. (9)

Surya's bridal procession which Savitr despatched has advanced;

she is borne (to her husband's house) in the Arjuni (constellations). (13)

What happens on a cosmic scale in astral regions, also happens when a bride is married to a worthy counterpart and she proceeds to husband's home. Many of these verses have become the basis of marriage rituals in Indian families. The bride is richly dressed and decorated and is offered to the bridegroom. We have some of the verses such :

आशसनं विशसनमथो अधिविकर्तनम् ।
सूर्यायाः पश्य रूपाणि तानि ब्रह्मा तु शुन्धति ॥
Behold the forms of Surya; the asasana (आशसन, the border cloth), the visasana (विशसन, head-cloth), the adhivikartana (अधिविकर्तन, divided skirt); of these the Brahman relieves her. (35)

The bride and bridegroom come to the place of marriage and are felicitated by the assembly of guests and hosts :

सुमङ्गलीरियं वधूरिमां समेत पश्यत ।
सौभाग्यमस्यै दत्त्वायाऽथास्तं विपरेतन ॥
Fortunate is the bride; approach, behold her; having given her your congratulations, depart to your several homes. (33)

The bridegroom receives the hand of the bride and repeats the verses with a characteristic solemnity :

गृभ्णामि ते सौभगत्वाय हस्तं मया पत्या जरदष्टिर्यथासः ।
भगो अर्यमा सविता पुरन्धिर्मह्यं त्वादुर्गार्हपत्याय देवाः ॥
I take your hand for good fortune, that you may attain old age with me, as your husband; the Lord known as Bhaga, Aryaman, Savitṛ, Purandhi, has given you to me, that I may be the master of a household. (36)

तां पूषञ्छिवतमामेरयस्व यस्यां बीजं मनुष्या वपन्ति ।
या न ऊरू उशती विश्रयाते यस्यामुशन्तः प्रहराम शेपम् ॥
O Lord Pusan, may you inspire her who is most auspicious; in whom men may sow seed; who most affectionate may be devoted to us, and in whom animated by desire, we may beget progeny. (37)

The married life becomes a nucleus of family, and the benedictions are showered on the new couple,—for we have :

इहैव स्तं मा वि यौष्टं विश्वमायुर्व्यश्नुतम् ।
क्रीडन्तौ पुत्रैर्नप्तृभिर्मोदमानौ स्वे गृहे ॥
Abide here together; may you never be separated; live together all your lives, sporting with sons and grand-sons happy in your own home. (42)

The newly wedded bride has a great role to play in the family, and thereby in the society, and for this we have :

अघोरचक्षुरपतिघ्न्येधि शिवा पशुभ्यः सुमनाः सुवर्चाः ।
वीरसूर्देवकामा स्योना शं नो भव द्विपदे शं चतुष्पदे ॥
(Look upon your husband) with no angry eye, be not hostile to your Lord, be tender to animals, be amiable and be very glorious; be the mother of males, be devo-ted to learned people, be the bestower of happiness, be the bringer of prosperity to our bipeds and qua-drupeds. (44)

सम्राज्ञी श्वशुरे भव सम्राज्ञी श्वश्र्वां भव ।
ननान्दरि सम्राज्ञी भव सम्राज्ञी अधि देवृषु ।
Be a queen to your father-in-law, be a queen to your mother-in-law,
be a queen to your husband's sister,
be a queen to your husbands brothers. (46)

Married life is a life of cohesion, co-ordination and accommodation with mutual love, affection and regards. And for this unity and harmony, the supreme Lord, the worthy people of society, and Nature's all the bounties are invoked !

समञ्जन्तु विश्वेदेवाः समापो हृदयानि नौ ।
सं मातरिश्वा सं धाता समु देष्ट्री दधातु नौ ॥
May the Vishvedevas unite the hearts of both of us ; may the Apah (आपः, the omnipresent Lord, and all the cosmic fluids) unite both our hearts; may the Mataris-van (मातरिश्वन्), Dhatṛ (धाता) and the bountiful Destṛ

(देष्ट्री) unite the hearts of both of us. (47)

Marriage is not the union of two individuals (a girl and a boy); it is the union of several families, and it becomes a nucleus of harmony in the entire society. The last hymn of the Ṛgveda inspires the entire society for concordance, love, humility and well-knit affectionate discipline, which arises out of mutual respect, fondness and reverence (Samvanana) and also mutual understanding (Samjnanam).

संगच्छध्वं संवदध्वं सं वो मनांसि जानताम् ।
देवा भागं यथा पूर्वे संजानाना उपासते ।
Meet together, talk together, let your minds apprehend alike; in the like manner as the ancient people of wisdom concurring accepted their rewards in the social selfless sacrifices. (2)

समानो मंत्र: समिति: समानी समानं मन: सह चित्तमेषाम् ।
समानं मन्त्रमभिमन्त्रये व: समानेन वो हविषा जुहोमि ॥
Common be the prayer of these, common be the acquirement, common the purpose, associated by the desire. I repeat for you a common prayer, I offer for you a common oblation. (3)

समानी व आकूति: समाना हृदयानि व: ।
समानमस्तु वो मनो यथा व: सुसहासति ॥
Common be your intention; common be your hearts; common be your thoughts so that there may be thorough union among you. (4) (Ṛv. X. 191. 2-4)

The devata (the title) of the verses 5-9 of Ṛv. VIII. 31 is the couple (dampati) or husband and wife taken together. Both of them have equal privileges and responsibilities in the society; both of them have equal rights in sacred ceremonies (prayers, yajnas and others), and public acts of service. For we read in the Vedic verses :

या दंपती समनसा सुनुत आ च धावत ।
देवासो नित्ययाशिरा ॥
Gods (Nature's bounties and learned people), may the husband and wife, who with one mind offer libations and purify them and propitiate you with the Soma, ever mixed with milk. (5)

प्रति प्राशव्याँ इतः सम्यञ्चा बर्हिराशाते ।
ता न वाजेषु वायतः ॥
Constantly associated, may they acquire appropriate viands; may they be able to offer sacrifice; may they never be wanting in food. (6)

पुत्रिणा ता कुमारिणा विश्वमायुर्व्यश्नुतः ।
उभा हिरण्यपेशसा ॥
Blessed with youthful and adolescent offspring, and both having their persons richly ornamented, they pass happily their whole life. (8)

The union of marriage leads to immortality if invoked with highest ideals :

वीतिहोत्राकृतद्वसू दशस्यन्तामृताय कम् ।
समूधो रोमशं हतो देवेषु कृणुतो दुवः ॥
For the sake of immortality, enjoying personal union, they (wife and husband) worship the gods. (9)

Marriage has thus not only to fulfil the biological demands in human society, it is an act of supreme sacred order.

From the concept of a family, we proceed to the concept of a community, and from that of a community to the concept of a kingdom and sovereignty, a nation, and universal brotherhood. The basis of the bondage of fraternity is mutual trust and understanding, honesty, truthfulness, austerity, peace and love. The worldly prosperity, and not the poverty, is the slogan of a mighty community. To be prosperous is not a crime but a virtue, if the prosperity does not mean exploitation of a certain section of human community. In the very first verse of the Yajurveda,[1] we invoke Lord for food and fuel, i.e. for nourishment and vigour, isa (इष) and urja (ऊर्ज), i.e. for raw material and power. And no prosperity has a meaning unless we are free from pain and sickness (an-amiva, अनमीवा, and ayaksma अयक्ष्मा); and the society should not only be affluent, but should be rich in progeny and cattle. God is also known as gopatau (गोपतौ), Lord of cattle. Praja (प्रजा, people) and pasu (पशु, cattle) constitute an evolved society. The object of a married life is to accomplish isa and urja (food and fuel), rayasposa (abundant wealth), praja (offspring or progeny), mayobhava (मयोभव, the source of delight) and for the sakhabhava (सखाभाव, affection and love). Through the Vedic mantras, our ṛsis were never tired of evoking Lord for such affluency.

The Vedic verses do not confine to the material wealth and material prosperity alone. When they refer to food and fuel, wealth, progeny, cattle, prosperity, viands, and such other things, they always try to elevate your thoughts from the physical realm to the internalmost supreme realm of the most abstract nature (realms of vital forces, mental complex and finally the spiritual one of the highest order). There are food and fuel of each of these realms, there is prosperity and abundance of each of these realms quite different from that of each other, and there are handicaps, lapses, and shortcomings of each of these realms, quite characteristic of their own. Thus the Vedic materialism through stages lifts you up to the highest mysticism, from childhood to adolescence of each realm. The words are the same but implications and connotations go on varying from stage to stage, from realm to realm. The Ṛgveda speaks :

> We invoke the resplendent Lord, whether He comes from this earthly region, or from the heaven above or from the vast firmament, that He may give us wealth.[1] (Ṛv. I. 6. 10)

Lord reveals to His devotee from the earthly region (parthivat). from the heaven (divah) or from vast firmament

1. इतो वा सातिमीमहे दिवो वा पार्थिवादधि ।
इन्द्रं महो वः रजसः ॥ (Ṛv. I. 6. 10)

(mahah rajasah) but this earth, heaven or firmament not of the cosmic realm: here one refers to the annamaya kosa (earthly, parthiva), pranamaya kosa (firmament, the vital realm) and manomaya kosa (dyau, mental complex).

The spiritual mystic, through his yogic exercises mounts up from the earthly region (prthivi, physical realm) to earth's mid-region (antariksa, vital region of pranas), and thence to the heaven (dyau of the mental realm); and finally ascends to the world of light (svah, anandamaya) and vijnanamaya realms); for this we have a verse in the Yajurveda :

> From earth to air's mid-region have I mounted, and from mid-air ascended up to heaven.
> From the high pitch of heaven's cope I came into the world of light.[1] (Yv. XVII. 67)

The Vedas have a cryptic beauty of expressions in a style quite characteristic of their own.

Community and Occupations

The society, organized on the lines of the Vedic tenets, has good many attractive features. The basis of the society on one hand is brahma and ksattra, knowledge and defence and on the other hand food, wealth and prosperity, vajam, rayim, and rayasposa, created with the assistance of labour (srama and tapas). And thus the society is represented by four classes of people (i) the brahmanas (ब्राह्मण), the learned class, serving the society by devoting itself to knowledge and learning, (ii) the ksattriyas (क्षत्रिय), adept in defence science for protection of the State from internal disorder and external attacks from enemies, (iii) the vaisyas (वैश्य), the people engaged in agriculture, trade, industry and business and thus creating wealth for the nation, and (iv) the sudras (शूद्र), the unskilled or partly-skilled labour to assist the three classes manually. And thus the brahmanas constitute the head or mouth of the society personified, the ksattriyas, the arms, the vaisyas the belly or thighs and the sudras, the two legs. The Purusa-Sukta of the Ṛgveda (X.90), and of the Yajurveda (Chapter XXXI) and of the Atharvaveda (XIX. 6) has the following verse in common :

   दिवो नाकस्य पृष्ठात् स्वर्ज्योतिरगामहम् ॥ (Yv. XVII. 67)

> The brahmana became His mouth, > of both His arms the rajanya (the ksattriya) was made ;
> His thighs became the vaisya, > and from His feet the sudra was produced.[1]
> (Ṛv. X. 90. 12; Yv. XXXI. 11. Av. XIX; 6. 6)

The Yajurveda envisages a cultured society, consisting of hundreds of professions and vocations to meet the needs of people. The whole chapter (Chapter XXX from verse 5 to 22) enlists in the characteristic lexiconic style more than one hundred desirable and undesirable professions : brahmana (the learned teacher and priest), the ksatra (royalty), vaisya (businessman), sudra (labourer), robber, homicide, eunuch, ayogu (अयोगू) a harlot, magadha (मागध) stable-master, public dancer, court-attendant, timid, chatterer, artist, woman-lover, damsel's son, car-builder, carpenter, potter, artificer, jeweller, sower, shaft-maker, bowyer, bow-string maker, rope maker, hunter, dog-leader, fisherman, nisada (निषाद), madman, vratya (व्रात्य), demented, untrustworthy, gambler, non-gambler, cane-splitter woman, thorn-worker woman, lover, paramour, unmarried elder brother, younger brother, marrying earlier before the elder brother, husband of a younger sister (the elder sister still unmarried), woman embroiderer, woman dealing in love-charms, a by-sitter, an obstinate, a yielding man, hunch-back, dwarf, blear-eyed man, blind man, deaf man, physician, astronomer, inquisitive man, extra-inquisitive, question-solver, elephant-keeper, horse-keeper, cowherd, shepherd, goatherd, ploughman, dealer in beverages, house guard, possessor of wealth, door-keeper's attendant, wood-bringer, fire-kindler, besprinkler, high steward, carver, distributer, pourer-out, stirrer-up of strife, washer-woman, female dyer (5-12), horse-rider (13), iron-smelter, yoker, ointment-maker (14), hide-dresser, currier (15), fisherman, fish-vender, fish-catcher, anda (आन्द), mainala (मैनाल), bhilla (भिल्ल), kirata (किरात), wildman (16), goldsmith, merchant (17), gambler, a speculator in gambling, gamble manager, owner of gambling hall, caraka-acarya (चरकाचार्य) (18), drummer, lute-player, flute-blower, conch-blower, wood-ranger, forest-fireguard (19), village headman, watchman, lute-player, hand-clapper, flutist, musician (20), and pole-dancer (21).

ऊरू तदस्य यद् वैश्यः पद्भ्यां शूद्रोऽअजायत ॥ (Ṛv. X. 90. 12)

Members of one and the same family were permitted to serve the society in different vocations, for we have in Vedic verse :

> I am the karu (carpenter, or a singer), papa is the physician, mamma throws the corn upon grinding stones; having various occupations, desiring riches we remain (in the world) like cattle (in the stalls); flow, Indu for Indra.[1] (Rv. IX. 112. 3)

According to the Vedic injunction, God's revealed knowledge (Divine Word) is meant for all, irrespective of caste, creed, race or colour. God reveals Himself through His creation, the Divine Art and the Divine Word.

> That I to all the people address this salutary speech, to priest (brahmana), and nobleman (ksattriya), sudra, arya, vaisya, to one of our kin and to the stranger.[2] (Yv. XXVI.2)

God's graces and gifts have no bounds and are subject to no restrictions; they have universal appeal; the sacred knowledge of the Vedas is meant for all, irrespective of birth and heritage It is unto us to derive advantage from these blessings.

Universal Friendliness and Patriotism

According to the Vedas, we are the sons of the mother Earth. In the characteristic style of the Veda, we have the following :

> Heaven (Dyau) is your father, Earth your mother, Soma your brother, Aditi your sister.[1] (Ṛv. I. 191. 6)
> Dyaus (heaven) is our father, our begetter: Kinship is here. This great Earth is our kin and mother.[2]
> (Av. IX. 10. 12)

Our kinship is due to our having a common father and a common mother, in the form of heavenly luminaries acting as our father, and the Earth as the mother.

The bondage is further strengthened by the fact that the Supreme Lord is our father and mother both. He is our Lord and we his children or sons.

The Bhumi Sukta (hymn pertaining to deified Earth) of the Atharva Veda (XII. 1) speaks thus with fervour :

> May Earth pour out her milk for us, a mother unto me, her son.[3] (XII. 1. 10)
> I am the son of Earth; Earth is my Mother; Parjanya is my sire; may he promote me.[4] (12)

> Produced from thee, on thee move mortal creatures; thou bearest them, both quadruped and biped. Thine, Pṛthivi, are these five human Races for whom, though mortal, the sun as he rises, spreads with his rays the light that is immortal.[5] (15)

रश्मिभिरातनोति । (Av. XII. 1. 15)

> O Earth, my mother, set thou me happily in a place secure.[1] (63)

The Vedas do not speak of the narrow geographical patriotisms. Of course, for convenience we have the concept of small and big kingdoms, or states, with heads, differently known. One of the verses of the Yajurveda speaks of rajni (राज्ञी, queen), virad (विराड्), samrad (सम्राड्), svarad (स्वराड्), adhipatni (अधिपत्नी, queen-paramount).[2]

A verse distinguishes between samrad and raja : Indra is samrad (chief lord), and Varuna is raja (sovran)[3] (Yv. VIII. 37). According to the ritualists, the one who performs the rajasuya yajna is raja, and the one, performing the vaja-peya is samrad.[4] Raja is inferior to samrad; a raja becomes a samrad, in case he performs the vajapeya yajna.

The word samrad has been translated as all ruling, and svarad as independent ruler[5] (Yv. XIII. 35).

The concept of kingdom (one's own state, svakiya desa, स्वकीय देश) is very significant. Kingdom is known as rastra (राष्ट्र). It may be a small state or a state extensive in dimensions; it my be what we call today a nation, a federation, a republic or a Union . We have such passages in respect to this rastra:

> May we be watchful (i. e. non-negligent) in the rastra.[6] (Yv. XI. 23)

> I take my stand on princely power and kingship.[7] (XX. 10)

6. वय ँ राष्ट्रे जागृयाम । (Yv. IX. 23)
7. प्रति क्षत्रे प्रति तिष्ठामि राष्ट्रे । (Yv. XX. 10)

O Rastrda, may you give me the rastra.[1] (X. 2)

Let all the people long for thee. Let not thy kingship fall away[2] (XII.11), i. e. proper protection should be provided to the State, so that glory and prosperity (sri , श्री) of the State are fully retained and neither diminished nor destroyed.

The following verse from the Yajurveda refers to the aspiration of a nation; and for this reason, it may be reckoned as one of the best national anthems :

आ ब्रह्मन् ब्राह्मणो ब्रह्मवर्चसी जायतामा राष्ट्रे
राजन्य: शूरऽइषव्योऽतिव्याधी महारथो जायतां
दोग्ध्री धेनुर्वोढानड्वानाशु: सप्ति: पुरन्धिर्योषा
जिष्णू रथेष्ठा सभेयो युवास्य यजमानस्य वीरो जायतां
निकामे निकामे न: पर्जन्यो वर्षतु फलवत्यो
नऽओषधय: पच्यन्तां योग-क्षेमो न: कल्पताम् ॥ (Yv. XXII. 22)

O Supreme Lord ! May there be born in this rastra (the State), the learned intellectuals, illustrious for their sacred knowledge; may there be born the rajanya or the men of defence, heroic, skilled archers, with piercing shafts, mighty warriors; the cows giving abundant milk; the ox good at carrying; the swift courser; the industrious ladies; may this householder be blessed with a son, ever victorious, driving in the forefront, impressive in assemblies, and youthful; may we have timely rains according to our needs and desires; may our fruitbearing plants ripen; may acquisition (yoga) and preservation (ksema) of property be secured to us.

The concept of state includes the state protection from the attacks of adversaries; and therefore, it is necessary that the state should organize armies, train soldiers and equip the army with war-materials, i. e. astra, sastra, food provision, vehicles, cars, horses, elephants and the like. The Vedic verses envisage wars on land, on water and in the interspace. In the interspatial conflicts, it speaks of bombers and aircrafts. The primitive warfare included the use of arrows, bows, and shafts. Indra is supposed to use as the last recourse an admantine weapon known as vajra. The Vedas do not speak of any historical battle or war. Some of the conflicts are quite imaginary, some of them are metaphorical, as that between indra (the sun) and vrtra (clouds), with a troop of maruts, brilliantly adorned with armoury, dresses and weapons. Some of the conflicts are of the mental and spiritual realms against sins, weaknesses, temptations and shortcomings. In such cases the violence of war is of another sort. The terminology of all such conflicts is very much the same. The raksasas (demons and devils) have to be subdued anyhow. In this context, I shall quote the translation of Wilson of only one verse from the Ṛgveda:

> To what glorifier of the gods do they (Maruts) repair with their ruddy, tawny, car-bearing horses for his advantage ? Bright as burnished gold , and armed with thunderbolt, they furrow the earth with their chariot-wheel.[1] (Ṛv.I.88.2)

Concept of Three Goddesses

Very often in the Ṛgveda, also in the Yajuh and Atharva, there are references to three goddesses (tisrah devih), ida, sarasvati, and bharati, also known as mahi.[2]

1. तेऽरुणेभिर्वरमा पिशङ्गैः शुभे कं यान्ति रथतूर्भिरश्वैः ।
   रुक्मो न चित्रः स्वधितीवान् पव्या रथस्य जङ्घनन्त भूम ॥ (Rv. I. 88. 2)
2. इळा सरस्वती मही तिस्रो देवी मयोभुवः ।
   बर्हिः सीदन्त्वस्रिधः । (Rv. I. 13. 9)
   सरस्वती साधयन्ती धियं न इळा देवी भारती विश्वतूर्तिः ।
   तिस्रो देवीः स्वधया बर्हिरेदमच्छिद्रं पान्तु शरणं निषद्य ॥ (Ṛv. II. 3. 8)
   आ भारती भारतीभिः सजोषा इळा देवैर्मनुष्येभिरग्निः ।
   सरस्वती सारस्वतेभिरर्वाक् तिस्रो देवीर्बर्हिरेदं सदन्तु ॥ (Ṛv. VII. 2. 8)
   तिस्रो देवीर्बर्हिरेदं सदन्त्विडा सरस्वती भारती । मही गृणाना । (Yv. XXVII. 19)
   तिस्रो देवीर्बर्हिरेदं सदन्तामिडा सरस्वती मही भारती गृणाना । (Av. V. 27. 9)

Mahi, or bharati is the motherland, sarasvati is the mother-culture or the divine knowledge, and ida or ila is the divine language or the mother tongue. Sarasvati (from sṛ, to flow; the uninterrupted flow of divine inspiration) has a relation with dhiyah, the discriminating instinct or intellect (sarasvati sadhayanty dhiyam, Ṛv.II.3.8). All these three goddesses occupy their sacred places in barhi, the place of sacred yajna, which is being performed incessantly in our human heart, the antah karana; the internal organ, the abode of the atman itself. Love and regards for the motherland, mother culture and the sacred knowledge have to be inculcated in every individual belonging to a social organization or state.

Of the three, the goddess Sarasvati is most loving and fascinating. She is vigour amongst all possessing vigour;[1] she is the inspirer of everything that is noble and sacred, and she evokes all our mental faculties.[2] She creates perturbations in the ocean of cosmic mind or mahat-tattva.[3] And for these reasons, the goddess Sarasvati is invoked by everyone.[4]

Ethical Concepts

Not only that God created the universe according to His divine art, and made the creation purposeful, He gave to man, the highest evolved being in His creation, the high standards of ethics. God Himself is an embodiment of ethical ideals and all noble virtues. Of course, He is an Infinite Unity, whilst the souls are infinitesimal unities in all positive parameters. Ethics is not necessarily a result of social evolution or of social necessity. The ethical ideals emanate with all their purposefulness from the divine nature of the self itself, and in case of man, they have reached a sort of climax.

What is the highest virtue ? Of course, the Truth itself. Truth has six synonymns in the Vedic literature : बट् । श्रत् । सत्रा । अद्धा । इत्था । ऋतमिति षट् सत्यनामानि (bat, srat, satra; addha, ittha, rta are the synonyms of satya or truth) (Nighantu III. 10).[1] The Satapatha Brahmana gives several parables to show that the truth came to the share of gods, whilst asuras adopted untruth. One has to take a vow before participating in rituals, and the vow is repeated thus in the Vedic words :

> इदमहमनृतात् सत्यमुपैमि ॥ (Yv. 1.5)
> I will observe the vow, Lord of Vows, Agni, the Lord adorable, may I have strength therefor.
> Success attend me. Now into truth from untruth do I enter.[2] (Yv. I. 5).

There is no virtue, nobler than truth; without truth, all virtues become vice. In the Vedic literature, the words satya and ṛta are used in the same sense (anṛta—what is not ṛta—asatya or untruth).

The world of activity is sustained by certain virtues or ethical modes; they have been enumerated in a verse of the Atharvaveda.

> सत्यं बृहद् ऋतमुग्रं दीक्षा तपो ब्रह्म यज्ञः पृथिवी धारयन्ति । (Av. XII 1.1)
> Satyam, bṛhat, ṛtam, ugram, diksa, tapas, brahman and yajna.

These are the eight virtues, which sustain the world. We may translate them as truth (satya), vastness (bṛhat), right attitude (ṛtam), formidability (ugram), consecration

1. For bat and ittha, Ṛv. V. 84. 1; sraddha is derived from srat. (Ṛv. X. 151; Nir. IX. 30, 31)

2. This is spoken by the sacrificer, who with his wife is about to take the prescribed vrata or vow of abstinence during the performance of ceremonies. Agni is said to be vratapati, or keeper of vows. Truth is reality or godhead; untruth is unreality, perishable humanity; whilst taking vow, the sacrificer feels that he is attaining to a divine body and is no longer a mere man. He is thus bound to speak truth, nothing but truth.

(diksa), austerity or penance (tapas), aptitude for learning (brahman) and dedication and service or sacrifice (yajna).

The word bṛhat has various connotations. The ṛsis speak of three cosmic divisions:—pṛthivi (earth), the antariksa (interspace or middle space) and dyau or heaven, but there is still greater heaven (bṛhad dyau) called also the wide world, the vast, the bṛhad, and typified sometimes as the Great Water, maho arnah, the region of cosmic intelligence. This bṛhat is again described as the ṛtam bṛhat or in a triple term satyam, ṛtam, bṛhat as in our text. (Av. XII.1.1.) This is the same as mahas, the fourth vyahṛti (in the tetrad of bhuh; bhuvah, svah and mahah), introduced by the sage Mahacamasya. (See Taittiriya Up. for mahas I.5).

Satyam is trisyllabic, sa-ti-yam; sa is one syllable, ti another and yam the third. The first and the last syllables are truth (satyam) meaning the real; in the middle is the falsehood (anṛtam). The falsehood is embraced on both sides by truth; it partakes of the nature of truth itself. Falsehood does not injure him who knows this. (Bṛhadaranyaka Up. V. 5. 1). Of this truth, or satyam, the Yajuh has the verse :

> The face of the satya (truth or real) is hidden by a vessel formed of golden light.[1]

The ethical values of the Vedic traditions have been variously summarized and codified in the subsequent literature. For example, the Taittiriya Upanisad (I.9) refers to ṛta (ऋत, right or real), satya (सत्य, truth), tapas (तपस्, austerity), dama (दम, self-control), sama (शम, tranquility) and svadhyaya-pravacana (स्वाध्याय-प्रवचन, study and teaching). It is difficult to assign priorities in favour any of these. Satyavacas Rathitara gave priority and assigned superiority to satya or what is true; Taponitya Paurusisti ascribed it to tapas or austerity, and Naka Maudgalya to Svadhyaya-pravacana. Study and teaching is verily, tapas (Taittiriya Up. I.9).

Sacrifice leads to various attainments, since it is the most sacred act of selfless dedication. Some of these attainments are enumerated in the Yajurveda as follow :

(Yv. XVIII. 5-6)

May my truth (satyam), my faith (sraddha, an ability to accept and adopt truth for life); and my cattle, my wealth, my goods, my pleasures; and my play and my enjoyment; and my children and my future children; and my hymn and my pious act (5); my religious rite (ṛta) and my immortality (amṛta); and my freedom from consumption and from disease; and my life and my longevity; and my freedom from enemies and my freedom from danger; and my happiness, and my lying down (sayana), my fair dawn (susa), my fair day (sudina) prosper by sacrifice. (Yv. XVIII. 5-6)

In the Vedic terminology all that is vice, all that leads to pain, all that is ill, is known as durita (दुरित), and the counterpart of durita is known as bhadra (भद्र), which is virtue personified and leads to pleasure, prosperity and nobility. God is invoked for the attainment of bhadra, and for dispelling durita.

विश्वानि देव सवितर्दुरितानि परासुव । यद्भद्रं तन्न आसुव ।। (Ṛv. Y. 825)
O Lord, the sustainer and creator, send far away all duritas (troubles, vices, calamities) and send us only what is bhadra (virtue and good).

Regarding this bhadra, we have a verse in the Ṛgveda :

भद्रं कर्णेभिः शृणुयाम देवा भद्रं पश्येमाक्षभिर्यजत्राः । (Ṛv. I. 89.8)
Let us hear, O Lord and learned people, with our ears, what is bhadra (good); let us see with our eyes what is bhadra (good). (Ṛv. I. 89. 8)

Brahmacarya, according to the Vedic traditions, is regarded a supreme virtue for married and unmarried persons of both the sexes. The Atharvaveda devotes a full hymn to this subject (Av. XI. 5). The word brahman means the Veda or Divine Word and therefore, the word brahmacarin may mean the Vedic student (Bloomfield). We have in this famous hymn, some of the very significant verses :

> The brahmacarin fills the world with fuel, girdle, toil (srama) and fervour (tapas). (4)
> The brahmacarin goes kindled with fuel, clothing himself in the black-antelope skin, consecrated, long-bearded. (6)
> The brahmacarin defends by fervour; the whole of that he, knowing, makes brahman for himself. (10)
> By brahmacarya, by fervour, a king defends his kingdom; a teacher by brahmacarya, seeks a brahmacarin (a Vedic student). (17)
> By brahmacarya, a girl wins a young husband. (18)
> By brahmacarya, the gods smote away death. (19)
> A brahmacarin bears a shining brahman; in that are woven together all the gods (Nature's bounties); he, generating breath-and-expiration (prana and apana), then out-breathing (vyana), speech, mind, brahman and wisdom (medha).[1] (24)

Supreme Values of Life

Truth, non-violence austerity, brotherhood, or universal friendship, security, peace, fearlessness and dedication are necessarily some of the prime values of life of the first category, and therefore, there are innumerable prayers in the vedas through which God is invoked for such blessings.

Universal Friendship

O Lord, the dispeller of nescience, strengthen me. May all beings regard me with the eye of a friend. May I regard all beings with the eye of a friend. With the eye of a friend do we regard one another.[1]

(Yv. XXXVI. 18).

Fearlessness, Security and Safety

May air's mid-region give us peace and safety; safety may both these, Heaven and Earth, afford me. Security be ours from west, from eastward, from north and south; may we be free from danger.
Safety be ours from friend and from the unfriendly, safety from what (or whom) we know and what we know not. Safety be ours by night and in the day time. Friendly to me be all my hopes and wishes (or all my quarters).[2] (Av. XIX. 15. 5-6)

Love and Freedom from Hatred

Freedom from hate I bring to you, concord, and unanimity. Love one another as the cow loves the calf that she has borne. (1)

One minded with his mother, let the son be loyal to his sire. Let the wife, calm and gentle, speak words sweet as honey to her Lord. (2)

No brother hate his brother, no sister to sister be unkind. Unanimous, with one intent, speak you your speech in friendliness.[1] (3) (Av. III. 30. 1-3)

Effort and Victory

Whilst efforts are in my right hand, sure in my left is victory. Kine winner may I be, horse-winner, riches winning, gold-winner.[2] (Av. VII. 50. 8)

Lustre, Vigour, Energy and Might

O Lord, you are lustre : give me lustre.
You are vigour : give me manly vigour.

(the mental sheath) of the human species is highly developed with multifarious complexities and sublimities. Man alone possesses characteristic intellect, which for him discriminates truth from what is untruth, the desirable from the undesirable. This intellect is known as dhi (धी) or medha (मेधा), a highly evolved form of it is known as ṛtambhara prajna (ऋतम्भरा प्रज्ञा). The seers of the Upanisads have variously described it (Taittiriya Up. II. 3). The Aitareya Upanisad uses terms like hṛdaya (हृदय, heart), manas (मनस्, mind), samjnana (संज्ञान, consciousness), prajnana (प्रज्ञान, intelligence), medhas (मेधस्, wisdom) dṛsti दृष्टि, insight) dṛti (दृति, steadfastness), mati (मति, thought), manisa (मनीषा, thoughtfulness), juti (जूति, impulse), smṛti (स्मृति, memory), samkalpa (संकल्प, conception), kratu (क्रतु, purpose), asu (असु, life), kama (काम, desire) and vasa (वश, will). (Ait. up. 5. 1.)

In the Vedic terminology, the word medha has wide connotation. The Yajurveda gives a group of three mantras :

> To the Assembly's wondrous Lord, to Indra's lovely friend who gives Wisdom (medha) have I drawn near in prayer.[1]
> That wisdom which the companions of gods (learned people) and fathers (elderly people of experience) recognize, even with that intelligence, O adorable Lord, make me wise today.[2]
> Varuna, grant me wisdom, grant it Agni and Prajapati. Wisdom may Indra, Vayu grant. May the Creator grant it me.[3] (Yv. XXXII. 13-15)

3. मेधां मे वरुणो ददातु मेधामग्निः प्रजापतिः ।
मेधामिन्द्रश्च वायुश्च मेधां धाता ददातु मे स्वाहा ॥ (Yv. XXXII. 15)

The same emphasis to discriminating intellects is in the famous Gayatri or Savitri verse :

> May we attain that excellent (desirable) glory of Creator the God; So may he stimulate our intellects[1]. (Yv. XXX.. 2; Rv. III. 62. 10)

Vedas as the Source Book of Knowledge

The Vedic theism incorporates a number of concepts : (i) acceptance of the concept of the existence of supreme, infinite, omnipresent, omniscient and most venerable and adorable Lord; (ii) acceptance of the dynamic and purposeful reality of God's creation, and appreciation of the divine art, (iii) acceptance of the concept, that God reveals Himself in His creation and in His art ; and the creation is based on a uniform principle, law and order and purposefulness, and (iv) acceptance of the principle, that God is the source of all knowledge, which he reveals to man in three ways : through the divine creation; through the divine word, and through the divine inspiration ; and as such, there is no contradiction between what is observed through the study of divine creation (science), the divine word (the Vedic studies), and the divine inspiration (which comes to the chosen few in the line of their specialization, i.e. to ṛsis in the field of art, science and philosophy and the mystic experiences: (v) acceptance of the principle, that God Himself is the source of highest ethical values of life and (vi) acceptance of the principle, that God alone knows about His people, and awards them the fruits of their actions on their

Dayananda translates dhiyah as prajna, whilst Griffith as prayers and Wilson as pious rites (karmani). Sir W. Jones was the first to give its translation to the English knowing Western world:

"Let us adore the supremacy of that divine Sun, the godhead, who illuminates all, who recreates all, from whom all proceed, to whom all must return, whom we invoke to direct our understandings aright in our progress towards his holy seat". A better rendering, also suggested by Wilson is : "who may animate or enlighten our intellects."

merits and demerits with kindness and justice ; nobody, howsoever great in his own field, even in the state of his final release and emancipation shares with our Lord the responsibilities or privileges of the supreme divine functions, which are supervised by God alone.

The Veda and the Vedanta Sutras acknowledge God as the source of knowledge. In the Vedanta Sutras, Brahman is regarded as the first cause of creation, its sustenance and dissolution (जन्माद्यस्य यतः, janmadyasya yatah), and He alone is the source of divine knowledge (शास्त्रयोनित्वात्, sastrayonitvat).

> From that Great Yajna or supreme Lord, ṛcas (the Ṛgveda), and sama (Samaveda) hymns were born. Therefrom the chandas (the Atharva Veda) were produced. The yajus (the Yajurveda) had its birth from it.[1] (Ṛv.X.90.9; Av. XIX. 6.13)

On the one hand, our Lord revealed the four Vedas for the welfare of the mankind, on the other hand, He gave to man the comprehension capacity of this vast knowledge. This potentiality rests in mind, a supreme gift to humanity :

> Wherein the ṛcas, samans, yajur verses, like spokes within a car's nave are included.
> And all the thought of creatures is inwoven, may that my mind, be moved by right intention.[2]
> (Yv. XXXIV. 5)

The Vedas were given to the man at the earliest stage of human history but carry a message for all times. They are the source book of all knowledge. The Vedas are meant for the lower and higher stages both, i.e. for the worldly or empirical and for the transcendental. For the lower stage, they enumerate the duty of the conduct of life, known as Dharma, and for the higher stage, the divine knowledge or the knowledge or Brahman. The first is known as avidya, asambhuti or apara, leading to (abhyudaya अभ्युदय) and the higher one is known as vidya, sambhuti, or para leading to (nisreyasa, निःश्रेयस).[1] It is necessary to have a complete co-ordination between the two : one who strives to attain the lower knowledge, whilst neglecting the higher one is in darkness, and one who feigns to show that he would be caring for the higher knowledge alone without the due regards to the lower one is groping still more in darkness.[2] (Yv. XL. 9-14)

Inspired by the Vedas, the ancient seers of the Vedic age developed their positive sciences and made the world worth while to live in with comforts and purposefulness; and again inspired by the same Vedic thoughts, they explored the realms of inner self and got an insight into some of the fundamental mysteries of the innermost realms of psychic and spiritual worlds and the superb knowledge of the Brahman and His realization.

One cannot study the Veda, without the proper study of the Vedangas, Upangas and Upavedas, which the ṛsis gave a systematic form. In an attempt to study the Veda and to know God, the ancient seers, by and by, developed their positive and mystic sciences, and presented them as the books on systematics, which later on were known as sastras, different from the sruti, which in her most fluid and plastic form became the basis of sastra. The people of the Vedic age developed their culture and civilization on the basis of the Vedic thoughts. They developed their agri-

Inspired from the Vedic verses, the ancient seers developed their basic principles of astronomy. The word 'go', which so frequently occurs in the Vedic hymns, has been interpreted as cow, speech, the rays of the sun, the sun itself, clouds, water etc. In an interesting pamphlet, Gavam Ayana (1908), R. Shamsastry says, that go is nothing else than a name applied to the intercalary day, which being the product of four quarter days of four consecutive solar years is to be added to every fourth year making it consist of 366 days. Kutsa Angiras was the first ṛsi who recognized this intercalary year (as infant), on the basis of the verse, Ṛv. I.96.5. Shamsastry ascribes its credit to Manu :

> The night and day, mutually effacing each other's complexion give nourishment combined together to one infant.[3] (Ṛv. I.96.5)

Gavam Ayana (गवां-अयन) ceremony is vividly described in the Taittiriya Samhita (Krsna Yajurveda), Seventh Book, Chapter V, and the Baudhayana Srauta Srauta. In the Asya Vamiya Sukta of the Ṛgveda, we have several verses, which obviously refer to the astronomical observations, particularly concerning earth going round the sun.

> The one sole (sun) having three mothers and three fathers, stood on high...The twelve-spoked wheel of the true (sun) revolves round the heavens and never tends to decay; seven hundred and twenty children in pairs, Agni, abide in it[1]. (Rv. I. 164. 10-11)

The Vedic seers kept apart 21 days in each cycle of four years restricting the number of days in the year to 360.

The three quarter days of three consecutive solar years in each cycle of four years are also termed as three foot-steps of Visnu.

The first year after the fourth year of any cycle would commence in the evening and close at midnight after the lapse of 365¼ days; the second year would commence at midnight and close in the morning of 366th day; the third year would begin in the morning and end at the midday of the 366th day; and the fourth year, beginning at the midday would come to a close on the usual evening of the 366th day. The first is called Kali or Ekata, the second year Dvapara or Dvita; the third year Treta or Trita, and the fourth year Kṛta (complete); Satya, Ṛta, truth, i.e. that which has come into existence. The Vedic Yuga thus consists of four or five years.[2] The following lines of the Aitareya Brahmana should be read on these lines :

> The year Kali is lying down; Dvapara is leaving the bed; standing erect is Treta and Kṛta happens to walk here and there.[3]

The Vedic era, gavam ayana, according to Shamasastry was in use in India from 3101 B.C. to 1260 B.C. The astronomical terminology considerably changed since then.

In the Atharva Veda, we have an enumeration of the Vedic constellations (Av. XIX. 7.1-5) : Krttikas, Rohini, Mrgasiras, Ardra, two Punarvasus, Pusya, Aslesa, Magha, Purva-phalguni, Hasta, Citra, Swati, two Visakhas, Anuradha, Jyestha, Mula, Purva-Asadha, Uttara-Asadha, Abhijit, Sravana, Sravistha, Satabhisak, Prosthapada, Revati, two Asvayujas, and Bharani. (Av.XIX.7.1-5). The seer Gargya is the rsi of this hymn, and he for the first time recognized these constellations.[1]

Dayananda has quoted a number of verses from the Vedas in the support of the rotations and revolutions of the earth[2] (a concept later on worked out by Aryabhata I, in his Aryabhatiya) (Ṛv.X.65.6) or moon going round the Earth[3] (Ṛv.VIII.48.13). The planets revolving round the sun are under the directive attraction forces of the sun.[4] Of course, whilst giving out these truths, the Vedas have their own characteristic cryptic style of expressions capable of being interpreted on the cosmic, ephimeral and spiritual planes.

Astronomy depends on mathematics, pure and applied. The Vedas inspired people to develop this science. Mathematics is an aid to calculations, and calculations depend on numerals, starting from kham (Zero), and ending into brahma (larger than the largest, i. e. infinity). Another name for infinite is aditi. Max Müller in his Vedic Hymns, Part I, p. 241, says that Aditi is "in reality the earliest name invented to express the Infinite, not the Infinite as the result of a long process of abstract reasoning, but the visible infinite, visible, as it were, to the naked eye, the endless expanse beyond the earth, beyond the clouds, beyond the sky. That was called Aditi, the unbound, the unbounded; one might almost say, but fear of misunderstandings, the Absolute, for it is derived from diti, bond, and the negative particle, and meant therefore originally what is free from bonds of any kind, whether of space or time, free from physical weakness, free from moral guilt. And thus, besides the mathematical Infinity, God Himself is the Infinite Unity. Zero or kham is the reciprocal of Infinity, an infinitesimality, and the soul, the lower self is also of infinitesimal dimensions.

The Yajurveda Samhita in one context describes the numerals, and Medhatithi is the ṛsi of this verse. (Yv.XVII.2)

> O Agni, may these bricks (istakas) be mine own milch kine: one; ten; ten-ten a hundred; ten hundred a thousand; ten thousands an ayuta; ten ayutas a niyuta; ten niyutas a prayuta; ten prayutas an arbuda; ten arbudas a nyarbuda; ten nyarbudas a samudra; ten samudras a madhya; ten madhyas an anta; ten antas a parardha. May these bricks be mine own dhenus (milch-kine) in yonder world and in this world.[1] (Yv. XVII.2)

1. इमा मेऽ अग्न इष्टका धेनवः सन्त्वेका च दश च दश च
शतं च शतं सहस्रं च सहस्रं चायुतं चायुतं च
नियुतं च नियुतं च प्रयुतं चार्बुदं च न्यर्बुदं च
समुद्रश्च मध्यं चान्तश्च परार्द्धश्चैता मेऽ अग्नऽ इष्टका
धेनवः सन्त्वमुष्मिंल्लोके । (Yv. XVII. 2)

The numeral parardha, on the basis of the successive multiples of tens is equal to 10^{12} (parardha is equal to an English billion or million-million). A parallel of this enumeration in world's literalure would not be easily found. The Vedic texts are very much fond of expressing great idea in terms of numerals (very often, mystically cryptic). In the Ṛgveda (II.18.4-6) we have numerals arranged in a definite order 2,4,6,8,20,30,40,50,60,70,80,90,100. We have in a certain context an enumeration of the series 4,5, 6,7,...19,20 in the Atharvaveda (XIX.23,1-17). The numerals from 1 to 17 are given in respect of mantras and stanzas in the Yajurveda (IX.31-34). The odd numerals, 1,3, 5...,33 are mentioned in Yv.XIV.28-31 and XVIII.24. The multiples of four are given in Yv.XVIII.24. The very first verse of the Atharvaveda refers to all types of combination from three and seven (trisaptah) or triple-seven (i. e. $3+7=10$; $3\times7=21$, $3+5+7$ (odds from three to seven and their sum$=15$.

$$\text{Triple seven}=(3+7)[(3\times7)+(3+5+7)]=10(21+15)$$

The term 360 is so important in a cycle of 360 degree, or a year of 360 days.

The names of the Vedic numerals have been etymologically explained by Yaska in Niruka[1]. (III. 10)

Basis of Geometry

The Vedic texts refer to three terms, ahavaniya (आहवनीय), garhapatya (गार्हपत्य), and daksina (दक्षिण), which, when fire-rituals became current in the society, were used for three types of fire-altars.[2] In the Yajnika (eccle-

1. एका इता संख्या । द्वौ द्रुवतरा संख्या । त्रयस्तीर्णतमा संख्या । चत्वारश्चलिततमा संख्या । अष्टौ अश्नोतेः । नव च वननीया, न अवाप्ता वा । (Nir. III. 10)
2. सोदक्रामत् सा गार्हपत्ये न्यक्रामत् (2) सोदक्रामत् साहवनीये न्यक्रामत् (4) सोदक्रामत् सा दक्षिणाग्नौ न्यक्रामत् (6) । (Av. VIII. 10. 2, 4, 6)
गार्हपत्येन सन्त्य ऋतुना यज्ञनीरसि । (Ṛv. I. 15. 12)
अस्मिन् गृहे गार्हपत्याय जागृहि । (Ṛv. X. 85. 2)

siastical) period, elaborate details were worked out for these fire-altars. The ahavaniya (eastern fire) was the altar square in form. The garhapatya (domestic fire) was circular and the daksinagni (southern fire) was assigned the semi-circular form. As the time passed on, a few postulates were advanced, e. g. (i) the surface area (A) of the altar should have a relation with the height (p) of the sacrificer (the yajamana), standing erect with arms stretched straight over the head; this unit of measurement was known to be a purusa; i. e. A=c.p. where c is a constant (a multiple or submultiple of the height of the yajamana); (ii) it is to the option of the sacrificer to construct the fire altar with square surface, or circular, but the area (A) in both the options should remain the same. It is easier to construct a square with the area A, but it becomes a geometric problem to construct a circle having the area A. In this context, the old Vedic geometers worked out a relation between the sides of a square (also of a rectangle) and its diagonal (Baudhayana Theorem), relation between the diameter of a circle and its circumference (value of π—pi) and area of a circle and its diameter. The authors of the Sutras have given the details of the constructions of the fire altars (the Manava Sulba Sutra, the Baudhayana Sulba Sutra, the Apastamba Sulba Sutra and the Katyayana Sulba Sutra). The units of various types of measurements laid the foundation of metrology in the Vedic age. The inspirations for metrology and geometry were drawn from several Vedic verses.[1]

Mechanical and Engineering Devices

The Vedic verses inspired the earliest human society for mechanical devices. The primitive mechanical devices must have been very simple, but by and by, these devices evolved

1. सहस्रस्य प्रमासि सहस्रस्य प्रतिमासि सहस्रस्योन्मासि
साहस्रोऽसि सहस्राय त्वा । (Yv. XV. 65)
शं न सोमो भवतु शं नः शं नो ग्रावाणः शमु सन्तु यज्ञाः ।
शं न स्वरूणां मितयो भवन्तु शं नः प्रस्वः शम्वस्तु वेदिः । (Ṛv. VII. 35. 7)
कासीत् प्रमा प्रतिमा किं निदानमाज्यं किमासीत् परिधिः क आसीत् ।
छन्दः किमासीत् प्र उगं किमुक्थं यद्देवा देवमयजन्त विश्वे ॥ (Ṛv. X. 130. 3)

out to huge dimensions to serve technology in human history. Man differs from ape in the fact that he not only depends on his manual labour, he has invented machines in the history of his civilization and culture. The Vedas fairly and extensively refer to this mechanization. The Ṛgveda refers to a simple churning device for the generation of fire by the process of attrition, the adhimantha (अधिमन्थ),[1] and inspired by this verse, Visvamitra was the first man in human history to have introduced this mechanism for the quick generation of fire. The whole clan of Angirasas specialized in this art of churning fire through wood sticks. Of course, Atharvan was the first person who made the discovery of fire at the dawn of the human civilization, and therefore, he becomes the ṛsi of most of those verses which are associated with the introduction of fire. Mayobhuh and Gṛtsamada also took interest in the advancement of the fire-culture. (Yv.XI.21;22;28).

The introduction of fire-rituals provided a great impetus to the development of primitive mechanical devices. The bricks, known as istakas (Yv.XII.21; 31; XVII.2; XXXV.8) were first used for the construction of fire-altars, and later on they found their application in the construction of buildings. The Sulba Sutras give details of these bricks and their dimensions (the bricks were fire-burnt, not burnt, the perforated ones and so on). The receptacle for the sacred fire was known as Agni-dhana (अग्निधान) Ṛv.X. 165.3; Av. VI.27.3;XII.3.35): ladles and cups were known as sruk (स्रुक) and camcs (चमस्); reservoirs or vats were known as dronakalasa (द्रोण कलश), the pressing stones were known as gravana (ग्रावाण), pressing boards were adhisavana (अधिषवण); and besides these we have[2],

Idhma (kindling wood) — इध्म
Barhi (strew) — बर्हि
Dhṛsti or upavesa (shovelling stick) — धृष्टि, उपवेश
Sva-rava, Upa-rava (sounding holes) — स्वरव, उपरव
Havirdhana (oblation holder) — हविर्धान

1. अस्तीदमधिमन्थनमस्ति प्रजननं कृतम् । (Ṛv. III. 29. 1)
2. Yv. XVIII. 20-21; XX. 27: Av. II. 31. 1; XII. 3. 19. IX. 6 (1). 12-17; X. 9. 26.

Parisasa (lifting sticks)	—	परीशस
Vayavya (cups and bowls)	—	वायव्य
Sata (basket)	—	सत
Kumbhi (jar)	—	कुम्भी
Sthali (cooking pot)	—	स्थाली
Dṛsad (milk stone)	—	दृषद्
Ulukhala, khalva (grinding slate)	—	उलूखल, खल्व
Musala (pestle)	—	मुशल
Surpa (winnowing basket)	—	शूर्प
Titau (sieve)	—	तितउ
Tarhana (bruiser)	—	तर्हण
Carma or Kṛsnajina (skin or antelope's skin)	—	चर्म, कृष्णाजिन
Putabhṛta (receiver of filtrate)	—	पूतभृत
Pavitra (strainer)	—	पवित्रा
Pinvan (milking bowl)	—	पिन्वन

The society was inspired for the numerous mechanical devices too; as anas (अनस्) cart (Ṛv. III.33.9); abhri (अभ्रि) spade (Yv. XI. 10); asi (असि) knife or razor (Ṛv. X. 86.18); asandi (आसन्दी) chair or throne (Yv. XIX. 16); itsuna (इट्सून) mat; isu (इषु) arrow; ukha (उखा) cauldron (Yv. XI. 61); kalasa (कलश), vat or beaker (Yv. VII. 42; Av. IX. 1.6); kasipu (कशिपु), or cushion of reeds (Av. VI. 138.5); kasipu up-barhana (कशिपु उपबर्हण), or pillow-covering (Av. IX. 6.10); Uparisayana (उपरिशयन), or coverlet[1] (Av. IX. 6.9); ksura (क्षुर), razor (Av. VI. 68.1; Ṛv. I. 166.10.) khanitra (खनित्र) digging implement (Ṛv. I. 179.6); graha (ग्रह) cups and ladles (Yv. XVII. 19-20); jaya (जया) arrow-string (Av. III. 19.8); tantra (तंत्र) loom or warp (Ṛv. X. 71.9); tantu (तन्तु) thread (Ṛv. X. 134.5); tantu-metam (तन्तुमेतम्) or outspun thread (Yv.XV. 53); mayukha (मयूख), peg or pin for weaving tasara (तसर) or trasara (त्रसर), shuttle for weaving[1] (Ṛv. X. 130.2); Dama (दाम),

1. The whole hymn Av. IX.6 is devoted to the entertainment of a guest, and mentions the details of furnishing a guest room.

2. The whole sukta refers to the cosmic weaving, and indirectly refers to the weaving art of cloth.

यो यज्ञो विश्वतस्तन्तुभिस्तत एकशतं देवकर्मभिरायतः ।

string or thread (V. 36.1; I. 162.8) also rajju (रज्जु) (or rope), rasana (रशना) rein or bridle, Samdana (संदान), bond or halter for horses or coursers.[1] (Ṛv. I. 162.8)

Carts, Ships and Aeroplanes

The Vedic verses have metaphorical and non-metaphorical references to roadways, waterways and air-ways. The architects who specialize in these three lines were known. The road-carts drawn by horses are devised and constructed by vajins (वाजिन्) : vajins, you are borne by stout horses or coursers[2] mounted on a brilliant car.[3] Vaja is related to the Visvedevah (all-gods), ṛbhu (ऋभु), or ṛbhuksin (ऋभुक्षिन्), to Indra (dealing with space-crafts) and vibhu (विभु), or vibhvan (विभ्वन) to Varuna (dealing with waterships).[4] (Ṛv. IV. 33.9) Ṛbhus are said to construct the firm-abiding, wheel conducting car[5] (Ṛv. IV. 33.8). The car made by them traverses the firmament without horses, without reins (Ṛv. IV. 36.I).[6] This description may be merely metaphorical and be referring to stars, or suns or heavenly bodies moving with tremendous speed in space.

The water-ships are known as nava (नाव). We have :

पुमां एनं तनुत उत्कृणत्ति पुमान् वितत्ने अधि नाके अस्मिन् ।
इमे मयूखा उपसेदुरू सदः सामानि चक्रुस्तसराण्योतवे ॥

The sacrifice which is extended on every side by the threads spread out by the worship of the gods for hundred and one years, these our progenitors, who have preceded us, weave it, weaving forwards, weaving backwards, they worship when the world is woven. (1).

The first man spreads out this (web), the first man rolls it up : he spreads it above in this heaven; these his rays have sat down on the seat (of sacrifice); they have made prayers serve as shuttles for weaving. (2).

1. यद् वाजिनो दाम संदानमर्वतो या शीर्ष्ण्या रशना रज्जुरस्य । (Ṛv. VI. 162. 8)
2. पीवो अश्वः शुचद् रथा हि भूताऽयः शिप्रा वाजिनः सुनिष्काः । (Ṛv. IV. 37.4)
3. तद् वो वाजा ऋभवः सुप्रवचनं देवेषु विभ्वो अभवन्महित्वम् । (Ṛv. IV. 36. 3)
4. वाजो देवानामभवत् सुकर्मेन्द्रस्य ऋभुक्षां वरुणस्य विभ्वा । (Ṛv. IV 33. 9)
   (Vaja of All- gods, ṛbhu of Indra, vibhu of Varuna.)
5. रथं ये चक्रुः सुवृतं नरेष्ठां ये धेनुं विश्वजुवं विश्वरूपाम् ।
   त आ तक्षन्त्वृभवो रयिं नः स्ववसः स्वपसः सुहस्ताः ॥ (Ṛv. IV.33.8)
6. अनश्वो जातो अनभीशुरुक्थ्यो रथस्त्रिचक्रः परिवर्तते रजः । (Ṛv. IV. 36.1)

> Come as on ship, to bear us over an ocean of praises; harness, Asvins, your car.[1] (I. 46.7)

Another metaphorical description of a ship is on these lines :

> Three nights and three days, Nasatyas, have you conveyed Bhujyu, in three rapid, revolving cars, having one hundred wheels and drawn by six horses, along the dry bed of the ocean to the shore of sea.[2] (Ṛv. I. 116.4).

The Vedas are thus not only the religious scriptures in the usual narrow sense; they deal with a subject matter which covers the problems of our life in totality, and this literature has been inspiring our history from remote times, and shall continue to promote our culture and civilization in all the years to come.

THE SAMHITAS

The Veda Pratisthana Trust of New Delhi, set up in memory of the late Padma Bhushan Col. Ved Rattan Mohan, has undertaken the venture of presenting a readable translation of all the four Vedas, the Ṛgveda, the Yajurveda, the Samaveda and the Atharvaveda. The Ṛgveda consists of metrical hymns called suktas, associated with the traditionally assigned devatas, and the ṛsis. In one and the same hymn, there may be different devatas and different ṛsis for different verses (mantra). We are indebted to the authors of the Anukramanikas or the Indexes, who have traditionally preserved a list of the devatas and ṛsis of these hymns or stanzas. The Anukramanikas are available for all the four Vedas. There are in the Veda itself, no directions as regards to the use and application of the verses (mantras), or of the part of the stanzas; a direction as to this respect is called the viniyoga (विनियोग) which indicates the occasions on which these verses are to be recited. These viniyogas, whilst they indicate a reverential attitude of the priests towards the divine texts, occasionally have done more harm than any good in representing and preserving the true spirit of the Vedic verses. The Yajurveda has been traditionally much more used for ritualistical or liturgical purposes than any other Veda. The Samaveda verses are traditionally chanted on different ceremonial occasions. In its massive character, the Atharvaveda comes next to the Ṛgveda. In a formal sacrifice, hotṛ (होतृ) priest recites the Ṛk verses, Adhvaryu (अध्वर्यु) the Yajus formulae, udgata (उद्गाता) chants the Samans, brahma (ब्रह्मा) supervises the entire ceremony.

Ṛgveda Samhita,—In the Ṛgveda, the number of hymns (सूक्त) is 1,028, containing in all 10,589 verses : they have been arranged in two sorts of classifications; one divides them amongst eight khandas (portions, खंड) or more popularly called astakas (eighths, अष्टक); each of which is again divided into eight adhyayas (lectures, अध्याय). The other plan classes the hymns under ten mandalas, (books or circles, मण्डल) subdivided into 85 anuvakas (sub-sections अनुवाक). There is a further subdivision of hymns into vargas (total 2424) or paragraphs of about five stanzas each, and this subdivision into vargas (वर्ग) is common to both classifications. The hymns are of various extent : in one instance the hymn consists of a single verse (e.g.I.99); hymn 164 of the first book has, on the other hand, as many as 52 verses; hymn 16 of the sixth book has 48 verses; and so are VIII. 6 (48 verses); IX.97 (58 verses); and X.85 (47 vereses).

There has been a difference of opinion in respect to the total number of verses in the Ṛgveda. We are told that there were in all 21 Samhitas (संहिता) or redactions of the Ṛg verses according to different schools or sakhas (branches), but with the exception of the present one, none else is now available; and in the case of the present one also, no two authorities seem to agree with each other as to the total number :

Authority	Total Number of verses
Anuvakanukramani of Saunaka	10,580+one quarter
Chanda-Samkhya Parisista	10,402
Ṛk-sarvanukramani, Tr. Jagannatha	10,552
Caranavyuha, Tr. Mahidasa	10,552 (with Balakhilya)
do	10,472 (without Balakhilya)
Venkatamadhava	10,402
do	10,480 (according to dvipada)
Dayananda	10,589 and 10,521
Macdonald	10,442
do	10,569 (according to dvipada)
Satyavrata Samasrami	10,522

We are also told (Satapatha Brahmana X.4.2.23) that the total number of letters in the Vedas amount to the number of syallables in 12,000 bṛhati metres (i.e.12,000 x 36=432,000); probably this is the total number of letters in entire verses (not prose) of the four Vedas. In the Ṛgveda, there are several such verses which may be reckoned as either consisting of two lines each (dvipada, द्विपदा) or as four lines each (catuspada, चतुष्पदा). In all, in the Ṛgveda, there are 157 dvipadas, of which 17 are really dvipadas, the rest 140 may sometimes be reckoned as dvipadas and sometimes as catuspadas. This explains for a difference of 70 whilst giving the total number of the verses. Of course, it is the way of reckoning that explains the difference. It has been one of the wonders of human ingenuity, that the Vedic verses could be preserved through all these ages (thousands of years) with all necessary accents and syllables, not one missing, all in its right place with its full significance, not through the written manuscripts, but through the oral chants, traditionally handed over to posterity through generations.

Yajurveda Samhita-The Yajurveda has in all 1975 verses spread over forty chapters known as adhyaya (अध्याय). The biggest chapter is twelfth with 117 verses, and then the following : XVII (99); XXXIV (98); XXXIII (97); XIX (95); XX (90); XI (83); the shortest chapter is XXXIX with 13 verses followed by XXXII (16), and XL (17). Some of the verses of the Yajurveda give the pratikas (first words, प्रतीक) of some other verses occurring elsewhere (perhaps these verses were to be repeated in certain rituals). For example :

1. न तस्य प्रतिमा अस्ति यस्य नाम महद्यशः ।
   हिरण्यगर्भ इत्येष, मा मा हि९ सीदित्येषा यस्मान्न जात इत्येषः ॥

(Yv. XXXII. 3)

Here the indication is that the verses beginning with pratikas हिरण्यगर्भ० (XXV. 10-13); मा मा हि९सीद्० (XII.102) and यस्मान्न जातः० (VIII. 36-37) are to be repeated.

2. यं क्रन्दसीऽ अवसा तस्तभानेऽ अभ्यैक्षेतां मनमा रेजमाने ।
यत्राधि सूरऽउदितो विभाति कस्मै देवाय हविषा विधेम ॥
आपो ह यद् बृहतीयश्चिदापः । (Yv. XXXII. 7)

Here the verses to be repeated are the ones beginning with the pratikas आपो ह यद् बृहती० (XXVII.25) and यश्चिदापः० (XXVII. 26).

Similarly, we have the pratikas appended to the verses XXXIII. 21 (pratikas from VII.12 and 16); XXXIII.27. (pratikas appended VII.40 and VIII. 2-3); XXXIII. 33 (Pratikas appended VII. 12, 16 and 42); XXXIII. 47 (pratikas appended VII.12, 16, 19, 33 and XXXII. 10,34). These appended pratikas abound in chapters XXXII to XXXIV.

The Yajurveda Samhita is also known as the Vajasaneyi-Madhyandina Sukla Yajurveda or the white Yajurveda, since we have another text also available which is known as the Kṛsna Yajurveda (the Black Yajurveda) or the Taittiriya Samhita which in characteristics is more allied to a brahmana rather to a sruti. We have several recensions of both of them[1] and thus these Samhitas indicate the wide popularity of the Yajurveda in the country with a variety of textual differences and their usages in rituals.

Samaveda Samhita—The Samaveda or the Veda of Holy Songs ranks third in the usual order of enumeration of the Vedas, but in sanctity and liturgical importance it is next to the Ṛgveda. This Samhita consists chiefly of hymns to be chanted by the udgatṛ priests at the performance of those important sacrifices in which the juice of the Soma plant, clarified and mixed with milk and other ingredients was offered as libation on ceremonial occasions, and the Sama verses were recited even as such as devotional songs.

Ordinarily, the Samaveda appears to be a collection

1. There are two popular recensions of the White Yajurveda: the Madhyandin a (माध्यन्दिन) and the Kanva `(काण्व) ; and three of the Black Yajurveda : Kathaka (काठक) ; Kapisthala-Kath (कपिष्ठल-कठ) and Maitrayani (मैत्रायणी).

made up of hymns, portions of hymns, and detached verses, taken mainly from the Rgveda, transposed and rearranged without reference to their original order to suit the religious ceremonies in which they were to be employed. The Samaveda contains in all 1,875 verses, of which only 75 are not to be found in the Ṛgveda, whilst 1,800 are virtually the repetitions of the Ṛgvedic verses.

The verses of the Samaveda have been classified in a number of ways:

(a) According to one system, the whole text has been classified into two parts (arcikas), the Purvarcika (पूर्वार्चिक) and the Uttararcika (उत्तरार्चिक). The Purvarcika or Part I is divided into six prapathakas (प्रपाठक) or Books; then each prapathaka has been subdivided into two adhyayas (अध्याय) or chapters. Then each chapter or the adhyaya has been further subdivided into five dasatis (दशति) or decades of about ten verses each;—the last chapter (i.e. VI.2) has, however, only four dasatis. Thus, in Purvarcika, we have in all 6 prapathakas, ten adhyayas, 59 dasatis, and in all 585 verses.

In the Uttararcika or Part II, we have in all 9 books or prapathakas. The prapathakas I to V have 2 chapters or 2 adhyayas each, i. e. in all 10 chapters; the prapathakas VI to IX have, however, 3 chapters in each, totalling thus 12. In this way, the Uttararcika has in all 22 chapters. The number of dasatis in each chapter, and the verses are tabulated below :

Prapathaka (Books)	Adhyaya (Chapter)	Tric (Triads)	Mantras (Verses)
I	i	23	59 (62 ?)
	ii	22	62
II	i	19	55
	ii	19	56
III	i	22	69
	ii	23	76
IV	i	24	83
	ii	14	59
V	i	20	78 (80 ?)
	ii	23	94

IX	i	18	51
	iii	9	27
9	22	400	1,218 (1225 ?)

The Uttararcika mostly consists of triads (tric, त्रिच्), a hymn of 3 verses. Griffith in his translation of the Samaveda thus deals in all 585+1218=1803 verses. Other authorities have included in this list an Aranyaka Kanda of 55 mantras and the Mahanamnyarcika of 10 verses and more verses mid-between, and thus the total becomes 1875.

Purvarcika (पूर्वार्चिक) Serial No.	1-585 :	585 verses
Aranyaka Kanda (आरण्यक काण्ड)	586-640 :	55
Mahanamnyarcika (महानाम्न्यार्चिक)	641-650 :	10
Uttararcika (उत्तरार्चिक)	651-1875 :	1225

The Samaveda consists of the hymns of devotion. The following remarks of Griffith in connection with the Samaveda may be of some interest : "The collection is made up of hymns, portions of hymns, and detached verses, taken mainly from the Rgveda, transposed and rearranged, without reference to their original order, to suit the religious ceremonies in which they were to be employed. In these compiled hymns there are frequent variations of more or less importance, from the text of the Rgveda as we now possess it, which variations, although in some cases they are apparently explanatory, seem in others to be older and more original than the readings of the Rgveda. In singing, the verses are still further altered by prolongation, repetition and insertion of syllables, and various modulations, rests, and other modifications prescribed, for the guidance of the officiating priests, in the ganas (गान) or song-books. Two of these manuals, the grama-geya-gana, or congregational, and the aranya-gana or forest-song book, follow the order of the verses of Part I, of the Samhita and two others, the uhagana (ऊहगान) and the uhyagana (ऊह्यगान) of Part II. This part is less disjointed than Part I, and is generally arranged in triplets, whose first is often the repetition of a verse that has occurred in Part I.

Atharvaveda Samhita-The Atharvaveda is a collection of 5977 verses spread over twenty books :

Book	Verses	Book	Verses	Book	Verses	Book	Verses
I	153	VI	454	XI	313	XVI	103
II	207	VII	286	XII	304	XVII	30
III	230	VIII	293	XIII	188	XVIII	283
IV	324	IX	313	XIV	139	XIX	453
V	376	X	350	XV	220	XX	958
						Total	5977

The books are further divided into hymns and the hymns into ṛcs or verses. In some of the classifications, the division is into prapathaka (प्रपाठक) or 'Vor-lesungen' or 'lectures' (Whitney), anu-vakas (अनुवाक) or recitations, suktas (सूक्त) or hymns and ṛcs (ऋच्) or verses. The verses of the long hymns are also grouped into 'verse-decades' corresponding to the vargas (वर्ग) of the Ṛgveda. Besides these divisions, there are recognized also the divisions called artha-suktas (अर्थ सूक्त) or 'sense-hymns' and paryaya-suktas (पर्याय सूक्त) or 'period-hymns', and the subdivisions of the latter are called paryayas (पर्याय). In the Paryaya-hymns, the division into ganas (गण) or some times dandakas, (दण्डक) is recognized, and the verses are distinguished as avasana ṛcs (अवसान ऋच्) and ganavasana ṛcs (गणावसान ऋच्). We shall for convenience express our references in terms of kandas, suktas and ṛcs only.

A closer study of text reveals the fact that the first eighteen books fall into three grand divisions: (i) books I to VII contain the short hymns of miscellaneous subjects; (ii) books VIII to XII contain the long hymns of miscellaneous subjects; and (iii) books XIII to XVIII are characterized each by unity of subject.

We have said that some of the authorities prefer to divide the text of the Atharvaveda into prapathakas (lessons or lectures). There are thirty-four prapathakas, and they are numbered consecutively for the whole text so far as they go, that is, from book I to book XVIII. The prapathaka-division is not extended to books XIX and XX.

In the Atharvaveda, the anuvakas, literally, 'recitations' are sub-divisions of the individual book (kanda) and are numbered continuously through the book concerned. The number of anuvakas are as follows :

Kanda	Anuvakas	Kanda	Anuvakas	Kanda	Anuvakas	Kanda	Anuvakas
I	6	VI	13	XI	5	XVI	2
II	6	VII	10	XII	5	XVII	1
III	6	VIII	5	XIII	4	XVIIII	4
IV	8	IX	5	XIV	2
V	6	X	5	XV	2
						Total	95

We give below the summary of the Atharvan hymns and verses :

	Hymns	Verses
Grand Division I Books I-VII	433	2030
Grand Division II Books VIII-XII	45	1528
Grand Division III Books XIII-XVIII	38	874

OUR TEXT

We have taken all care to present to our reader a correct rendering of the Ṛgveda Samhita, and for this, we have accepted the text belonging to the Sakala Sakha (शाकल शाखा), named after a reputed teacher, Vedamitra or Sakalya (वेदमित्र or शाकल्य). In Prof. Max Müller's text, a few discrepancies have been noted by Satavalekar, for example, syandra (स्यन्द्रा) should invariably be read spandra (स्पन्द्रा) in the verses I.180.9; V.52.3;8;V.87.3;VI.12.5;X.42.5; and mathna (मथ्ना) in the verse I.181.5 should read as mathra (मथ्रा). In the whole of the Ṛgveda text, there is only one Pathabheda or the uncertainty of reading: either

ब्रध्नं मांश्चतोर्वरुणस्य बभ्रुं ।
(VII.44.3)

For our transliteration from devanagari to roman script for the Vedic Text, we have found it convenient to reproduce the entire text of Prof. Aufrecht, retaining his diacritical marks, which substantially differ from the present day standard ones. A list of his diacritical marks is as follows:

Vowels: अ (a); आ (ā); इ (i); ई (ī); उ (u); ऊ (ū); ऋ (ṛ) ऌ (lṛ); ए (e); ऐ (ai); ओ (o); औ (au);
anusvara (ṇ); ँ (ṅ)

Consonants:

क् (k); च् (c); ट् (ṭ); त् (t); प् (p);
ख् (kh); छ् (ch); ठ् (ṭh); थ् (th); फ् (ph);
ग् (g); ज् (j); ड् (ḍ); द् (d); ब् (b);
घ् (gh); झ् (jh); ढ् (ḍh); ध् (dh); भ् (bh);
ङ् (n̄); ञ् (ñ); ण् (ṇ); न् (n); म् (m);
य् (y); र् (r); ल् (l); व् (v);
श् (ṣ); स् (s); ष् (sh); ह् (h); Visarga : (ḥ).

Aufrecht in his transliteration has also given the udatta (उदात्त) accents by putting an apostrophe stroke (') on the vowel.

At the beginning of each hymn (sukta, सूक्त), we have given (i) the number of verses in the hymn, then the ṛsi of the hymn, followed by the devata (देवता) and the metre (chanda, छन्द). The subjects of ṛsi and metres have been dealt with in details in separate chapters.

For example, at the beginning of hymn I of Book I, we have in the devanagari script the legend :

The legend indicates that the hymn has nine verses, and ṛsi or seer (the historical figure who for the first time gave the inner meaning of these verses, also known as mantra-drasta, मन्त्र-द्रष्टा) of this entire hymn is Madhucchanda of the family of Visvamitra. The devata of the entire hymn is agni (अग्नि), and the metre is gayatri (गायत्री).

Seers—There are hundreds of ṛsis or seers (the Vedic scholars of the earliest age, the inspired persons) associated with the Ṛgvedic verses; they are our historical persons who worked hard on the interpretations of these verses. We do not know the biodata of these great teachers; only that we know is that Katyayana's Sarvanukramani (सर्वानुक्रमणी), a traditional index has carefully kept a record of some of these details. Another record that we possess is Anuvakanukramani (अनुवाकानुक्रमणी) of Saunakacarya, and also the Bṛhaddevata (बृहद् देवता) of Saunaka.

So far as the ṛsis are concerned, we have a very incomplete record :

(i) In some cases, the name of the ṛsi is known, as well as the family name.

(ii) In some cases, the name of the ṛsi is not known, but only the family is known; or vice versa.

(iii) In some cases, the name and the family, both are not known. In such cases :

(a) The hypothetical names have been suggested, depending on some special word occurring in the text; the ṛsi in such cases is not necessarily a living human being.

(b) In the case of dialogues, the one who speaks, that is, the one in whose mouth the words have been put, is the ṛsi.

(iv) In a few cases, we have ṛsikas (the female seers) also, as the interpreters of the verses.

Metres.—There are seven popular metres with their detailed sub-classifications; these metres are : gayatri (24) usnik (28), anustup (32), bṛhati (36), pankti (40), tristubh (44), and jagati (48). The numerals in the parenthesis indicate the number of syllables in that metre normally.

The Pingala Vedanga (पिंगल वेदांग) has associated these seven metres with seven svaras (स्वर) or tones of music :

gayatri-षड्ज. usnik-ऋषभ. anustup-गान्धार.
bṛhati-मध्यम. pankti-पंचम. tristubh-धैवत.
and jagati-निषाद.

Devata—The Nirukta of Yaska has given a detailed description of the Vedic devatas, and this subject has also been discussed by the author of the Bṛhaddevata. In the Nirukta, the chapter VII to XII constitute the Daivata Kanda, whereas the first six chapters belong to the Naigama Kanda. In the words of the Nirukta, the section which enumerates appellations of deities, to whom panegyrics are primarily addressed is called daivatam (दैवतम्). A particular verse or stanza is said to belong to a devata to whom a seer addresses his panegyrics with a particular desire and from whom he wishes to obtain his object. These verses are of three kinds: indirectly addressed, directly addressed and self-invocations.

Indirectly addressed: Nouns with verbs in the third person,e.g., Indra rules heaven, Indra the earth. (Ṛv. X. 89.10)

Directly addressed: Thou or a pronoun of the second person, e. g., O Indra, slay our enemies (Ṛv. X.152.4).

Self-invocations are few and far between. They are the compositions in the first person and are joined with the word 'I'; e.g., the hymns of Indra Vaikuntha (X.48;49), the hymns of Lava (X.119), and the hymns of Vak(X.125).

The word deity or the devata means the subject matter or the theme of the verse. These subjects on the physical plane would either concern the sphere of the Earth, with Agni as devata or the atmosphere with Vayu and Indra as devata, or the celestial sphere with Surya as devata. Thus there are, in fact, three deities only (Agni, Vayu or Indra, and Surya). They include all other deities. Similar to this, we shall have three such groups in non-physical realms (the mental and spiritual) too.

In the light of these deities, the Vedic verses can be interpreted on multiple planes: social plane, cosmic plane and mystic or spiritual plane. Sometimes we call these interpretations as adhibhautika (आधिभौतिक), adhidaivika (आधिदैविक) and adhyatmika (आध्यात्मिक). Dayananda has tried to interpret these verses on the social plane, and thus in his interpretation, agni may stand for a learned person, a leader of the society; indra would be a king or the officer commander of an army; soma would be a person of tran-quality, or a graduate of a spiritual academy; varuna would be a learned preacher or a teacher or a defence minister; savita would be a teacher or inspirer; pusan would be the sustainer of people and hence, may be the head of an administration; ṛbhu would be an architect, and marut the soldier of an army.

On the cosmic plane, the devatas are Nature's bounties; for example agni would mean fire, electricity or the sun; indra is the sun or electricity or lightning; soma is the medicinal plant or curative principle in any medicinal herb; it may be moon too; varuna is water, sea or cosmic plasma; mitra is vital breath; savita is the sun; visnu is the sun or yajna; pusan is the earth; ṛbhu, the rays of the sun and marut, the atmospheric wind.

On the spiritual or mystic plane, the same devatas will have other connotations. Aurobindo has his own fascinating system of mystic interpretation; on this plane, these terms stand for apellations of one and the same God, sometimes they refer to the soul, and so often to the mental behaviours or to different states of consciousness. When applied to God, agni is foremost adorable and omniscient Lord; indra is the resplendent Lord; soma is the Lord worthy of our affection and devotion; varuna is our Lord of justice, venerable and acceptable; savita is the creator Lord; visnu is the omnipresent Lord; pusan is the sustainer Lord; and marut is the vital breath.

Some of the devatas are used singly, some like asvins are in dual number; some of them are used in plurals as visvedevah, apah, rudrah, vasavah, adityah, etc., and some of them exist in pairs as mitra-varuna or indragni. The most important 32 devatas are enumerated below:

agni, indra, soma, varuna, mitra, savita, visnu, pusan, ṛbhavah (pl.), usa, marut, (pl.), gravana, devah or visvedevah (pl.), rudra, vayu, asvins (twins), apah (pl.) sarasvati, adityah (pl.), rudrah (pl.), vasavah (pl.), bṛahaspati, brahmanaspati, aryaman, indrani, apsarasah (pl.), mitra-varuna, indragni, indra-soma, indra-visnu, and indra-parvata.

COMMENTARIES ON THE VEDAS : PRE-SAYANA AND SAYANA SCHOOLS

The revealed knowledge, the Veda, is an integrated one. The tradition says, that in the most natural way, it was given to the First Group of Men. In this connection we have in the Bṛhadaranyaka Upanisad, the following passage :

> It is—as, from a fire laid with damp fuel, clouds of smoke separately issue forth, so, lo, verily, from this great Being (bhuta) has been breathed forth that which is the Ṛgveda, the Yajurveda, the Samaveda, (hymns) of the Atharvans and Angirasas, legend (itihasa), ancient lore (purana), sciences (vidya), mystic doctrines (upanisad), verses (sloka), aphorisms (sutra), explanations (anuvyakhyana), commentaries (vyakhyana), sacrifice, oblation, food, drink, this world and the other, and all beings. From it, indeed, have all these been breathed forth. (IV.5.11)

This passage is an elaboration as if of the two Brahma Sutras: जन्माद्यस्य यतः and शास्त्रयोनित्वात्, which ascribe Brahman to be the sole creator of the universe, and the prime origin of all true knowledge.

The Satapatha and the Aitareya Brahmanas have also expressed the same sentiments in respect to the revelation of the Vedas :

(i) एवं वा अरेऽस्य महतो भूतस्य निःश्वसितं एतद् यद्
ऋग्वेद यजुर्वेदः सामवेदोऽथर्वांगिरसः (SBr. XIV. 5.4.10.)

From that Great Entity have been breathed out the Ṛgveda, the Yajurveda, the Samaveda and the Atharvaveda.

(ii) For the first three Vedas, the media of revelation have been the inspired sages Agni, Vayu and Aditya:

> अग्नेऋँग्वेद वायोर्यजुवेद : सूर्यात् सामदेद : ।
> ऋग्वेद एव अग्नेरजायत, यजुर्वेद वायो : सामवेद आदित्यात् (AiBr.XXV.7)

The first group of men, the group of seers, could understand and comprehend the Divine Word in the most natural way, but by and by, it became necessary to instruct the subsequent generations as to the mysteries and meanings of the Vadic Texts. This elaboration was not the verbal translation but an elucidation in the form that has been preserved to this day for us in the Brahmanas, the Aranyakas, the Upanisads and the elaborate systems of Indian philosophy.

Thus the Brahmanas, the Aranyakas, similarly the Sakha or branches of the Vedas, 1127 in number according to Indian tradition, the Vedangas, the Upangas and the Upavedas are in a way the exposition of the Vedic thoughts. In this context, Dayananda writes in his celebrated book, the Ṛgvedadi-bhasya-bhumika :

> The four Vedas have an inherent authority inasmuch as being the word of God, who is omniscient, omnipotent, and the possessor of universal learning, there can be no error, or shortcoming in them. The Vedas are to be considered their own authority like the sun or the lamp. As the sun and the lamp shining with their own light make all other physical objects visible, so the Vedas, too, shining with their own light make the other books of knowledge shine. The books which are opposed to the Vedas ought never to be accepted as authoritative. But the Vedas do not lose their authority even if they are opposed to other books because they are self-authoritative, and other books depend for their authority on them.
> The mantra or the samhita portion alone of the four Vedas is self-authoritative. The Brahmanas, being > only the commentaries on the Vedas, are authoritative only in so far as they are in agreement with them. Similarly, the 1127 branches of the Vedas also are of authority only in so far as they agree with them, because they too are only the glosses of the Vedas. The same may be said of the angas (limbs) of the Vedas: viz. orthoepy (siksa), grammar (vyakarana), etymology (nirukta), prosody (chanda), and astronomy (jyotis). The four upavedas, viz. the ayurveda or the medical science, the dhanurveda, the science of weapons, the gandharva-veda or the science of music (and aesthetics), and the arthaveda, or the science of technology, and production of wealth and its distribution, are in the same category.

As a prelude to his commentary, Dayananda further says in the same book, Ṛgvedadi-bhasya-bhumika :

> In the Vedic Commentary, we shall refer to the operational part only in so far as it will be deducible from the meaning of the word alone. We shall not, however, give a detailed description of the viniyogas, or the directions which ought to be followed whilst performing various yajnas, from the agnihotra to the asvamedha, according to the Vedic verses. The reason is that the true application (viniyoga) of the verses, in reference to operations are given in the Aitareya and Satapatha Brahmanas, and also the Purva-Mimamsa, and the Srauta Sutras etc. Their repetition shall disfigure this Commentary with the faults of tautological repetition and "grinding of the ground meal"; such faults are met with in non-ṛsi-written literature. Only so much the application of mantras to action-portion (i. e. the viniyoga) is to be accepted as has the authority of the Vedas at its back, is deducible from the meaning of the Vedic verses and is contained in the works mentioned above. In the same way we shall describe the worship-portion (upasana) also only in so far as it would be consistent with the context and the meanings of > words, the reason being that it has been dealt with in detail in Patanjali's Yoga Sutras. We shall adopt the same method in dealing with the spirituality or metaphysical portion because it has been fully treated of in the Samkhya, the Vedanta and the Upanisads.

In fact, according to Dayananda, the ancient treatises of the Vedic times were merely an elaboration, and in some respects, thus, the commentaries of the Vedic Texts which constitute the divine knowledge.

It is difficult to assign any date to the Vedas revealed; it is difficult to say when they were brought to the written form; it is again equally difficult to say, when they were edited and arranged under different heads and sub-heads (samhitikarana) of which several classifications are available at present. It is a wonder that they could be preserved and are made available to us against all hazards of time and adverse circumstances. The entire credit goes to a group of people who took all care towards accuracy and precision, and traditionally handed over the entire treasure to their successive generations.

We do not know whether formal commentaries were ever deemed to be necessary. In the Nighantu and the Nirkuta of Yaska, we have an indication of general principles of interpretation. Undoubtedly, Yaska's field of acquaintançe was very wide; in his Nirukta, he quotes from all the four Vedas and their pada-pathas, the Taittiriya Samhita, Maitrayani Samhita, the Kathaka Samhita, the Aitareya Brahmana, the Satapatha Brahmana, the Gopatha Brahmana, the Kausitaki Brahmana, the Sadvimsa Brahmana, the Taittiriya Brahmana, the DaivataBrahmana, the Pratisakhyas and sometimes from the Upanisads and Aranyakas also. Again, in his treatise, he refers to and quotes the opinions of the various schools of thought prevalent in his times,—the school of etymologists, the school of grammarians and the schools of ritualists, legendists and naidanas (para-etymologists), and very often he criticizes the views of his predecessors and contemporaries :

Agrayana (आग्रयण), Agrayana (आग्रायण), Acaryah, Eke (some one), Aitihasikah, Audumbarayana, Aupamanyava, Aurnavabha Kathaka, Katthakya, Kautsa, Kraustuki, Gargya, Galava, Carmasiras, Taitiki, Duhitṛ-dayadya, Naidanah, Nairuktah, Parivrajakah, Purve yajnikah, Brahmana, Yajnikah, Varsyayani, Vaiyakaranah, Satabalaksa, Sakatayana, Sakapuni, Sakalya, Sthaulasthivi, Haridravika.

Besides the schools of etymologists, we had in our history the schools of grammarians to assist scholars in interpreting the Vedic verses. Panini's Astadhyayi, and Patanjali's Great Commentary on it, known as the Mahabhasya, deal with the laukika (common Sanskrit) and the Vedic Sanskrit both. In his Sabdanusasanam, Panini mentions no less than ten sabdikas (or etymologists or linguists) : Apisali, Kasyapa, Gargya, Galava, Cakravarman, Bharadvaja, Sakatayana, Sakalya, Senaka, and Sphotayana. There is a further mention of about 16 scholars at other places : Siva or Mahesvara, Bṛhaspati, Indra, Vayu, Bharadvaja, Bhaguri, Pauskarasadi, Carayana, Kasakṛtsna, Santanu, Vaiyaghrapadya, Madhyandini, Raudhi, Saunaki, Gotama and Vyadi.

The rules of determining the pada-patha and *krama-patha of the Vedic verses have been clearly dealt with in the pratisakhyas of which the following are available these days :

*By Pada-patha is meant arranging each word of a Mantra separately without regards to the rules of sandhi (euphonic combinaton).

Krama-patha* or krama-reading is a peculiar 'step-by-step' arrangement of a Vedic Text made to secure it from all possible error, by as it were, combinining the samhita-patha and the Pada-patha, i. e. by giving the words both as connected and unconnected with following and preceding words. We give here an example:

Samhita patha–ओषधयः संवदन्ते सोमेन सह राज्ञा ।

Pada Patha–ओषधयः । सं । वदन्ते । सोमेन । सह । राज्ञा ।

Krama Patha–ओषधयः सं । सं वदन्ते । वदन्ते सोमेन ।

सोमेन सह । सह राज्ञा । राजेति राज्ञा ।

(i) the Ṛk-pratisakhya by Saunaka,
(ii) the Vajaseneya-pratisakhya by Katyayana,
(iii) the Sama-pratisakhya by Vararuci,
(iv) the Atharva-pratisakhya,
(v) the Taittiriya- pratisakhya, and
(vi) the Maitrayaniya-pratisakhya.

There is a mention of something like four other Pratisakhyas in our literature, but they appear to be obsolete now.

For many centuries after the attempts of the grammarians, etymologists, naidanikas and the authors of the Pratisakhyas, it had never been deemed necessary to write down the systematic comentaries of the Vedas. The present day available commentaries may be classified under the following heads :

(1) Pre-Sayana commentaries
(2) Commentary of Sayana, and the commentaries of this school,
(3) Commentaries by Western scholars,
(4) Commentaries by Dayananda,
(5) Post-Dayananda Commentaries.

Pre-Sayana Scholiasts.—Scholiasts of the pre-Sayana period are Skandasvamin, Udgitha and Venkata Madhava. The Vishveshvaranand Vedic Rescarch Institute, Hoshiarpur undertook upon itself the arduous task of editing and publishing the Samhita, and the pada-patha's of the Ṛgveda along with critical editions of the commentaries on it by the three famous scholiasts, Skandasvamin, Udgitha and Venkata-Madhava and also, of the Summary by Mudgala of the commentary by Sayana, which, as has been claimed by the editors, practically, extracted the entire body of the latter except the details of ritualistic application (technically known as viniyoga) and grammar.

Not much is known about Skandasvami. From the colophon appended at the close of adhyayas in each astaka (given in the form of a couplet), it appears that he was a resident of some place known as "Valabhi" and his father's name was Bhartṛdhruva. Bhagavat Dutta has assigned 630 A.D. as the date for his work. The commentary of Skandasvami is available on the following books and hymns :

From I.1.1 to I.56.1; I.62.1 to I.121.15; V.57.1 to V.61.19; VI.29.1 to VI.75.6

The commentary of Udgitha is available for the portions: from X.5.4 to X.12.5; X.13.2 to X.83.6.

Venkata Madhava's commentary is very brief, but is complete, that is, from I.1.1 to X.191.4.

Mudgala's vṛtti is from I.1.1 to I.121.15; V.9.1 to VI.9.6. It is so gratifying to note that all these commentaries have been consolidated and published by Vishva Bandhu of the Vishveshvaranand Vedic Research Institute, Hoshiarpur. (1965-1966).

Skandasvami's commentary was also published in fragments from other sources earlier : Sambasiva Sastri's Trivandrum Edition; C. Kunhan Raja's Madras Edition.

Skandasvami belongs to the ritualistic school of Hinduism. In the beginning of his commentary on the very first verse (I.1.1.) he prays to Ganapati Vighnesa, the Elephant-god. Then he says, that the Vedic verses are of five kinds :

(i) Praisah (प्रैषाः), pertaining to summon, e.g., a priest is called upon to commence the ceremony. (दैव्याः शमितार आरभध्वम्, AiBr. II.6).

(ii) Karanah (करणाः), pertaining to an action. (इदमहमर्वावसोः सदने सीदामि, SBr. I.5.1.24)

(iii) Kriyamananuvadinah (क्रियमाणानुवादिनः), something spoken after the action accomplished. (युवा सुवासाः Ṛv. III.8.4).

(iv) Sastrabhistavanadigatah (शस्त्राभिष्टवनादिगताः), pertaining to praises of weapons etc. (आ त्वा रथं यथोतये, Ṛv. VIII. 68. 1).

(v) Japanuvacandigatah (जपानुवचनादिगताः), pertaining to sacred repetitions etc. तदद्य वाचं प्रथमं मसीय, Ṛv. X. 53.4; (आपो रेवतीः, Ṛv. X.30.12)

Skandasvami maintains that in all the five cases, one should not only pronounce the verses without understanding the meaning, he should know the contents of the verse also. This is the justification of writing down a commentary.

Venkata Madhava was the son of Venkatarya, as he says in the very opening lines of the couplets attached to the commentary : (श्री वेंकटार्यंतनयो व्याचिकीर्षति माघवः); in the couplet given as a colophon at the end of several chapters, he calls himself as सुन्दरीसुनः (विश्वामित्र कुले जानः माधवः सुन्दरीसुतः), (colophon at the end of chapter 3 of astaka I). Madhava belonged to the family of Visvamitra, कौशिकानां कुले (astaka I, chapter I ; गाधिनिः माधवो नाम, (astaka I, chapter 2); अष्टकस्य कुले जातो, (astaka I, chapter 4); लोहितस्य कुले जातो (astaka I, chapter 5).

Perhaps his mother was Sundari, belonging to the Gotra of Vasistha. Lakshman Swarup has placed Madhava in the Tenth Century, and Bhagvat Datta between Samvat 1100 and 1200 Vikrami.

At the beginning of each chapter, Madhava has given his karikas containing several slokas, in which he has outlined the details of ṛsis, devatas, metres and other specifications. He has quoted in his writings from Katyayana's Sarvanukramani, the Nighantu, the Nirukta and the Bṛhaddevata.

All these commentators have followed the yajnika or ritualistic concepts in their commentaries. Anandatirtha was a great devotee of Narayana (God), and he belonged to the period 1198-1270. He has interpreted the word agni in the first verse (Ṛv. I.1.1.) as representing the adorable Lord.

SAYANA AND HIS COMMENTARIES.

Sayana easily ranks with some of our best scholiasts of classics, particularly Vedic. He was born in 1315 A. D. and died at the age of seventy-two in 1387. The colophon given at the end of the first astaka of the Ṛgveda commentary, known as the Madhaviya Vedartha-Prakasa, reads as follows :

इति श्रीमद् राजाधिराज परमेश्वर वैदिक मार्ग प्रवर्तक श्री वीरबुक्क भूपाल साम्राज्य धुरन्धरेण सायणाचार्येण विरचिते माधवीय वेदार्थ प्रकाश ऋक्-संहिता-भाष्ये प्रथमाष्टकेऽष्टमोऽध्याय: समाप्त: ।

This clearly shows that he was occupying a high rank in the kingdom of Bukka of the Vijayanagar State (South India). We also hear that he served as the Prime Minister in the kingdom of Kampana, the younger brother of Harihar. He was an Andhra Brahmin of Bharadvaja Gotra and Bodhayana Sutra. His family traditions belonged to the school of the Kṛsna Yajurveda (the Taittiriya Samhita), and the family was known for scholarship since several generations. We are told that his father's name was Mayana, and mother's name Srimati; His elder brother Madhava is equally reputed for deep learning; he was the preceptor of the Purva and Uttara Mimamsas both. Sayana's younger brother Bhoganatha was a reputed poet. Sayana himself was the disciple of Vidyatirtha, Bharatitirtha and Sri-Kanthacarya., associated with Sṛngeri Matha, which had received the Royal patronage of Harihar Bukka. Harihara I laid the foundations of his kingdom (1335 A. D.) on theocratic concepts, and he had therefore, taken Madhava and Sayana both in his Ministry. As we have said before, Sayana had worked earlier as Prime Minister to the Mandaladhisa Prince Kampana of Nellore Kuthappa, who knew that Sayana was not only a first rank scholar, he had military talents too. Kampana, however, died soon, and Sayana had to take care of the child prince Sangama also. When Sangama became major and matured, Prince Bukka took Sayana in his Ministry. Prince Bukka was very much interested in the Vedic lore, and he made Sayana incharge of the Veda Commentary project, which Sayana gladly accepted and accomplished with skill in collaboration with a band of scholars appointed for the purpose. Sayana has expressed his obligations to Prince Bukka in the opening verses of the commentary on the Ṛgveda.

After the death of Bukka, his son Harihara II became the head of the State. Under Harihara's patronage Sayana completed his commentary on the Atharvaveda; this has been acknowledged by Sayana in this commentary cn the Atharvaveda.

Sayana was a Brahmin belonging to the branch of the Taittiriya Samhita, and therefore, at the first instance, he took up the Kṛṣna Yajurveda for his commentary. The work was followed by his commentaries on the Ṛgveda Samhita, and the Atharvaveda Samhita. These Vedic commentaries were followed by his commentaries on the Taittiriya Brahmana, the Taittiriya Aranyaka, the Aitareya Brahmana and the Aitareya Aranyaka, the Satapatha Brahmana, the Tandya Brahmana, the Sadvimsa Brahmana, the Samavidhana Brahmana, the Arseya Brahmana, the Devatadhyaya Brahmana, the Upanisad Brahmana, the Samhitopanisad Brahmana, and the Vamsa Brahmana.

WESTERN TRANSLATORS AND COMMENTATORS

Under the liberal patonage of Court of Directors of the East India Company, Professor Dr. F. Max Müller undertook his valuable edition of the Ṛgveda. Professor Max Müller speaks of the Vedas thus:

> "What can be more tedious than the Veda, and yet what can be more interesting, if once we know that it is the first word spoken by the Aryan Man ?
> "The Veda has a twofold interest : it belongs to the history of the world and to the history of India...As long as man continues to take an interest in the history of his race, and as long as we collect in libraries and museums the relics of former ages, the first place in that long row of books which contains the records of the Aryan branch of mankind, will belong for ever to the Ṛgveda."

It would be difficult to say who for the first time introduced the Vedas to the Western public. Wilson, in Introduction to the translation of the Ṛgveda, refers to the translation of the first astaka, Ogdoad, or eighth book of the Ṛgveda in English by the Rev. Mr. Stevenson and Dr. Roer, and fully in Latin by late Dr. Rosen; a translation in French, also, by M. Langlois, extending through four astakas or half the Veda was also published at Paris. The earliest publication, the work of Rev. Mr. Stevenson, extends only to the first three hymns of the third lecture, or section (adhyaya) out of the eight, which the first book or the first astaka consists of: Dr. Roer's translation was equally limited stopping with two sections or thirty-two hymns. Both these translations were published in India, but we are not sure, whether they are available now. Dr. Rosen's translation of the first book was complete as to the text, but his premature death interrupted his annotations. Wilson speaks highly of this work: "Although executed with profound scholarship and scrupulous exactitude, and everyway deserving of reliance as an authentic representative of the original, the Sanskrit is converted into Latin with such literal fidelity that the work scarcely admits of consecutive perusal, and is most of value as a reference; the translation is, in fact, subordinate to an edition of the text which it accompanies on the same page, and the work is designed less for general readers than for Sanskrit scholars and students of the Veda."

In respect to M. Langlois's translation, Wilson comments thus: "The principle followed by M. Langlois is the converse of that adopted by Dr. Rosen and he avowedly sought to give to the vague and mysterious passages of the original, a clear, simple, and intelligible interpretation. In this, it may be admitted, that he has admirably succeeded; but it may be sometimes thought that he has not been sufficiently cautious in his rendering of the text, and that he has diverged from its phraseology, especially as interpreted by the native Scholiast, more widely than is advisable." In respect to his own translation, Wilson says, "The present translation possesses at least the advantage over its predecessors of an accurate text, and it will be the fault of the translator, if he does not benefit by it. In converting the original into English, it has been his aim to adhere as strictly to the original Sanskrit as the necessity of being intelligible would allow." (July 1, 1850)

To the Vedic Hymns (published in the Sacred Books of the East Series), Volume I, F. Max Müller has appended a long Preface of 125 pages (March 1869), in which he has discussed at length the principles of translation of such classical texts. For several reasons, Professor Max Müller chose to start with the hymns devoted to maruts. In respect of the translators of the Veda, he says, "I hold that they ought to be decipherers and they are bound to justify every word of their translation in exactly the same manner in which the decipherers of hieroglyphic or cuneiform inscriptions justify every step they take." In this connection he refers to the opinion of Professor von Roth, one of the most distinguished Vedic scholars of his times, who had always been in favour of metrical translations of the Vedic Hymns. Whilst Max Müller was more for giving abundant notes, Professor von Roth would throw the chief weight, not on the notes, but on the translation of the text. Max Müller also says, "On one point, however, I am quite willing to agree with my adversaries, namely, that a metrical rendering would convey a truer idea of the hymns of the Vedic ṛsis than a prose rendering. When I had to translate Vedic hymns into German, I have generally, if not always, endeavoured to clothe them in a metrical form. In English I feel unable to do so, but I have no doubt that future scholars will find it possible to add rhythm and even rhyme, after the true meaning of the ancient verses has once been determined." Of course, Max Müller confesses that very often, a metrical translation is an "excuse only for an inaccurate translation". In his Introduction, Max Müller discusses the merits and demerits of Grassmann's (based on Otto Böhtlingk and Rudolf Roth's great Dictionary) and of Ludwig's translation. (1891).

Theodor Aufrecht took great pains in producing Romanized reprint of the entire Ṛgveda with proper diacritical marks, including the accent udatta also. Its second edition appeared in 1877, and the photomechanical reprint of this second edition appeared in 1955 (published by Wissenschaftliche Buchgesellschaft, Darmstadt.).

Hermann Oldenberg collaborated with Max Müller, and the second volume of the Vedic Hymns in the SBE Series is his translation of Agni Hymns of the Ṛgveda taken from books I-V (about 130 hymns). Oldenberg's collection of papers on the Vedic subjects have come out in a single volume (Kleine Schriften, Teil I & II, of which Teil I is devoted to the Vedic Studies), published by Franz Steinep Verlaggmehwiesbaden).

Griffith's translation of the Ṛgveda appeared first in May, 1889, reprinted again in 1896 (in 2 volumes). It has now been reprinted in a single volume by Motilal Banarsidass, (1973). In his preface to the first edition, he quotes Professor Weber (from the History of Indian Literature, by Albrecht Weber, Trübner's Oriental Series, 1878) as follows:

> "The reasons, however, by which we are fully justified in regarding the literature of India as the most ancient literature of which written records of an extensive scale have been handed down to us, are these: In the more ancient parts of the Ṛgveda Samhita, we find the Indian race settled on the north-western borders of India, in the Punjab, and even beyond the Punjab, on the Kubha or Kophen in Kabul. The gradual spread of the race from these seats towards the east, beyond the Saraswati and over Hindustan as far as the Ganges, can be traced in the later portions of the Vedic writings almost step by step. The writings of the following period, that of the epic, consist of accounts of the internal conflicts among the conquerors of Hindustan themselves, as, for instance, the Mahabharata; or of the farther spread of Brahmanism towards the south, as, for instance, the Ramayana. If we connect with this the first fairly accurate information about India which we have from a Greek source, viz., from Megasthenes, it becomes clear that at the time of this writer the brahmanising of Hindustan was already completed, while at the time of the Periplus, the very southernmost point of the Dekhan had already become the seat of the worship of Gauri, the wife of Siva. What a series of years, of centuries, must necessarily have elapsed before this boundless tract of country, inhabited by wild and vigorous tribes, could have been brought over to Brahmanism !"

I shall not comment on this passage of Griffith which needs careful scrutiny.

During the last hundred and twenty-five years, as a result of the labour of our Western scholars (also assisted by our own Indian scholars trained on the Western pattern), the interest into the Vedas, and the Vedic literature grew but from an entirely different approach. This would be seen from the following types of observations: (i) Professor Wilson says: "To me, the verses of the Veda, except in their rhythm, and in a few rare passages, appear singularly prosaic for so early an era as that of their probable composition, and at any rate, their chief value lies not in their fancy but in their facts, social and religious." (ii) Professor Cowell says, "The poetry of the Ṛgveda is singularly deficient in that simplicity and natural pathos or sublimity which we naturally look for in the songs of an early period of civilization. The language and style of most of the hymns is singularly artificial....Occasionally we meet with fine outbursts of poetry, specially in the hymns addressed to the Dawn, but these are never long sustained and as a rule we find few grand similies or metaphors." (iii) To all these remarks, Griffith further adds, "The worst fault of all, in the Collection regarded as a whole, is the intolerable monotony of a great number of the hymns, a monotony which reaches its climax in the Ninth Book which consists almost entirely of invocations of Soma Pavamana, or the deified Soma juice in process of straining and purification. The great interest of the Ṛgveda is, in fact, historical rather than poetical. (IV) Griffith attached to the hymns of the Ṛgveda a fresh importance, for we find him saying, "As in its original language we see the roots and shoots of the languages of Greek, and Latin, of Kelt, Teuton and Slavonian, so the deities, the myths, and the religious beliefs and practices of the Veda throw a flood of light upon the religions of all European countries before the introduction of Christianity. (v) In this connection, Griffith further says, "As the science of comparative philology could hardly have existed without the study of Sanskrit, so the comparative history of religions of the world would have been impossible without the study of the Veda."

Griffith's translation of the Ṛgveda depends on the text of Max Müller (six-volume edition) and is partly based on Sayana's commentary. He has consulted the commentary of Sayana for the general sense of every verse, and for the meaning of every word, and has followed his interpretation whenever it seemed to him rational and consistent with the text, and with other passages in which the same word or words occur. Shall we regard Sayana as the true interpretor of the Ṛgveda, or for that purpose, any other text which he had commented on ? The opinions have been conflicting: (i) Professor Wilson (whose translation of the Ṛgveda is rather a version of Sayana's paraphrase) is virtually of the opinion that Sayana's knowledge of his text has been "far beyond the pretensions of any European scholar" and he "must have been in possession of all the interpretation which had been perpetuated by traditional teaching from the earliest times." But as has been pointed out by Dr. J. Muir, Wilson in the notes to his translation admits that he "occasionally failed to find in Sayana a perfectly satisfactory guide," and Wilson at places has remarked that the "scholiast is evidently puzzled," and that his explanations are obscure.

Professor Roth, the author of the Vedic portion of the great St. Petersburg Lexicon, has given in his Preface an interesting comment, which we shall reproduce at length:

> So far as regards one of the branches of Vedic literature, the treatises on theology and worship, we can desire no better guides than these commentators, so exact in all respects, who follow their texts word by word, who so long as even the semblance of a misconception might arise, are never weary of repeating what they have frequently said before, and who often appear as if they had been writing for us foreigners rather than for their own priestly alumni who had grown up in the midst of these conceptions and impressions. Here...they are in their proper ground. The case, however, is quite different when the same men assume the task of interpreting the ancient collection of hymns...Here were required not only quite different qualifications for interpretation but also a greater freedom of judgment and a greater breadth of view and of historical institutions. Freedom of judgment, however, was wanting to priestly learning, whilst in India no one has ever had any conception of historical development. The very qualities which had made those commentators excellent guides to an understanding of the theological treatises render them unsuitable conductors on that far older and quite differently circumstanced domain.

> As the so-called classical Sanskrit was perfectly familiar to them > they sought its ordinary idiom in the Vedic hymns also. Since any difference in the ritual appeared to them inconceivable and the present forms were believed to have existed from the beginning of the world, they fancied that the patriarchs of the Indian religion must have sacrificed in the very same manner.

> As the recognized mythological and classical system of their own age appeared to them unassailable and revealed varieties, they must necessarily (so the commentators thought) be discoverable in that centre point of revelation, the hymns of the ancient ṛsis, who had, indeed, lived in familiar intercourse with the gods, and possessed far higher wisdom than the succeeding generations....
> It has never occurred to any one to make our understanding of the Hebrew books of Old Testament depend on the Talmud and the Rabbins, while there are not wanting scholars who hold it as the duty of a conscientious interpreter of the Veda to translate in conformity with Sayana, Mahidhara etc. Consequently we do not believe like H. H. Wilson, that Sayana, for instance, understood the expression of the Veda better than any European interpreter; but we think that a conscientious European interpreter may understand the Veda far better and more correctly than Sayana.
> We do not esteem it our first task to arrive at that understanding of the Veda which was current in India some centuries ago, but to search out the sense which the poets themselves have put into their hymns and utterances.
> Hence we are of opinion that the writings of Sayana and the other commentators do not form a rule for the interpreter, but are merely one of those helps of which the latter will avail himself for the execution of his undoubtedly difficult task, a task which is not to be accomplished at the first onset, or by any single individual..
> We have, therefore, endeavoured to follow the path prescribed by philology, to derive from the texts themselves the sense which they contain, by a juxtaposition of all the passages which are cognate in diction or contains—a tedious and laborious path, in which neither the commentators nor the translators have preceded us.

It would be of interest to go through the opinion of Max Müller on the etymological texts like the Nirukta. He says:

> As the authors of the Brahmanas were blinded by theology, the authors of the still later Niruktas were deceived by etymological fictions, and both conspired to mislead by their authority later and more sensible commentators, such as Sayana. Where > Sayana has no authority to mislead him, his commentary is at all events rational; but still his scholastic notions would never allow him to accept the free interpretation which comparative study of these venerable documents forces upon the unprejudiced scholar We must therefore discover ourselves the real vestiges of these ancient poets.

Professor Benfey has something very interesting and useful to say :

> Every one who has carefully studied the Indian interpretations is aware that absolutely no continuous tradition extending from the composition of the Veda to their explanation by Indian scholars can be assumed; that, on the contrary, between the genuine poetic remains of Vedic antiquity and their interpretations a long-continued break in tradition must have intervened, out of which at most the comprehension of some particulars may have been rescued and handed down to later times by means of liturgical usages and words, formulae, and perhaps, also, poems, connected therewith. Besides these remains of tradition, which must be estimated as very scanty, the interpreters of the Veda had, in the main, scarcely any other help than those which, for the most part, are still at our command, the usage of the classical speech, and the grammatical and etymological-laxicographical investigation of words.

In any case, whatever may be the shortcomings of Indian interpreters, one must remember, as Professor Goldstücker remarked: "Without the vast information, which those commentators have disclosed to us, without their method of explaining the obscurest text,—in one word, without their scholarship, we should still stand at the outer doors of Hindu antiquity." In fact, Goldstücker ridicules the assertion that a European scholar can understand the Veda more correctly than Sayana, or arrive more nearly at the meaning which the ṛsis gave to their own hymns.

In the galaxy of the Western scholars who devoted themselves to the study of the Veda we have the following: Professors Roth, Benfey, Weber, Ludwig, Max Müller, Grassmann, H. H. Wilson, Monier Williams, Dr. John Muir, Wallis, Griffith, M. Bergaigne, Oldenberg, Geldner and Kaegi, Peterson and others. To this list, one must add the name of W. D. Whitney for the pains he took on the translation of the Atharvaveda and of Bloomfield for his Vedic Concordance.

WESTERN THEORIES

Western theories based on lack of sympathy.—Whilst introducing Modern Theories in one of his chapters, Aurobindo remarks:

> "It was the curiosity of a foreign culture that broke after many centuries the seal of final authoritativeness which Sayana had fixed on the ritualistic interpretation of the Veda. The ancient scripture was delivered over to a scholarship laborious, bold in speculation, ingenious in its flights of fancy, conscientious according to its own lights, but ill-fitted to understand the method of the old mystic poets; for it was void of any sympathy with that ancient temperament, unprovided with any clue in its own intellectual or spiritual environment to the ideas hidden in the Vedic figures and parables. The result has been of a double character, on the one side the beginning of a more minute, thorough and careful as well as a freer handling of the problems of Vedic interpretation, on the other hand, a final exaggeration of its apparent material sense and the complete obscuration of its true and inner secret." (Aurobindo, Vol. X, p.22)

By modern theories, we mean the theories which have been advanced by the comparative mythologists, linguists, philologists, anthropologists and scholars in some of the countries of West. When they gained their first acquaintance with Indian literature, its culture and customs, they tried to interpret it in consonance with the mythology and culture of other nations in East, Middle-East and some other lands. In this context, these scholars laboriously developed the modern theory of Veda also, which starts with the conception (for which Sayana is responsible) of the Vedas as the hymnal of an early, primitive and largely barbaric society, crude in its moral and religious conceptions, rude in its outlook upon the world that environed it. The ritualism which Sayana accepted as part of a divine knowledge and as endowed with a mysterious efficacy, European scholarship accepted as an elaboration of the old savage propitiatory sacrifices offered to imaginary superhuman personalities who might be benevolent or malevolent according as they were worshipped or neglected. (Aurobindo, Vol. X, p. 23).

The story does not stop here. "The historical element admitted by Sayana," so says Aurobindo, "was readily seized on and enlarged by new renderings and new explanation of the allusions in the hymns developed in an eager hunt for clues to the primitive history, manners and institutions of those barbarous races." And thus Sayana's interpretation of the Vedas, instead of bringing credit to the race and culture, which accepted Vedas as sacred authority, brought a disregard and disrepute, and damaged more than did any good to the reputation they deserved on account of their contributions in other fields (in the field of philosophical experiences, as evident from the upanisads, in linguistics and grammar, as evident from Panini and Patanjali's works, in astronomy, logic, mathematics, surgery and medicine). The first credit goes to Dayananda for having raised a voice against the traditional scholiasts, like Sayana and others.

At the time of the beginning of the Western interpretation, the situation was something like this. The naturalistic element played a very important role. The obvious identification of the Vedic gods in their external aspects with certain Nature–Powers was used as the starting-point for a comparative study of Aryan mythologies; the hesitating identification of certain of the less prominent deities as Sun-Powers was taken as a general clue to the system of primitive myth-making and elaborate sun-myth and star-myth theories of comparative mythology were founded. In this new light the Vedic hymnology has come to be interpreted as a half-superstitious, half-poetic allegory of Nature with an important astronomical element. The rest is partly contemporary history, partly the formulae and practices of sacrificial ritualism, not mystic, but merely primitive and superstitious.

The theory of emergence from the mere savage was dominatingly a concept of the Nineteenth Century. We now know that remarkable civilizations existed in China, Egypt, Chaldea and Assyria many thousands of years ago, and it is now coming generally to be agreed that Greece and India were no exceptions to the general high culture of Asia and Mediterranean races. Aurobindo in this context rightly says, that "if the Vedic Indians do not get the benefit of this revived knowledge, it is due to the survival of the theory with which European erudition started that they belonged to the so-called Aryan race and were on the same level of culture with the early Aryan Greeks, Celts, Germans as they are represented to us in the Homeric poems, the old Norse Sagas and the Roman accounts of the ancient Gaul and Teuton. Hence has arisen the theory that these Aryan races were northern barbarians who broke in from their colder climes on the old and rich civilizations of Mediterranean Europe and Dravidian India."

It is not for me to discuss in details many such theories which have been started in the West on flimsy grounds and insufficient evidences. The indications in the Veda on which this tneory of a recent Aryan invasion is built, are very scanty in quantity and uncertain in their significance. The distinction between Aryan and un-Aryan seems on the mass of evidence to indicate a cultural rather than a racial difference. Nor is it a certain conclusion from the data we possess that the early Aryan cultures—supposing the Celt, Teuton, Greek and Indian to represent one common cultural origin,—were really undeveloped and barbarous (Aurobindo, Vol. X, p. 24).

The methodology adopted in comparative mythology is not very happy one. It has founded its interpretation on a theory which saw nothing between the early savage and Plato or the upanisads. It has taken for granted that the early religions have been founded on the wonder of barbarians waking up suddenly to the astonishing fact that such strange things as Dawn and Night and the Sun existed and attempting in a crude, barbaric, imaginative way to explain their existence. We have no space here to discuss these aspects in details. There could be much that would be useful in the speculation of comparative mythology; but in order that the bulk of its results should be sound and acceptable, it must use a more patient and consistent method and organize itself as part of a well-founded science of Religion. The mere identification of Greek and Sanskrit names and the ingenious discovery that Heracles pyre is an image of the setting Sun or that Paris and Helen are Greek corruption of the Vedic sarama and panis make an interesting diversion for an imaginative mind, but can by themselves lead to no serious result even if they should prove to be correct. Nor is their correctness beyond serious doubt, for it is the vice of the fragmentary and imaginative method by which the sun and star myth interpretations are built up that they can be applied with equal ease and convincingness to any and every human tradition, belief or even actual event of history.* With this method, so says, Aurobindo, we can never be sure where we have hit on a truth or where we are listening to a mere ingenuity. (Aurobindo, Vol. X, p. 27).

Modern Indian Interpreters—The whole problem of the interpretation of Vedic texts shall perhaps ever remain an open field in which any contribution that can throw light upon the problem should be welcome. Three contributions on Western lines have proceeded from Indian scholars, but one of the profoundest contributions has been by an Indian Savant, Dayananda, on indigenous lines with freshness of outlook and depth of vision. The lines showed by him opened new vistas for Aurobindo in developing his psychological approach. Those who followed the Western methods were Bal Gangadhar Tilak, T. Paramasiva Aiyer, and A. C. Das. Tilak in the Arctic Home in the Vedas has accepted the general conclusions of European scholarship, but by a fresh examination of the Vedic Dawn, the figure of the Vedic Cows and the astronomical data of the hymns, has established at least a strong probability that the Aryan races descended originally from the Arctic regions in the glacial period. A. C. Das, another scholar of repute from Bengal in the Ṛgvedic India has contradicted Tilak's views, and has almost conclusively shown from the Vedic texts that the Punjab, the land of five rivers and the adjoining area was the cradle home of the Vedic Aryans. T. Paramasiva Aiyer by a still bolder departure has attempted to prove that the whole of the Ṛgveda is a figurative representation of the geological phenomena belonging to the new birth of our planet after its long continued glacial death in the same period of terrestrial evolution. Whether one accepts or not, he has thrown a new light on the great riddle of ahi vṛtra and the release of the seven rivers.

 E.g. Christ and his twelve disciples are, a great scholar assures us, the Sun and the twelve months. The career of Napolean is the most perfect sun-myth in all legend or history. (Aurobindo)

None of the above authors commented on the entire text of even a single veda. Dayananda, however, took upon himself the stupendous task of commenting on the Yajurveda and the Ṛgveda as a new venture, quite independent from the traditional commentaries of Sayana (his life was cut short, and he could not proceed beyond Mandala VI of the Ṛgveda). As Aurobindo writes, it was the remarkable attempt by Svami Dayananda, the founder of the Arya Samaj, to re-establish the Veda as a living religious Scripture. Dayananda took as his basis a free use of the old Indian philology, which he found in the Nirukta. Himself a great Sanskrit scholar, he handled his material with remarkable power and independence. Especially creative was his use that peculiar feature of the old Sanskrit tongue which is best expressed by a phrase of Sayana's,—the multisignificance of roots, we shall see, that the right following of this clue is of capital importance for understanding the peculiar method of the Vedic ṛsis. (Aurobindo. Vol. X, p. 29).

"Dayananda's interpretation", writes Aurobindo, "of the hymns is governed by the idea that the Vedas are a plenary revelation of religious, ethical and scientific truth. Its religious teaching is monotheistic and the Vedic gods are different decriptive names of the one Deity; they are at the same time indicative of His powers as we see them working in Nature and by a true understanding of the sense of the Vedas we could arrive at all the scientific truths which have been discovered by modern research".

At times there has been a misunderstanding both in the circles of the Arya Samaj and outside, whilst interpreting the hypothesis of Dayananda inasmuch as the Vedas contain the germ (or seed) of all true knowledge (including philosophy and science). Dayananda always regards sruti as different from sastra. The Vedas constitute the sruti, as revealed, and the sastras are developed as systematics to understand the sruti and God's creation, both. The sruti always has the germ of the sastra in it, but is not the sastra. In this sense, Dayananda regards the sruti to be constituting the germ of all true knowledge.

The old nations have to their credit great scientific, literary and creative discoveries and conceptions. In some fields, the ancient races, it ought to be admitted, were far more advanced than is yet recognized. The Egyptians and Chaldeans, we now know, had discovered much that has since been rediscovered by modern science and much also that has not been rediscovered. The ancient India was inspired with the Vedic studies, and in the context of these studies, India developed her logic, mathematics, astronomy, medical sciences, grammar, prosody and aesthetics besides metaphysics, and spiritual sciences. Dayananda referred to this glory of India, which was built up round the teaching of the Vedas, a living force.

Aurobindo, whilst complimenting, says, "Dayananda has given the clue to the linguistic secret of the ṛsis and re-emphasised one central idea of the Vedic religion, the idea of the One Being with the Devas expressing in numerous names and forms the many-sidedness of His unity." (Aurobindo, Vol. X, p. 31).

PRE-DAYANANDA AND POST-DAYANANDA PERIOD OF INTERPRETATION : SAYANA—DAYANANDA—AUROBINDO

Aurobindo presents the problem of the Vedic interpretation in the following words :

> "We have in the Ṛgveda.--the true and the only Veda in the estimation of European scholars,—a body of sacrificial hymns couched in a very ancient language which presents a number of almost insoluble difficulties. It is full of ancient forms and words which do not appear in later speech and have often to be fixed in some doubtful sense by intelligent conjecture; a mass even of the words that it has in common with classical Sanskrit seem to bear or at least to admit another significance than in the later literary tongue; and a multitude of its vocables, especially the most common, those which are most vital to the sense, are capable of a surprising number of unconnected significances, which may give according to our preference in selection, quite different complexions to whole passages, whole hymns, and even to the whole thought of the Veda." (Aurobindo, Vol.X. p.2)

During the past several centuries, there have been at least three types of major attempts to fix the sense of these ancient litanies : (i) The first of these attempts exists only by fragments in the brahmanas, and the upanisads. (ii) An interpretation almost in the same strain has been followed by another Indian scholar Sayana—this is the traditional ritualistic interpretation of the Vedic texts, as if the entire text of the Ṛgveda (and the Yajurveda too), was meant to be used for one or the other purpose in sacrifices. (iii) Lastly, we have another mode of interpretation which has been introduced by modern Western scholarship (European and American), based on comparisons and conjectures, i.e. claimed to be based on the comparative philology, and systematic study of human behaviours through ages in different lands.

In respect to the traditional ritualistic interpretation, and the conjectural Western interpretations, Aurobindo rightly remarks as follows :

> "Both of them present one characteristic in common, the extraordinary incoherence and poverty of sense, which their results stamp upon the ancient hymns. The separate lines can be given, whether naturally or by force of conjecture, a good sense, or a sense that hangs together, the diction that results, if garish in style, if loaded with otiose and decorative epithets, if developing extraordinarily little of meaning in an amazing mass of gaudy figure and verbiage, can be made to run into intelligible sentences; but when we come to read the hymns as a whole, we seem to be in the presence of men who, unlike the earlier writers of other races, were incapable of coherent and natural expression or of connected thought. Except in the briefer and simpler hymns the language tends to be either obscure or artificial; the thoughts are either unconnected or have to be forced and beaten by the interpreter into a whole. The scholar in dealing with text is obliged to substitute for interpretation a process almost of fabrication. We feel that he is not so much revealing the sense as hammering and forging rebellious material into some sort of shape and consistency." (Aurobindo, Vol. X. p. 3)

These observations of Aurobindo are valid in regards to the interpretations given by either Sayana or by our Western scholars like Max Müller, Geldner, Oldenberg, Griffith or Wilson. If these interpretations are accepted, then the hymns of the Ṛgveda (and other Vedas) would be justifiably qualified by such terms as "obscure and barbarous compositions." But one thing is exceptionally remarkable. These so called obscure and barbarous compositions have had the most splendid good fortune in all literary history. They have been the reputed source not only of some of the world's richest and profoundest religions, but of some of its subtlest metaphysical philosophies. In the fixed tradition of thousands of years they have been revered as the origin and standard of all that can be held as authoritative and true in Brahmanas, Upanisads, in the six Systems of Indian philosophy, and even in the later and medieval literature of Indian thought. They have been invariably regarded as the literature of ultimate Supreme Authority (svatah pramana). They have inspired the teachings of all saints, seers and sages. The name borne by them has been the Veda, the knowledge, a term which stands for the highest spiritual truth of which the human mind is capable. But, as Aurobindo rightly remarks, if we accept the current interpretations, whether Sayana's or the modern theory, the whole of this sublime and sacred reputation is a colossal fiction. If we accept the traditional or western interpretations, the hymns would be nothing more than the naive superstitious, fancies of untaught and materialistic barbarians concerned only with the most external gains and enjoyments and ignorant of all but the most elementary moral notions and religious aspirations. Of course, rituals have some value in life, but the entire Vedic texts have nothing else in them but rituals, is an idea repugnant to any rational thought. As we have said, the Vedas were held in the highest esteem by all the systems of Indian philosophy, particularly of the Upanisads, and it is so well known that the true foundation or starting point of religions and philosophies are these Upanisads, and if so, if the Vedas are to be traditionally interpreted, then these Upanisads have to be conceived as a revolt of philosophical and speculative minds against the ritualistic materialism of the Vedas. The entire Vedanta, the Yoga, Samkhya, the Nyaya or the Vaisesika system can be directly traced to elaborate the theses propounded in the Vedic texts.

The European scholars have confused issues beyond expectations. Aurobindo writes in this context :

> "But this conception, supported by misleading European parallels, realy explains nothing. Such profound and ultimate thoughts, such systems of subtle and elaborate psychology as are found in the substance of the Upanisads, do not spring out of a previous void. The human mind in its progress marches from knowledge to knowlege, or it renews and enlarges previous knowledge that has been obscured and overlaid, or it seizes on old imperfect clues and is led by them to new discoveries. The thought of the Upanisads supposes great origins anterior to itself, and these in the original theories are lacking. The hypothesis, invented to fill the gap, that these ideas were borrowed by barbarious Aryan invaders from the civilized Dravidians, is a conjecture, supported only by other conjectures. It is indeed coming to be > doubted whether the whole story of an Aryan invasion through the Punjab is not a myth of the philologists. (Aurobindo, Vol. X. p. 4).

In fact, the Veda has to be seen from another perspective. It is the revelation of an age anterior to our intellectual philosophies. It is sruti and not a sastra. In that original epoch, when it was given to us, thought proceeded by methods other then those of our logical reasoning and speech (the accepted modes of expression) which in our present day habits would be inadmissible. The wisest then depended on inner experience and the suggestions of the intuitive complex for all knowledge that ranged beyond mankind's ordinary perceptions and daily activities. Their aim was illumination, as Aurobindo puts it, not logical conviction, their ideal the inspired seer, not the accurate reasoner, The ṛsi was not the individual composer of the hymn, but the seer (drasta) of an eternal truth and an impersonal knowledge. The language of the Veda itself is sruti, a rhythm not composed by the intellect but heard, a divine word that came vibrating out of the Infinite to the inner audience of the man who had previously made himself fit for the impersonal knowledge (Aurobindo, Vol. X. p.8). So speaks Dayananda about the Vedas, so spoke the older ṛsis, and so speaks Aurobindo about the Vedic revelation. The words themselves, dṛsti and sruti, sight and hearing, are Vedic expressions; these and cognate words signify, in the esoteric terminology of the hymns, revelatory knowledge and the contents of inspiration (sabda, artha, and the sambandha).

There is a progressive preparedness for the reception of the divine revelation in the hymns themselves so often. Knowledge itself was a travelling and a reaching, or a finding and a winning (as Aurobindo puts it); the revelation of the mysterious comes only at the end; the light was the prize of a final victory. There is continually in the Veda this image of the jorney, the Soul's march on the path of Truth. On that path as it advances, it also ascends; new vistas of power and light open to its aspiration; it wins by a heroic effort its enlarged spiritual possessions. If a coherence is to be appreciated in a particular hymn, this type of approach has to be constantly kept in mind. The hymn would by and by raise you from an exoteric to an esoteric realm. A particular verse might be referring to mundane fire for the time being, but by and by it would raise you to the realm of the cosmic Fire and then finally take you to the Inner Fire, the Divine Warmth, which is the secret of life. And similarly, a casual reference to ordinary broad day light or the light appearing every day at dawn, may take you through a series of successive steps to the cosmic light and finally to the Inner Spiritual Light of one's own consciousness or even the Divine Light of the Supreme Self.

If one gets familiarized with this technique of the Soul's march on the path of Truth, then to him, the Veda would neither be a collection of verses, being an attempt to set down the results of intellectual or imaginative speculations, nor would it consist of the dogmas of a primitive religion.

The Vedas were revealed to the earliest man and since then, they were traditionally handed down to posterity with utmost care in accuracy. It is difficult to say when they were for the first time classified into the details of the samhitas. But there are certain considerations which justify us in ascribing to it an almost enormous antiquity. An accurate text, accurate in every syllable, accurate in every accent, was a matter of supreme importance to the Vedic ritualists; for on scrupulous accuracy depended the effectuality of the sacrifice. We are told, for instance, in the Brahmanas the story of tvastṛ, who, performing a sacrifice to produce an avenger of his son slain by Indra, produced, owing to an error of accentuation, not a slayer of Indra, but one of whom Indra must be the slayer (indra-satru). The prodigious accuracy of the ancient Indian memory is also notorious and proverbial. And the sanctity of the text prevented such interpolations, alterations, modernizing revisions, as have been replaced by the present form of the Mahabharata, the ancient epic of the Kurus.

The ancients were not satisfied with the samhita pathas of the Vedic verses in which the rigid rules of euphonic combination of separate words (sandhi) were applied. The Vedic rsis, as was natural in a living speech, followed the ear rather than fixed rule; some times they combined the separate words, sometimes they left them uncombined. And therefore, they have not only retained with accuracy the samhita pathas, but the pada-pathas also with proper accentuation. In these pada-pathas, all euphonic combinations are again resolved into the original and separate words and even components of compound words indicated.

We shall not enter here into the details involving the change of a samhita-patha into the corresponding pada-patha and vice versa.

A few illustrations of the samhita-patha and the pada-patha for the same Ṛgvedic verse are given below :

1. Samhita-patha

    अग्निमीळे पुरोहितं यज्ञस्य देवमृत्विजम् ।
    होतारं रत्नधातमम् ।

    Pada-patha

    अग्निम् । ईळे । पुरःऽहितम् । यज्ञस्य । देवम् । ऋत्विजम् ।
    होतारम् । रत्नऽधातमम् ।

2. Samhita-patha

    अग्नि : पूर्वेभिर्ऋषिभिरीड्यो नूतनैरुत । स देवाँ एह वक्षति ।

    Pada-patha

    अग्नि : । पूर्वेभिः । ऋषिऽभि : । ईड्यः । नूतनैः । उत ।
    सः । देवान् । आ । इह । वक्षति ।

(These pada-pathas would be a help in proper ghana-pathas, mala-pathas, jata-pathas etc.) besides the interpretations, depending on accents also.)

Coherence in the Vedic hymns.

We can thus entirely rely on the Vedic texts available to us today, in the form of the pada-patha. Very few are the instances in which the exactness or the sound judgment of the pada-patha can be called into question. "We have then" Aurobindo says, "as our basis a text which we can confidently accept and which, even if we hold it in a few instances doubtful or defective, does not at any rate cali for that often licentious labour of emendation to which some of the European classics lend themselves." Aurobindo further says, "Nor is there, in my view, any good reason to doubt that we have the hymns arrayed, for the most part in the right order of their verses, and in their exact entirety. The exceptions, if they exist, are negligible in number and importance. When the hymns seem to us incoherent, it is because we do not understand them. Once the clue is found, we discover that they are perfect wholes as admirable in the structure of their thought as in their language and their rhythms." (Aurobindo, Vol. X. p. 16).

Natural meaning of Vedic terms. The only literature of the closest proximity to the revealed Vedic texts, is of the brahmanas and the aranyakas; and both of them belong to the ritualistic period. Perhaps, there must have been a gap of milleniums between the dawn of the Vedic knowledge, and the liturgical books of the Brahmanic period. And therefore, Aurobindo is right when he says, that "for even in the earlier days of classical erudition, the ritualistic view of the Veda was already dominant, the original sense of the words, the lines, the allusions, the clue to the structure of the thought had been long lost or obscured; nor was there in the erudite that intuition or that spiritual experience which might have partly recovered the lost secret. In such a field, mere learning, especially when it is accompanied by an ingenious scholastic mind, is often a snare as a guide." (Aurobindo, Vol. X. p. 16-17).

There has been a great contribution of the people of the ritualistic period, in that they preserved the Vedic texts with great care, but on the contrary, the greatest disservice they did, was that they obscured the natural meaning of the Vedic texts. Tne mantras were held sacred by them, but the real meanings were lost to them, and therefore, for the last so many centuries, the Vedas ceased to have any dynamic impact on the life of an individual or on society. Thanks to the insight and inspirations of Dayananda at the close of the Nineteenth Century, followed by spiritual experiences of another great savant of the present century, Sri Aurobindo, there has been a complete metamorphosis of our thinking and evaluation of the Vedic texts. The greatest contribution of these two great sons of the soil has been the emancipation of the Vedic interpretations from the tragic hands of ritualistic periods and medieval scholiasts.

Max Müller and other scholars of the west laboured hard on the Vedic texts, not only as pure academicians, but they were also sure, that if they could show to Indian people how meaningless and debasing the concept of their own Vedic scholiasts were, their future generation, more enlightened on account of the advances of modern philosophy and sciences, would refuse to accept the Vedas and the Vedic theology as their solace.*

The great sage Yaska compiled one of the earliest lexicons of the Vedic terms, known as the Nighantu, and he wrote his own commentary on this book, known as the Nirukta. The Nighantu constitutes one of the six vedangas, the others being the siksha (orthography) by Panini, chanda (prosody) by Pingala, jyotis (astronomy) by Lagadha, vyakarana (grammar) by Panini, and kalpa (litany and liturgy) by various scholars of the ritualistic period. The study of these vedangas is supposed to be very essential if one wishes to arrive at the correct interpretation of the Vedic texts. But no academic knowledge of our rigorous scholarly disciplines can be a substitute of inspirations and

* Max Müller, as a true Christian, was convinced of the fact, that his translations of the Vedic Hymns based on the interpretations of Sayana and other scholiasts, would take away the faith of Indians from the Vedas, and in consequence, Indians would also become Christians in due course. We are told that he wrote a letter to his wife in 1868, in which he remarked thus, whilst he was busy in editing the Ṛgveda :

> "I hope I shall finish that work and I feel convinced, though I shall not live to see it, yet this edition of mine (of the Ṛgveda) and the translation of the Vedas will hereafter tell to a great extent on the fate of India and on the growth of millions of souls in that country. It is the root of their religion, and to show them what the root is, is, I feel sure, the only way of uprooting all that has been sprung from it during the last three thousand years."

Of course, the result has been otherwise. Due to Dayananda and people who have shared his views, the Vedas are much more popular in Indian society today than in Max Müller's days, and their teachings have started revitalizing human mind, and now again they have started exercizing a dynamic impact on our society.

personal experiences, of a highly elevated self. The seers of the upanisads, could, therefore, reveal the mysteries of the Vedic texts much more than any other academician. We are fortunate in this respect that persons of the eminence of Panini (the celebrated author of the Astadhyayi) and his commentator, Patanjali (the author of the Mahabhasya) were not only academicians but were also inspired seers of deep experiences, and so were the authors of the six systems of Indian philosophy.

Every great interpreter of the Vedic texts has taken help from Yaska, the lexicographer and the etymologist, and also from the derivations given in the Brahmanas, in the Unadi kosa, in the Pratisakhyas, and from Panini's grammar as well as from the Mahabhasya. All these books accept the principle of the multiplicity of the Vedic interpretations, the interpretation belonging to three major categories: (i) the historical, or sasvata itihasa, the natural perpetual cosmologic history, (ii) the ritualistic, pertaining to the yajnas, and (iii) the spiritual or the mystic with deeper inner meanings. Dayananda has added one more category to it, as would be seen from his commentaries. To Dayananda, the Vedas constitute the living force, both mundane and spiritual. His is the dynamic realistic philosophy of life, and compatible with this concept he gets inspirations from the Vedas for all the disciplines of life. To him, the life is real and purposeful and the prosperity in mundane life is a step of advancement towards the attainments of the spiritual realm. And therefore, he has declared that the Vedas constitute a store house of all true knowledge for the evolution of man. To him, God is not only a creator of the Universe, living and non-living, He is prime source of all knowledge also, and therefore, there can never arise a conflict between true sciences, spiritual philosophies, and the right conducts of theological practices. And therefore, Vedas contain the natural material to inspire us in all the multi-disciplines of life. That code alone could be regarded as rightful, which leads to individual and social success in life and to the spiritual attainments of the highest order. God Himself is the Highest Personification of an ethical ideal, and this ideal has to be emulated in every sphere of human life, mundane and transcendental.

Of course, Sayana, or as a matter of fact, any other scholiast of the period, could not have been inspired with this realism and purposefulness of human life, and therefore, his interpretations, howsoever masterly, fall short of natural expectations. And, therefore, Aurobindo is correct when he says :

"Yet, even for the external sense of the Veda, it is not possible to follow either Sayana's method or his results without the largest reservation. It is not only that he admits in his method licenses of language and construction which are unnecessary and sometimes incredible, nor that he arrives at his results, after, by a surprising inconsistency in his interpretation of common Vedic terms and even of fixed Vedic formulae. These are the defects of detail unavoidable perhaps in the state of materials with which he had to deal. But it is the central defect of Sayana system that he is obsessed always by the ritualistic formula and seeks continually to force the sense of the Veda into that narrow mould. So he loses many clues of the greatest suggestiveness and importance for the ancient scriptures,—a problem quite as interesting as its internal sense. The outcome is a representation of the ṛsis, their thoughts, their culture, their aspirations, so narrow and poverty-stricken that, if accepted, it renders the ancient reverence for the Veda, its sacred authority, its divine reputation quite incomprehensible to the reason, or only explicable as a blind and unquestioning tradition of faith starting from an original error." (Aurobindo, Vol. X. p. 18)

The errors in Sayana's interpretations are as follows:

(i) Sruti is known for deep spiritual, philosophic and psychological meanings which ascribe sanctity to the text. Sayana usually refuses to enter into these depths. He does not go sufficiently beyond the current verbal interpretations. He mentions for instance, but not to admit it, an old interpretation of vṛtra as the coverer (आच्छादकः,-Dayananda) who holds back from man the objects of his desire and his aspirations. For Sayana vṛtra is either simply the enemy or the physical cloud demon who holds back the water and has to be pierced by the Raingiver.

(ii) Sayana is led away by the Pauranic myths and mythological events, as if the mythologies existed prior to the revelation of the texts. He does not go deeper into the root-meanings or the etymologies or mystic sense behind these terms. The stories of the Puranas were woven round the Vedic words, capable of natural interpretations, millleniums of years afterwards. The Vedas were always held sacred in Indian Society, and the words, used in common parlance, were given as proper names to family children or to the personal figures in literature. The names of the four ṛsis, Agni, Vayu, Aditya and Angiras, and so many other ṛsis, associated with the Vedic hymns also belong to this category, not to speak of kings and princes of repute, who came to be so well known in epics and mythologies. A few such instances are quoted below. The modern Vedic scholars, who seek to interpret history on the basis of Vedic texts, have erred a step ahead of Sayana in this repect.

1. Rama and Kṛsna in the Atharvaveda :
   नक्तंजातास्योषधे रामे कृष्णे असिक्नि च (Av. I. 23.1).
2. Dasaratha in the Ṛgveda :
   चत्वारिंशद् दशरथस्य शोणाः (Ṛv. I. 126.4).
3. Bharata in the Ṛgveda :
   आसद्या बर्हिर्भरतस्य सूनवः (Ṛv. II. 36.2).
4. Visvamitra in the Ṛgveda :
   विश्वामित्राय ददतो मघानि (Ṛv. III. 53.7).
   विश्वामित्रा अरासत (Ṛv. III. 53.13)
5. Visvamitra and Jamadagni in the Ṛgveda :
   सुते सातेन यद्यागमं वा प्रति विश्वामित्र-जमदग्नी दमे
   (Ṛv. X. 167.4).
6. Vena in the Ṛgveda :
   वेनन्ति वेनाः पतयन्त्या दिशः (Ṛv. X. 64.2).
   वेना दुहन्त्युक्षणं गिरिष्ठाम् (Ṛv. IX. 85.10).
   (Vena Bhargava is the seer of the hymns IX. 85 and X. 123, whilst vena is also the devata of X. 123. This vena has been identified with the planet Venus also, X. 123.1).

7. Pururavah and Urvasi in the Ṛgveda :
पुरूरवः पुनरस्तं परेहि (Ṛv. X. 95.2).
प्रोर्वशी तिरत दीर्घमायुः (Ṛv. X. 95.10).
(For urvasi. also see V. 41.19; IV. 2.18; and X. 95.17).
8. Arjuna in the Ṛgveda :
घोषेव शंसमर्जुनस्य नंशे (Ṛv. I. 122.5).
9. Vasisthas in the Ṛgveda :
प्रावदिन्द्रो ब्रह्मणो वो वसिष्ठाः (Ṛv. VII. 33.3).
10. Susruta in the Ṛgveda :
यः कर्मभिर्महद्भिः सुश्रुतो भूत् (Ṛv. III. 36.1).

(iii) A third element is the legendary and historic, the stories of old kings and ṛsis, given in the Brahmanas or later tradition in explanation of the obscure allusions of the Veda. Sayana's dealings with this element are marred by some hesitation. Often he accepts them as the right interpretation of the hymns: sometimes he gives an alternative sense with which he has evidently more intellectual sympathy, but wavers between the two authorities.

(iv) Ritualistic conceptions dominate over naturalistic interpretations. Not only are there the obvious or the traditional identifications, indra, the maruts, the triple agni, surya, usa, but we find mitra was identified with day, varuna with the night, aryaman and bhaga with the sun, the ṛbhus with its rays. We have here, as Aurobindo remarks, the seeds of that naturalistic theory of the Veda to which European learning has given so wide an extension. The old Indian scholars did not use the same freedom or the same systematic minuteness in their speculations. Still this element in Sayana's commentary is the true parent of the European Science of comparative mythology (Aurobindo, Vol. X. p. 20).

But here again, as Aurobindo remarks, it is the ritualistic conception that pervades; that is the persistent note in which all others lose themselves. In the formula of the philosophic schools the hymns, even while standing as a supreme authority for knowledge, are yet principally and fundamentally concerned with the karmakanda with works,–and by works was understood, pre-eminentaly, the ritualistic observation of the Vedic Sacrifices. Sayana labours always in the light of this idea. Into this mould, he moulds the language of the Veda, turning the mass of its characteristic words into the ritualistic significances,—food, priest, giver, wealth, praise, prayer, rite, sacrifice.

Wealth and food;—for it is the most egoistic and materialistic objects that are proposed as the aims of the Sacrifice; possessions, strength, power, children, servants, gold, horses, cows, victory, the slaughter and the plunder of enemies, the destruction of rival and malevolent critic. As one reads and finds hymn after hymn interpreted in this sense, one begins to understand better the apparent inconsistency in the attitude of the Gita (or the Upanisads) which, regarding always the Veda as divine knowledge (Gita, XV.15), yet censures severely the champions of an exclusive Vedism (Gita, II.42),—all whose flowery teachings were devoted solely to material wealth, power and enjoyment.

It is, as Aurobindo observes, the final and authoritative binding of the Veda to this lowest of all its possible senses that has been the most unfortunate result of Sayana's commentry. The dominance of the ritualistic interpretation had already deprived India of the living use of its greatest Scripture and of the true clue to the entire sense of the upanisads. Sayana's commentary put a seal of finality on the old misunderstanding which could not be broken for many centuries. (Aurobindo, Vol. X. p. 20).

When Dayananda talks of yajna, or karma, he takes a wide view of life. The Vedic philosophy is a philosophy of plenty, of prosperity and liberality. To Dayananda, yajna is not only the sacrificial ritual, it embraces all the achievements on a social plane to ameliorate the conditions of our worldly living against poverty, miseries, sickness and disease, and in the subsequent stage to assure a better future beyond death even. It is not the ritual that would lead to that goal, it is the hard, honest and sincere devotion in all departments of knowledge,—science, technology, philosophy, and spirituality—that would assure the fruits of the yajna. The para and apara vidyas both have to be acquired to meet these ends. Dayananda finds in the Vedas an inspiration for such a life, which strikes a balanced note between the material prosperity and spirituality, vidya and avidya, jnana and karma, sambhuti and asambhuti, yoga and samkhya, all taken as complimentary to serve the highest aspirations of our individual and also of the society. Dayananda and Aurobindo both have thus given new interpretation to the karma-kanda, and not the one belonging to the ritualistic period, and which had brought the divine Vedas to disrepute and ridicule.

Viniyoga on the Ritualistic Application of the Vedic Texts

It has been rightly pointed out by the Vedic scholars, Western and Indian, that between the actual composition of hymns (or the actual revelation of hymns), and the age of the commentators like Sakandasvami, Venkata Madhava or Sayana, or even between the revelation and the days of Nairuktas, grammarians and lexicographers, or even up to the time of the composition of the books like the Taittiriya Samhita (which is a book rather to be placed in the rank of the Brahmanas and Aranyakas], than may be regarded as an independent Veda—the Kṛsna Yajurveda), so many milleniums must have elapsed that neither the brahmanas or aranyakas nor the nairuktas, grammarians and the commentators and scholiasts can be regarded as the true interpreters of the texts; they, at the most, may be regarded as representing the notions of the times and the practices of the days, when they were present. In this sense, Sayana, Mahidhara and others are in no way the representatives of the very old traditions even. Sayana was born in fourteenth century A.D.; not to speak of the Rajasuya or the Asvamedha yajnas, even the darsapaurnamas yajna and the somayaga were obsolete in his times and very few rituals, which survived, also got so much mixed up with Pauranic gods and goddesses, that they could hardly be regarded as the representative of the Vedic traditions of milleniums B.C.

The objective of the Vedic revelation was manifold: to prescribe an eternal code of conduct for man; to show to the man his relationships with his surroundings and with the Creator; to impress upon him the cause of his bondage and to indicate in the broadest terms the way to attain freedom from that bondage; to reveal to the man some of the mysteries of Nature as to give him a start for further exploration; to lead the bonded soul on the path of truth, enlightenment and immortality. All these points may be summed up into three words. jnan(enlightenment), karma (duty and action) and upasana (devotion, dedication and love towards God). Man has to be instructed in respect to all these three and hence was the necessity of a special type of revelation to him; he alone has been provided with a characteristic intelligence to explore into the mysteries of the Unknown of inner and external realms, provided he gets initial directions and subsequent encouragements.

Thus it had been the unique privilege of man that the sruti was revealed to him at the earliest history, and has been his guide throughout. Man held this sruti in his highest esteem, and had always regarded it as his privileged sacred lore.

By and by, man's culture grew, and his activities became multifarious. During the course of his social evolution, as a demand of his aesthetic sense, he developed rituals, formalities and ceremonies. These rituals were centered round certain dialogues, utterances, invocations, dramatizations, and performances of several types. The old seer was acquainted with the Vedic verses, and as his love knew no bounds for God and His Word, the sruti, he took out the passages from this Divine Text and associated them with rituals and ceremonies which he held so sacred. The rituals became doubly sacred on account of these associations. This is how the viniyoga of the verses in numerous yajnas started milleniums ago.

By viniyoga is meant the recitation of a verse or its part, taken from the Vedic Samhitas and some other similar texts, along with the operations accompanying rituals and ceremonies. It must be remembered that the texts existed before the currency of the ritual: the text was not composed to be utilized in the rituals,—it had its sanctity even otherwise. But since the devotee had high regards for the texts and for the rituals both, he relevantly or even otherwise, got the two associated together. After a long and continuous usage of the text in the rituals, it was natural for people to have perpetuated this association to such an extent that one could not have thought of the text without its association with the rituals. Thus in the course of time we had, in a way, the degradation of the text. The deeper meanings of the texts were forgotten and their association with rituals only survived. This is why we say that Sayana, Mahidhara and other scholiasts in their commentaries do not give the true meanings of the texts. They merely depict the relation of the text with the ritual.

The viniyogas (ritualistic applications of the texts) are relevant and irrelevant both. Relevant ones are known to possess rupa-samṛddhi. This term has been defined in the Aitareya Brahmana as follows :

एतद् वै यज्ञस्य समृद्धं यद् रूपसमृद्धं यत् कर्म क्रियमाणं ऋगभिवदति ।

(Ait. Br.I.1.4)

i.e. if one speaks out such a mantra, in which the operation to be performed in the sacred ritual is described verbally too, this is known as the relevancy of the text (its rupa-samṛddhata). They (the invitatory and offering verses) are perfect in form (rupa-samṛddhata), as being addressed to Agni and Visnu; that in the sacrifice is perfect, which is perfect in form, that rite which as it is performed the verse describes. (A.B. Keith's translation).

Unnecessarily, a great emphasis has been laid on this concept of relevancy or the rupa-samṛddhata; usually, it would be seen from the illustrations quoted in the Aitareya Brahmana itself; the relevancy is only verbal or nominal; on the basis of one or two words, occurring in the text, the relevancy is imposed on the verse without looking into the real purport of the text. This is why, the viniyoga has done more harm than actually any material good. Dayananda has been the first man in the history to have taken away the stigma or stink of the viniyoga from the natural meanings of the texts. This has been his great contribution in the Vedic scholarship.

The viniyoga had given altogether a wrong impression about the prose and poetry of the Yajurveda text. This Veda has been rescued from the fetters of the viniyoga by Dayananda. The greater bulk of the Yajurveda, particularly from Chapter I to XVII, and several other chapters, had, it appears, no use other than of their recitation on the occasion of some of the elaborate ceremonials which developed around them, such as: darsapaurnamasa yajna (rituals associated with full moon and new moon), agnihotra (the fire-ritual), agrayana-isti (concerned with food), daksayana yajna (associated with Daksa Prajapati), caturmasya yajna (pertaining to the rainy season), soma yaga (ritual connected with Soma plant), vajapeya yajna (yajna of the Brahmanas concerning food grains), rajasuya (a yajna of the ksattriyas concerning the glory of the State), cayana nirupana (details concerning funeral pyres), asvamedha and numerous others. The entire Satapatha Brahmana (barring the last upanisadic chapter, the Bṛhadaranyaka) deals with these details. Of course, occasionally, the Satapatha Brahmana also refers to the deeper mystical and philosophical spirit behind the parables and the rituals. The beautiful Sukta of Creation and of Social Order, the so-called the Purusa Sukta has been nicknamed as the Naramedha Chapter (rituals dealing with human sacrifice), when we come to the commentary of Mahidhara and Uvata. (Chapter XXXI).

Allusions to Mental and Supra-Mental Realm

Whilst Dayananda also referred to the mental and supra-mental realms, whilst commenting on various Vedic mantras in his commentaries and elsewhere, this subject as an exclusive specialization has been taken over by Aurobindo. He poses the problems thus: "Our first duty, therefore, is to determine whether there is, apart from figure and symbol, in the clear language of the hymns a sufficient kernel of paychological notions to justify us in supposing at all a higher than the barbarous and primitive sense of the Veda. And afterwards, we have to find, as far as possible from the internal evidence of the Suktas themselves, the interpretation of each symbol and image and the right pychological function of each of the gods. A firm, and not a fluctuating sense, founded on good philological justification and fitting naturally into the context wherever it occurs, must be found for each of the fixed terms of the Veda." (Aurobindo, Vol. X.p. 32). After having given a serious thought to such problems, Aurobindo has formulated his "psychological theory" and has tried to explain the mystic reality behind such terms as agni, varuna, mitra, the asvins, the maruts, indra, the visvedevas, sarasvati, and her consorts, oceans and rivers, the Seven Rivers or the sapta-sindhu, the dawn, cow and angiras, the lost Sun and the lost cows, the angirasa ṛsis, the seven-headed thought, svar and dasagvas, pitṛs, the Hound of the Heaven, the Sons of Darkness, and dasyus and the conquest over them.

Aurobindo took to the comparative study of Dravidian languages and Sanskrit, and in this connection, he says, "It did not take long to see that the Vedic indications of a racial division between aryans and dasyus and the identification of the latter with the indigenous Indians were of a far flimsier character than I had supposed. But far more interesting to me was the discovery of a considerable body of profound pychological thought and experience lying neglected in these ancient hymns, and the importance of this element increased in my eyes when I found first, that the mantras of the Veda illuminated with a clear and exact light psychological experiences of my own for which I had found no sufficient explanation, either in European psychology or in the teachings of the Yoga or of the Vedanta, so far as I was acquainted with them, and secondly, that they shed light on obscure passages and ideas of the Upanisads to which, previously, I could attach no exact meaning and gave at the same time a new sense to much in the Puranas." (Aurobindo, Vol. X. p. 37).

I shall not enter here into the details, which my readers could read in the original writings of Aurobindo (see The Secret of the Veda, Centenary Library Edition, Vol.

X, 1972). I shall be sastisfied with quoting a few of the psychological renderings arrived at by Aurobindo of the Vedic terms:

Term	Psychological Sense
Ṛtam, ऋतम्	Truth.
Dhi, धी	Thought or understanding.
Raye, राये	Spiritual felicity.
Vaja, वाज	Homogeneous totality of thought.
Yajna, यज्ञ	Action, internal or external, consecrated to gods.
Yajamana, यजमान	Soul or personality as doer.
Ghṛta, घृत	Thought or mind.
Indra, इन्द्र	Illuminated mentality.
Indra's two horses	Double energies of mentality.
Go (Cow), गो	Light, as a symbol of divine knowledge. Mental illumination.
Asva (horses), अश्व	Vital energy.
Go-Asva, गो-अश्व	Light-energy companionship.
Bhuh, भूः	Earth (anna).
Bhuvah, भुवः	Middle-region(antariksha) (prana).
Svah, स्वः	Heaven (manas).
Mahas, महस्	Vastness and Truth, (vijnana) (satyam-ṛtam-bṛhat).
Seven Worlds	Seven psychological principles—sat, cit, ananda, vijnana, manas, prana, anna.
Death(Mṛtyu, मृत्यु)	Mortal state of matter, with mind and life involved in it.
Immortality (Amṛta, अमृत)	State of infinite being, consciousness and bliss—sat, cit-ananda.
Rodasi (Heaven and Earth) रोदसी	Mind and Body.

In this context, Aurobindo further writes :

"The Vedic deities are names, powers, personalities of the Universal Godhead and they represent each some essential puissance of the Divine Being. They manifest the cosmos and are manifest in it.

Children of Light, Sons of the Infinite, they recognize in the soul of man their brother and ally and desire to help and increase him by themselves increasing in him so as to possess his world with their light, strength and beauty. The gods call man to a divine companionship and alliance; they attract and uplift him to their luminous fraternity, invite his aid and offer them against the Sons of Darkness and Division. Man in turn calls the gods to his sacrifice, offers to them his swiftness and his strengths, his clarities and his sweetnesses,—milk and butter of the shining cow, distilled juices of the Plant of Joy, the Horse of the Sacrifice, the cake and the wine, the grain for the God-Mind's radiant coursers. He received them into his being and their gifts into his life, increases them by the hymn and the wine and forms perfectly,—as a smith forges iron, says the Veda,—their great and luminous godheads." (Hymns to the Mystic Fire, Vol. XI. p. 30).

Whilst Dayananda's concept of the Vedic texts is very much the same as the concept of Aurobindo, yet there are essential differences too. Dayananda's concept leads to pure monotheism in which the Supreme Self may be addressed, recalled or invoked with various names according to His qualities, characteristics, functions and attributes. He is one, though known by various names. His names are not meaningless;—the etymology of the word directly appears to refer to the reason why God is known by that particular name. According to Aurobindo each deity represents "Some essential puissance of the same Divine Being." This concept of Aurobindo, whilst on one hand possesses the kernel of monotheism, it leads in subsequent steps to monistic, pantheistic and even polytheistic views of the cosmos. Whilst commenting on Dayananda's Vedic monotheism, Aurobindo writes, "Such a theory is, obviously, difficult to establish. The Ṛgveda itself, indeed asserts (Ṛv. I. 164.46) that the gods are only different names and expressions of one universal Being, who in His own reality transcends the universe; but from the language of the hymns we are compelled to perceive in the gods not only different names, but also different forms, powers and personalities of the one Deva. The monotheism of the Veda includes in itself also the monistic and even polytheistic views of the cosmos and is by no means the trenchent and simple creed of modern theism. It is only by a violent struggle with the text that we can force on it a less complex aspect." (Aurobindo, Vol. x. p. 30).

It is difficult to comment on the two concepts of the Vedic gods, propounded by the two great masters of the soil, Dayananda and Aurobindo. Aurobindo treads on dangerous grounds, as much as his mysticism may lead to the worst kind of superstitions (of course, he takes a rational view), and may deteriorate into polytheistic pantheism. Aurobindo's symbolic mysticism is truly applicable to about a few thousands of the Vedic verses, with strenuous stretch of imagination: his interpretations answer to the needs of mental and supramental realms; Dayananda saw in the Vedic texts a wider application to the multipurposeful life; Dayananda's interpretations embrace in themselves the viewpoints of Aurobindo, and simultaneously provide a little beyond his realm too on both sides of the spectrum.

DIVINE LANGUAGE

Not only MAN, several of the animal species have also a community of their own, and the rigidity of the social pattern very much depends on the mode of expression, provided by Nature to them. Animals other than man dominatingly work through inherent inspirations, so often called instincts, but the man of today picks up things dominatingly through instruction. The language or the mode of expressions in the case of animals is instinctive; as if for each species there is a common inspired language, which every individual member of the species gets from the gracious Creator. According to the Vedic Theism, the first group of evolved men were graciously in possession of an Inspired Speech, and it had been the privilege of this MAN, characterized by the possession of specific intellect (of which the other species are almost deprived), that through the process of instruction and evolution, he could emerge out to the present day heights. A few amongst the first group of men were divinely inspired with Speech, (this is the Revealed Speech), and several amongst the rest of them, and also those of the subsequent generations picked up this Speech by instruction. The Speech since then underwent through numerous series of modifications. Perceptibly or imperceptibly, we are still passing through these phases.

There is an echo of the first divine utterance in the following lines of a Ṛgvedic verse :

> बृहस्पते प्रथमं वाचो अग्रं
> यत् प्रैरत नामधेयं दधानाः ।
> यदेषां श्रेष्ठं यदरिप्रमासीत्
> प्रेणा तदेषां निहितं गुहाविः ॥ (Ṛv. X. 71.1)

That, O Great Lord, the Creator, is the best of Speech which those giving a name (to objects) first utter; that which was the best of those (words) and free from defect, (Sarasvati, the goddess of Knowledge) reveals it though secretly implanted, by means of affection. (Ṛv. X. 71. 1)

The First Group of men found themselves surrounded with strange things, which had no names till then. To these men, God gave the divine inspiration, the Vedas revealed; now in their turn, they hunted out for the appropriate names, and with ingenuity they ascribed names to the objects of surroundings. This may be regarded as one of the highest achievements of MAN in his entire history of valuable contributions. This must have been the first use of the divine revealed knowledge.

The revelation of the divine speech has been referred to in the following verse also :

यज्ञेन वाच: पदवीयमायन्
नामन्वविन्दन् नृषिषु प्रविष्टाम् ।
तामाभृत्या व्यदधु: पुरुत्रा
तां सप्त रेभा अभि सं नवन्ते ॥ (Ṛv. X. 71.3)

The First Speech was provided by Lord Himself, the one called as YAJNA (=visnu=prajapati=creator) in the hearts of ṛsis (the specially chosen Masters); having acquired it, they (the ṛsis or Masters) dispersed it to many places. The seven singers make her tones resound in concert.

The tradition further says, that the Divine Speech was given to man in the form of four Vedas, the Ṛk, the Yajuh, the Sama and the Atharva through four persons, the four ṛsis, who came to be known as Agni, Vayu, Aditya and Angiras. These four Vedas are non-man-made, and in this sense they are known as apauruseya,- they are beyond the authorship of a mortal man. We have a verse in the Yajurveda :

तस्माद् यज्ञात् सर्वहुत ऋच: सामानि जज्ञिरे ।
छन्दांसि जज्ञिरे तस्मात् यजुस्तस्मादजायत ॥ (Ṛv. X. 90.9)

From that great yajna (=Visnu=Prajapati=Creator), Ṛks and Sama hymns were born; from the same were born the Chandas or the hymns of the Atharva; the Yajuh had its birth from it.

The same verse occurs in the Ṛgveda too (X. 90. 9). There is a similar verse in the Atharvaveda also :

यस्माद् ऋचो अपातक्षन् यजुर्यस्मादपाकषन् ।
सामानि यस्य लोमान्यथर्वाङ्गिरसो मुखं
स्कम्भं तं ब्रूहि कतमः स्विदेव सः ॥ (Av. X. 7.20)

From whom they fashioned off the Ṛk verses, from whom they scraped off the mantras of Yajuh, of whom the chants of the Samaveda are the hairs and the hymns of the Atharvaveda (Atharvans and Angirases) the mouth—that skambha (the Divine Originator) tell me : which forsooth is He?

The Divine Speech has been regarded as nitya or eternal, lasting for all times, for we have in the Ṛgveda "vaca virupa nityaya". (Ṛv. VIII. 75. 6)

All the ancient authorities in India have been acknowledging the revealed nature of the Vedic Texts, its being eternal and non-man-made or apauruseya. Manu says that having taken out terms from the Divine Speech, names were ascribed to all objects and actions.

सर्वेषां तु नामानि कर्माणि च पृथक् पृथक् ।
वेदशब्देभ्य एवादौ पृथक् संस्थाश्च निर्ममे ॥ (Manu, I. 21)

The Mahabharata also corroborates the same :

ऋषीणां नामधेयानि याश्च वेदेषु सृष्टयः ।
नानां रूपं च भूतानां कर्मणां च प्रवर्तनम् ॥
वेद शब्देभ्य एवादौ निर्मिमीते स ईश्वरः ।
शर्वर्यन्ते सुजातानामन्येभ्यो विदधात्यजः ॥

(Santi-parva, Chap. 232. 25-26)

We have similar passages elsewhere too in the Mahabharata. In the Satapatha Brahmana, it has been clearly said that the Vedas, Ṛk, Sama and the Atharva (or Atharvangiras) have been breathed out (i.e. revealed) by the Creator in the most natural form (XIV. 5. 4. 10). The names of the ṛsis (seers or Great Masters) bearing the torch of this Divine Knowledge came to be known as Agni, Vayu, Aditya and Atharvangiras : Ṛk through Agni, Yajuh through Vayu, Sama through Aditya and the Atharva through Angiras.

The Atharvaveda speaks of Veda—the Mother, with affection and reverence (XIX. 70.1) :

> स्तुता मया वरदा वेदमाता प्रचोदयन्तां पावमानी द्विजानाम् ।
> आयुः प्राणं प्रजां पशुं कीर्तिं द्रविणं ब्रह्मवर्चसम् ।
> मह्यं दत्त्वा व्रजत ब्रह्मलोकम् ॥ (Av. XIX. 71.1)
> Praised by me is the boon-giving Veda-Mother. Let them urge on the Devotional Hymn of the Twice-born. May I attain thereby the life-span, the vitality, progeny, cattle, fame, property, the splendour of knowledge; may you proceed to the World of Knowledge.

REVERENTIAL ATTITUDE OF UPANISADS AND SYSTEMS OF PHILOSOPHY

The Vedas are held in high esteem in all systems of Aryan Philosophy from the earliest times. Our systems of philosophy are based on the inspired teachings of the upanisads, which themselves regard the revealed Vedas as their source of knowledge. Whenever one speaks of svadhyaya or study, and pravacana, the teaching, it always refers to the study and teaching of the Veda (Taittiriya Up. 1. 9). All the vedangas, upangas and the treatises on the *upavedas are meant to explore the mysteries of the Vedas and to elucidate, expound and elaborate the Knowledge imparted through the Vedic Revelation. The

The vedangas constitute six subjects : siksa (orthography), vyakarana (grammar), nirukta (etymology), chanda (prosody), jyotis (astronomy), and kalpa (rituals); the upangas are the six systems of Indian philosophy : the Vaisesika, the Nyaya, the Samkhya, the Yoga, Purva Mimamsa, and the Uttara Mimamsa; the upavedas are the treatises on the sciences of (i) medicine, (ii) aesthetics, (iii) military and defence, and (iv) wealth and property.

Vedas are known as the sruti; the sruti, however, is different from a sastra; the sruti is like a seed and the sastra is like a fully evolved plant. Seed contains the plant, but to see the details of the plant in its seed would be a grave mistake. The sastra is the systematized knowledge, based on the sruti, having evolved out of it,—as if each sastra deals with a specified or specialized facet of knowledge, but the sruti is an integral whole. Both the sruti and the sastra deal with physical and metaphysical realms of the Creation in which man is the central figure. The sruti, the sastra and the smṛti (ethical, moral and legal codes) all the three are primarily concerned with man alone, and no other species, unless it affects the relation of that species with man.

In the Kena Upanisad, whilst dealing with the mystic doctrine of Brahman, it has been said:

> Austerity (tapas), restraint (dama) and work (karman) are the foundations of it. The Vedas are all its limbs. Truth (satya) is its abode. He, verily, who knows it (i. e. the mystic doctrine) thus, striking off evil becomes established in the most excellent, endless, heavenly world—yea, he becomes established ! (Kena, 33-34).

In the Mundaka Upanisad, the entire expanse of knowledge has been classified under two heads: apara and para; the apara includes the study of the Vedas and the Vedangas :

> Of these, the apara is the Ṛgveda, the Yajurveda, the Samaveda, the Atharvaveda, orthography or pronunciation (siksa), ritual (kalpa), grammar (vyakarana), prosody or metrics (chandas) and astronomy (jyotisa). Now the para or the highest is that whereby that Imperishable (aksara) Brahman is known.
> (Mund. Up.)

The Maitri Upanisad having described the miserable condition of the bonded individual soul, describes an antidote thus :

> The antidote, assuredly, indeed, for this elemental soul (bhutatman) is this: study of the knowledge of the Veda, and pursuit of one's regular due. (Maitri Up. IV. 4. 3)

The Veda or the eternal Divine Knowledge is one. The revealed word of God has come to us in three forms: (i) the Ṛk or the hymns pertaining to knowledge (ii) the Yajuh, outlining the details of actions (yajna) and duties of man in life, (iii) the Saman, the devotional songs. Each of the Vedic Samhitas (the Ṛk, the Yajuh, the Sama, and the Atharva) have the verses or prose consisting of all the three topics, jnana, the knowledge, karma, the field of action, and lastly upasana. The Bṛhadaranyaka Upanisad describes the creation of this trayi vidya (the threefold knowledge) thus:

> The Lord bethought of Himself: "Verily, if I shall intend against him, I shall make the less food for myself." With that speech, with that self He brought forth this whole world, whatsoever exists here: the Hymns (ṛk. i.e., the Ṛgveda), the Formulas (yajus, i.e., the Yajurveda), the chants (saman, i.e., the Samaveda), metres, sacrifices (yajnas), men and cattle. (Bṛ. Up. I. 2.6).

The Chandogya Upanisad mystically speaks of the udgitha, (the syllable OM used in the Vedic chants) thus:

> Ud is the Samaveda; gi is the Yajurveda; tha is the Ṛgveda. (Ch. Up. I. 3.7) implying that the mystical syllable Udgitha or OM (A-U-M) embraces in itself the entire divine knowledge, the threefold one or the trayi vidya. It has been further said in the same Upanisad:

> Death saw them there, in the ṛk, in the saman, in the yajus, just as one might see a fish in water. When they found this out, there arose out of the > ṛk, out of the saman, out of the yajus, and took refuge in sound. Verily, when one finishes an ṛk, he sounds out OM, similarly a saman; similarly a yajus. This sound is that syllable (aksara with a double meaning : a syllable and imperishable). He who pronounces the syllable, knowing it thus, takes refuge in that syllable, in the immortal, fearless sound. Since the gods became immortal by taking refuge in it, therefore, he becomes immortal. (Ch. Up. I. 4.3-5).

The Chandogya Upanisad sometimes speaks of a pentad (five-fold) of knowledge :

> Now, this person who is seen within the eye is the hymn (ṛk), is the chant (saman), is the recitation (uktha), is the sacrificial formula (yajus) and is the prayer (brahman).
> The threefold Veda has been collected with two other triads :
> Prajapati brooded upon the worlds. As they were being brooded upon, he extracted their essences :
> Agni (literally meaning fire also) was extracted out from the earth, Vayu, (or wind) from the inter-space or atmosphere, and Aditya (or the Sun) from dyau or celestial space.
> Upon these three deities he brooded. As they were being brooded upon, he extracted their essences. From Agni, came forth the Ṛk verses; from Vayu, came forth the Yajus prose; and from Aditya came forth the Saman chants.
> Upon the threefold knowledge he brooded. As it was being brooded upon, he extracted its essences: bhur from the Ṛk verses, bhuvas from the Yajus prose, and svar from the Saman chants. (Ch. Up. IV. 17.1-3)

The Taittiriya Upanisad has transformed the above triad into a tetrad; and thus this Upanisad has accommodated the fourth one also,—the Atharva-veda, also known as the Brahma-veda. With the three mahavyahṛtis, or the Supreme Symbols, bhur, bhuvah and svar, a fourth one, the mahas has been appended at the suggestion of an ancient seer Mahacamasya:

> Bhur, verily, is the Ṛk verses; bhuvas the Saman chants; svar the Yajus prose; mahas sacred knowledge or the Brahma verses (the Atharva). (Tai. Up. I. 5.1).

The Collateral Tetrads described by the Upanisad are as follows :

Bhur	Bhuvas	Svar	Mahas
Pṛthivi	Antariksa	Dyuloka	Aditya
(this world)	(atmosphere)	(yonder world)	(the Sun)
Agni	Vayu	Aditya	Candrama
(fire)	(wind)	(sun)	(moon)
Ṛk	Saman	Yajuh	Brahma (Atharva)
Prana	Apana	Vyana	Anna (food)

In the Kausitaki Upanisad, the three Vedas have been described as constituting three limbs of a personified Cosmic Lord :

> Having Yajus as his belly, having Saman as his head, > Having the Ṛk as his form, yonder Imperishable,
> 'Is Brạhman !' Thus he is to be discerned—
> The great seer, consisting of the Sacred Word (brahma-maya). (Kau. Up. I. 7).

As regards the Vedic triad, we have the following inspiring lines in the Mundaka Upanisad also:

> The works which the sages saw in the sacred sayings (the Vedic hymns),

Are manifoldly spread forth in the triad (of the Vedas).
Follow them constantly, ye lovers of truth.
This is your path to the world of good deeds.
(Mund. Up. I. 2.1)

The Mundaka Upanisad in its opening lines speaks thus of the traditions through which the sacred knowledge, first given to man as the revealed one, passed through several generations :

Brahma arose as the first of the gods—
The maker of all, the protector of the world.
He told the knowledge of the Supreme, the foundation of all knowledge,
To Atharvan, his eldest son.
What Brahma taught to Atharvan
Even that knowledge of Brahma, Atharvan told in ancient time to Angir,
He told it to Bharadvaja Satyavaha,
Bharadvaja to Angiras—both the higher and the lower knowledge. (Mund. Up. I. 1.1).

Of course, this geneology has not much of historical significance. The same Upanisad again describes the source of all religious rites as follows :

From him (the supreme Self), the Ṛg verses, the Saman Chant, the Sacrificial Formulas (yajus), the initiation rite (diksa),
And all the sacrifices, ceremonies and sacrificial gifts (daksina),
The year too and the sacrificer, the worlds
Where the moon (Soma) shines brightly, and where the Sun. (Mund. Up. II. 1.6)

How the Cosmic Vitality, the Cosmic Life, is related to the Vedas would be seen from the passage from the Prasna Upanisad :

Like the spokes on the hub of a wheel,
Everything is established on Life (prana);
The Ṛk verses, the Yajus prose and the Saman chants,
The sacrifices, the nobility and the priesthood.
(Prasna. II. 6)

The same Upanisad, again in its own characteristic way refers to the triad of the Vedas whilst dealing with the subject of partial or complete comprehension of the most august syllable A-U-M (i.e. OM). It so begins :

To him then he said: "Verily, O Satyakama, that which is the syllable OM is both the higher (the unqualified or nirguna) and the lower (the qualified or saguna) Brahman. (cf. para and apara knowledge of the Mundaka Upanisad). Therefore with this support, in truth, a knower reaches one or the other.

If he meditates on one element (namely, A), having been instructed by that alone he quickly comes into the earth (after death). The Ṛk verse leads him to the world of men. There, united with austerity, chastity and faith, he experiences greatness.

Now, if he is united in mind with two elements (namely A+U), he is led by the Yajus prose to the intermediate space, to the world of the moon. Having experienced greatness in the world of the moon, he returns hither again.

Again, he who meditates on the highest person (purusa) with the three elements of the syllable OM (namely A+U+M) is united with brilliance (tejas) in the Sun. As a snake is freed from its skin, even so, verily, is he freed from sin. He is led by the Saman chants to the world of Brahman. (Prasna. V.1—5)

And the Upanisad finally summarizes it in a verse of four lines thus :

> With the Ṛk verses, to this world; with the Saman chants, to the intermediate space;
> With the Yajus formulas, to that which sages recognize;
> With the syllable OM is truth as support, the knower reaches That > Which is peaceful, unaging, immortal, fearless and supreme. (Prasna V.7)

The Upanisads fall in tune with that literature of which the Vedas are the fountain-head. (The Brahmanas and the Aranyakas expound and elaborate the contents of the Vedic Samhitas and the Upanisads constitute the metaphysical phase of this entire literature). In this connection the following lines of the Svetasvatara are of great significance :

> That which is hidden in the secret of the Vedas, even the Mystic Doctrines (Upanisad)—
> Brahma knows that as the source of the sacred word (Brahman),
> The gods and seers of old who knew That,
> They, (coming to be) of Its nature, verily, have become immortal. (Sv. Up.)

And thus, the older Upanisads (the major ones) are religious and philosophical treatises of the early Vedic literature. The Upanisads are meant to elaborate and elucidate the mysteries of life indicated in the Vedic Texts in the subtle form.

VEDA AND THE SYSTEMS OF INDIAN PHILOSOPHY

The entire Aryan literature of Ancient India not only shows a reverential attitude towards the Vedas, it regards it as the Supreme Authority. Whatever is in the sruti is the supreme authority; it is the self-luminous light which needs no other light to establish its validity or identity; it is known as the Absolute Authority or the svatah pramana (स्वत: प्रमाण), or the self-evident testimony. Other literatures come under the category of the paratah pramana (परत: प्रमाण), that is, they are held in esteem and authority, inasmuch as they are in conformity with the Vedic tenets and do not disagree with or do not oppose all that has been said in the Vedas. This literature receives light from the Vedas.

The Vedas being the earliest revealed knowledge are regarded as eternal, that is, the truths expounded in them are valid for all times, for all ages and for all places. They are universal. The science or philosophy deals with those truths which are universal; it has been the cherished ideal of human sciences also to discover such universal truths, and if possible, then to reduce them to one universal truth. God is truth personified; He reveals Himself in and through His Creation; He has revealed Himself through His eternal WORD also. WORD has been God; word has ever been with God. The Vedas constitute a fraction of His divine word. The Vedas constitute a seed of knowledge, which is ever present in the highly evolved plant in the sense that the entire plant is present in the seed. The entire present day knowledge is the evolved manifestation of the same seed; it has come out of the seed; it is sustained by the seed, and in one sense, it cannot go out of the seed.

Through His divine knowledge to the earliest group of men, God has been our first and foremost teacher. The author of the Yoga Sutras, the great seer Patanjali, has expressed this sentiment in the following words :

> (This Lord) is the Greatest Teacher of even the earliest great ones, because unconditioned by time.
> (Yoga. I. 26)

Any concept of Theism would not be worthwhile, in which God is merely a Creator or a Ruler, but who is not our First Teacher and who is not the source of knowledge. The Vedanta Sutras of Vyasa accept the glory of that Brahman (ब्रह्म) alone who is the Creator of the Universe, who alone is its sustainer and so forth, and who having revealed the Vedas, is the acknowledged Source of Knowledge :

> Sastra yonitvat, शास्त्रयोनित्वात्, (having been the Source of Knowledge; i.e. the Source of the Veda).
> (Ved. Su. I.1.3)

Kanada, the author of the Vaisesika, clearly says that the Vedas are to be regarded as of supreme authority, since they are the revealed WORD of God (तद् वचनादाम्नायस्य प्रामाण्यम्) (I.1.3). The word "amnaya" is another synonym of Veda.

Gotama, the author of the Nyaya Sutras, and Vatsyayana, the commentator on these Sutras accept the supreme authority of the Vedas; just as in the field of physical, biological and medical sciences, things become authoritative, when they are demonstrable and are based on sound experiences, in the same way, the Vedas are taken as authoritative :

> मन्त्रायुर्वेदप्रामाण्यवच्च तत्प्रामाण्यमाप्तप्रामाण्यात् । (Nya. Su. II.1.67) that is, like the experiences of medical sciences etc., they are authoritative, and also because all the apta (reliable and authoritative) persons have been speaking of their supreme authority. Commenting on this sutra, Vatsyayana and Dayananda both have said that :

> All men should acknowledge the authoritativeness of the Vedas which are eternal and are the word of God, because all the great Yogins, and all the ancient sages like Brahma and others who were righteous, free from deceit, treachery and other similar defects, merciful, preachers of truth, and masters of learning have admitted the authority of the Vedas to be of the same nature as that of the Mantra and the Ayurveda. (Ṛgbhabhu)

By mantra is meant the 'findings of all true sciences'. There has never been a mention of the authorship of the Vedas. All the known authors, so far available in history of our traditions, have unhesitatingly and irrevocably acknowledged the non-personal authorship of these Vedas. Thus on the undisputed testimony of the authoritative persons, it can be said that the Vedas are the supreme authority.

Kapila, the author of the Samkhya, clearly says that the Vedas have not been composed by any human being, because nobody in traditions and history ever saw their author :

न पौरुषेयत्वं तत्कर्त्तुः पुरुषस्याभावात् । (Sa. Su. V. 46).

Ballantyne (J.R.) translates this aphorism as follows:

> They (the Vedas) are not the work of (supreme) man; because there is no such thing as the (supreme) man (whom you allude to as being, possibly) their maker.

Many of us have been of the opinion that the system of the Samkhya does not acknowledge the identity of God as the First Cause of the Universe; even such persons never accuse the Samkhya as not accepting the infallibility of the Vedas. A critic says : Since the Vedas were uttered by Primal Man, they must have been the composition or the work of that man; on this, the reply of the Samkhya is as follows :

> यस्मिन्नदृष्टेऽपि कृतबुद्धिरुपजायते तत् पौरुषेयम् ।
> That (alone) is Man's work, in respect of which, even be it something invisible, an effort of understanding takes place. (Sa. Su. V. 50)

Commenting on this sutra, Ballantyne (based on the commentaries of Aniruddha, Mahadeva and others) writes :

> That it has been remarked that a thing is not Man's work (pauruseya) merely through its having been uttered by Man; for no one speaks of the respiration during profound sleep as being Man's work (or voluntary act). But what need to speak of antecedence of understanding ? The Vedas, just like an expiration, proceed of themselves, from the Self-existent, through the force of adṛsta (अदृष्ट, fate or some invisible agency), wholly unpreceded by thought. Therefore, they are not (a Supreme) Man's work (that is, they are not pauruseya).

The author of the Samkhya further says :

निजशक्त्यभिव्यक्तेः स्वतः प्रामाण्यम् । (Sa. Su. V. 51)
They are, spontaneously, conveyers of right knowledge, from the patentness of their own power (to instruct rightly).

Thus according to the Samkhya, just as it is beyond the human capacity to create the universe, just as the man in sound sleep is not responsible for his expirations, similarly, no human being could have produced the Vedas; they have come out of their ownselves, and they have spontaneously become the conveyers of the right knowledge. They are apauruseya (non-man-made), and they differ from other literature produced by men.

Jaimini, the author of the Purva-Mimamsa accepts the supreme authority of the Veda. He very comprehensively elaborates the science of interpretation of the Vedic Texts. What the Vedanta Sutras are to the Upanisads, the Purva-Mimamsa sutras are to the Veda. After having discussed out the theme of infallibility of the Vedic Texts, Jaimini discusses the eternal nature of WORD (the Veda) :

नित्यस्तु स्याद् दर्शनस्य परार्थत्वात् ।
It (the WORD) is surely eternal because it is manifested for the sake of others. (Mi. Su. I. 1.18)

Words are of two kinds, Vedic and Laukika (the words of the Vedas are the vedic); henceafter, the words coined through human agency are laukika. Both the words are meant to be understood by persons other than the speaker, and therefore, they should continue to exist after the moment they have been spoken. In this sense, they do not die out; therefore, they must be eternal. If the man-made-word could be eternal, much more so would be the words given to us through divine sources.

This type of argument has been examined and discussed in details by Indian grammarians like Panini and Patanjali. Of course, this type of treatment has no direct bearing on the question of the infallibility and eternal nature of the Vedas.

Panini and Patanjali on the Eternality of the Vedas, of Words and of the Relations of Meaning with the Word.

Panini and other Indian grammarians and linguists have always delighted in discussing a few problems which may not be of interest to a general reader or an academician of any other language. These questions are :

(i) Is sound (sabda) eternal (nitya) or subject to annihilation (anitya) ? When we utter a sound, is it merely a manifestation of what was existing already or it is altogether a new entity ?

(ii) Word is a collection of sounds. It is meant to convey a sense to others. Within the interval, the word is spoken and heard by different people, does it continue to exist ? Is it destroyed as soon as comprehended by others ?

(iii) Is there a natural relation between word (sabda) and the sense or meaning (artha) it carries; or is the relation arbitrary and empirical ?

(iv) Is the revealed Word eternal ? If so in what sense ? In the Vedic Samhitas, (the present day available collection of texts) the words are found in a certain sequence with proper accents. Is this sequence eternal ? Is the sequence eternal along with the accents and other details ?

These are some of the fundamental questions raised and discussed by Patanjali whilst commenting on the Panini Sutras :

तेन प्रोक्तम्। (Ast.IV.3.101).

We shall not enter into the details of discussion. It appears that Patanjali, the great commentator, is of the view that in the case of amnaya, not only the sequence (anupurvi, आनुपूर्वी) is eternal or fixed, (nitya or niyata) the accents are also eternal and fixed. In each Creation, the Vedas are revealed in the same words, arranged in the same sequence with the same accents :

स्वरो नियत आम्नायेऽस्य वामशब्दस्य ।
वर्णानुपूर्वी खल्वप्याम्नाये नियतास्य वामशब्दस्य ।

(Mahabhasya, V. 2.59)

But in the case of Branches (sakhas) like the Katha, the Kalapa, Paippalada and so on, the sequence is anitya or non-eternal; the sense or meaning (artha), in their case is also eternal :

यद्यप्यर्थो नित्यः यात्वसौ वर्णानुपूर्वी साऽनित्या ।
तद् भेदाच्चैतद् भवति काठकं कालापकं मौदकं पैप्पलादकमिति ।

(Mahabhasya, IV. 3.101)

Of course, the authorities have been differing amongst themselves on many of these points. But on one point, they have all agreed, that is, on the revealed nature of the Vedas in the most natural form, through a most natural proce s in the earliest history of the highly developed human species.

AGNI, MITRA, VARUNA AND INDRA

AGNI

It would be seen from the survey of the entire Ṛgveda that the six of the ten books are given each to the hymns of a single ṛsi or the family of the ṛsis. The hymns of the Second Book are associated with Ṛsi Gṛtsamada, of the Third and the Seventh Books with Visvamitra and Vasistha respectively, of the Sixth with Bharadvaja and of the Fifth with Atri and his family. In each of these books the hymns with the devata Agni are first collected together, and then followed by those of which Indra is the devata. At the close of the books we have hymns of which the devata or subject title is Brhaspati, Surya, Ṛbhus, Usa etc. Of course, the entire Ninth Book is devoted to Soma Pavamana. The First, Eighth and Tenth Books are associated with numerous devatas and ṛsis. Here too Agni hymns are leading, followed by Indra and others. The samhitikarana of the Ṛgveda (the editing of the collection) is thus based on a well-conceived homogeneous structure.

The first word of the Rgveda is agni. The hymn (I. 1) clearly explains what this agni stands for. Oldenberg has translated the first verse as follows :

> अग्निमीळे पुरोहितं यज्ञस्य देवमृत्विजम् ।
> होतारं रत्नधातमम् ॥ (Ṛv. I. 1.1)
> I magnify agni, the purohita, the divine ministrant of the sacrifice, the hotṛ priest, the greatest bestower of treasures.
> [I|adore the Flame, the vicar, the divine Ṛtvik of the sacrifice, the summoner, who most founds the ecstasy. Aurobindo, Vol. XII. p. 39].

Oldenberg, whilst translating this verse had in his mind the entire fire ceremony in which traditionally the terms agni, purohita, ṛtvik and hotṛ had assumed definite technical meaning.

What this agni actually is would be clear from the four verses (I. 1. 5—8) of the same hymn (translation of Oldenberg).

5. अग्निर्होता कविक्रतुः सत्यश्चित्रश्रवस्तमः ।
देवो देवेभिरागमत् ॥

May Agni the thoughtful hotṛ, he who is true, and most splendidly renowned, may the god come hither with gods.

6. यदङ्ग दाशुषे त्वमग्ने भद्रं करिष्यसि ।
तवेत् तत् सत्यमङ्गिरः ॥

Whatever good thou wilt do to thy worshipper, O Agni, that (work) veriiy is thine, O Angiras.

7. उप त्वाग्ने दिवे दिवे दोषावस्तर्धिया वयम् ।
नमो भरन्त एमसि ॥

Thee, O Agni, we approach day by day, O (god) who shinest in the darkness; with our prayer, bringing adoration to thee—

8. राजन्तमध्वराणां गोपामृतस्य दीदिवम् ।
वर्धमानं स्वे दमे ॥

Who-are the king of all worship, the guardian of ṛta, the shining one, increasing in thine own house.

I have given Oldenberg's translation. Wilson, and Griffith's translations, almost based on Sayana's interpretation are very much the same. For example, Wilson translates the verse 5 as follows :

> May Agni, the presenter of oblation, the attainer of knowledge, he who is true, renowned and divine, come hither with the gods.

All these renderings have a stigma and stink of ritualistic tradition, whilst the verses have a deeper meaning. Aurobindo has brought forward a "psycholgical sense" from these verses :

> May Agni, the priest of the offering, whose will towards action is that of the seer, who is true, most rich in varied inspiration, come, a god with the gods. (5)
> The good that thou wilt create for the giver, that is that truth of thee, O Angiras. (6)
> To thee, day by day, O Agni, in night and in the light, we by the thought come bearing our submission. (7)
> To thee who shinest out from the sacrifices (or, who governest the sacrifices) of the Truth, and its illumination, increasing in thy own home. (8)
> (Aurobindo, Vol. X. p. 59)

It must be remembered that the words ṛtam and satyam may sometimes appear to be synonymous, but often, particularly when they come together or in close proximity, they have distinctive associations also. In phrases like satyam ṛtam bṛhat, both of them have precise distinctive significance (the truth, the right, the vast). In the Veda, Upanisads and the Vedanta this truth (satya) is a path leading to felicity, leading to immortality; it is again that by the path of the truth, a sage, ṛsi or seer (a kavi, a vipra) passes beyond; he passes out of falsehood, out of the mortal state into an immortal existence.

नमो ब्रह्मणे नमस्ते वायो त्वमेव प्रत्यक्षं ब्रह्मासि, त्वामेव
प्रत्यक्षं ब्रह्म वदिष्यामि, ऋतं वदिष्यामि, सत्यं वदिष्यामि ।

O Lord supreme, my homage to you: O vayu, my homage to you; you evidently are the brahma (vast); I shall ever call you as the evident brahma (vast), I shall ever call you as the evident ṛta (right) and as the evident satya (truth).

According to Aurobindo, when we speak of truth, we are speaking truth of divine essence, not truth of mortal sensation and appearance. It is satyam, truth of being (sat), it is in its action ṛtam, right, truth of divine being regulating right activity both of mind and body; it is bṛhat, the universal truth proceeding direct and under-formed out of the infinite. The consciousness that corresponds to it is also infinite, bṛhat, large as opposed to the consciousness of the sense-mind, which is founded upon limitation. The one is described in the Upanisad as the bhuma, or large and plenty, the other as alpa, small, or the little. The supramental or Truth-consciousness is also known as mahas. In respect to this, we have the faculties, such as dṛsti, sruti and viveka, the direct vision of the truth, the direct hearing of its word, the direct discrimination of the right, and ṛsi, sage or seer possesses these faculties.

Now what is agni in the Veda? He is the foremost force; He is the foremost light; and therefore, He is the foremost adorable.

Dayananda derives the word agni from the roots अञ्चु, अग, अगि and इण् (√ancu, √aga, √agi and √in).

Ancu, gati-pujanayoh (अञ्चु गतिपूजनयोः) which means to act or to go, and to adore. Act or gati is of three types – to know, to go and to attain. The supreme Lord, the highest consciousness is all-knowledge, omniscient, the only worth knowing and attaining, and the only foremost adorable, and therefore, in the Veda, such foremost adorable, attainable, omniscient Lord is known as Agni. The Nirukta, almost in the same sense, describes Agni as अग्रणीर्भवति (agranirbhavati), the one who always is in forefront, or who is the foremost and the first to be invoked in the sacred acts; अग्रं यज्ञेषु प्रणीयते (Nir. VII. 14).

This foremost adorable (Agni) has been variously described in the Vedic Texts. He is known as jatavedas, or knower of all births, विश्वानि वयुनानि विद्वान्, it knows all our actions, or it knows all manifestations or phenomena, or it possesses all forms and activities of the divine wisdom. Agni is the divine power in men, the energy of fulfilment through which they do their work in Him. It is again this work which is symbolized by the yajna or sacrifice.

Agni, in the same sense, may also be taken as the divine will perfectly inspired by divine wisdom; it is again the active or effective power of the truth-consciousness (kavikratuh); Agni is satya, true in His being; perfect possession of His own truth, and the essential truth of things gives Him the power to apply it properly in all acts and movements of force. The numerous verses of the Veda associate Him, Agni, with various, perfectly significant aspects and attributes, hotṛ, citravastamah, duta and he is the supreme divine power accompanied with lesser divine powers : देवो देवेभिः ।

Agni is accompanied with mayas, felicity, bhadra and suvita (blessings, and righteousness) as opposed to durita, duhkha, or durguna (evils, discomforts, misfortunes, and misdeeds).

It must always be remembered that it is imagery of the Veda, which describes the sacrifice (all noble acts done with non-attachment, without the expectation of rewards and for the general good) as travelling towards the gods, and man himself as a traveller moving towards the truth (satyam), the light (jyotih) and the felicity (amṛtam). In that sense, the truth, the vast and Agni's own Home (swam damam, स्वं दमं, I. 75.5; sve dame, स्वे दमे, I. 1. 8) are identical.

Since Agni is agrani (अग्रणी), the foremost leader, according to Dayananda, it on the mundane and social plane represents a leader (honest and sincere in dealings) of any group, society, social or state organization, even of an army; but this leader should be an intellectual person, adherent to truth and benevolence; suryavat sarvartha prakasaka (सूर्यवत् सर्वार्थप्रकाशकः), shining like the sun, and giving enlightenment (Ṛv. II.1.4) and vahniriva vartamana, (वह्निरिव वर्तमान) existing like fire (Ṛv. II. 1.5)—(Dayananda).

VARUNA AND MITRA

The Veda, at the highest level, stands for the concept of a supramental consciousness which leads the devotee to immortality and beatitude, but at lower levels, it wishes the individual to get the first hand acquaintance with the ever-changing dynamic world in which the soul has been placed in an ever-changing and highly complex corporeal system of five sheaths—the eternal one, nourished and sustained by food, the annamaya (अन्नमय), followed by the second one, of the vital breaths or the pranamaya

(प्राणमय), and then the third one, the psychic sheath of numerous mental behaviours, the manomaya (मनोमय); so far are the three material sheaths, evolved out of the causal primordial Prakṛti; and then we have two further sheaths, the one of the knowledge or supramental or transcendental understanding, the vijnanamaya (विज्ञानमय), and the fifth and the last of bliss or beatitude or the transcendental happiness, the anandamaya (आनन्दमय).

In the First Book of the Ṛgveda, we have a reference in the first hymn to agni, the foremost adorable, which is associated with truth in being (satya), truth in activity (ṛta) and truth in universality (bṛhat). In the second hymn, we have a reference to two equally significant words varuna and mitra. They are also associated with ṛta. Let us take the following last three verses of this hymn, as translated by Wilson :

7. मित्रं हुवे पूतदक्षं वरुणं च रिशादसम्।
धियं घृताचीं साधन्ता ॥

I invoke mitra of pure vigour, and varuna the devourer of food; the joint accomplishers of the act bestowing water (on the earth).

8. ऋतेन मित्रावरुणा वृता वृधावतस्पृशा। क्रतुं बृहन्तमाशाथे।

Mitra and varuna, augmenters of water, dispensers of water, you connect this perfect rite with its true award.

9. कवी नो मित्रावरुणा तुविजाता उरुक्षया।
दक्षं दधाते अपसम् ॥

Sapient mitra and varuna, prosper our sacrifice and increase our strength : you are born for the benifit of many; you are the refuge of multitudes.

It is needless to comment on Wilson's renderings. With Mitra and Varuna, we have the association of dhiyam ghṛtacim which should be translated as perfecting the bright understanding; in it, we have the concept of purified discernment. We have to correlate this verse with the following in which we have the terms kavi, kratu, ṛtavṛdha, ṛtaspṛsa, bṛhantam etc. as in the first hymn of the Ṛgveda ṛtavṛdha and ṛtaspṛsa mean much more than augmenters and dispensers of water.

Now we shall try to see what interpretations could be given to the term agni, mitra, and varuna when all the three occur as a triple or a triad in plural number; when these terms occur in pairs of two (as dyads) in dual number and when they occur singly in singular number. And again, we have further to see what these triads, dyads, and singles mean on the ephimeral materialistic plane, what on the mental or supramental plane, what on the cosmogonic plane, what on the social plane, and what on the transcendental plane. The Vedic hymns are multipurpose hymns in their essential nature, since they are apauruseya (अपौरुषेय), i.e. not composed by a human individual. Sometimes, in one and the same hymn, one is first instructed with the ephimeral and materialistic aspect, and then in subsequent verses in the same hymn, he is elevated, step by step, through stages up to the highest transcendental knowledge.

On the material plane, agni may be the simple fire produced by attrition, then subsequently it may mean the solar heat and light; then it may be universalized with the cosmic energy, and in the psychic realm, it may be the guiding intelligence, and finally, in the transcendental stage, it may be the divine light of spirituality or it may be the most adorable Lord Himself. On the social plane, agni may be a leader of the society, an instructor of an institution and so on. Exactly the same may be said of the words like vayu, indra, mitra and varuna. The adjectives and other qualifying phrases in the verse would indicate to an interpreter the rationale of multiple meanings.

The word varuna has been derived by Dayananda from two roots vṛn (वृञ्) varane, to choose, to select, and vara (वर) ipsayam : यः सर्वान् शिष्टान् मुमुक्षून् घर्मात्मनो वृणोति स वरुणः i.e. the one who selects out, chooses and thus favours them only who are virtuous and deserving to follow the path leading to freedom from bondage is varuna.

Alternatively, यः शिष्टैर्मुमुक्षुभिर्व्रियते वर्य्यते वा स वरुणः i.e. the one who is chosen or selected for dedication, worship and adoption by the virtuous and spiritual persons, is varuna.

He alone is worth having, worth possession, and thus He alone is supermost, and therefore, the most venerable Lord is varuna. In a number of Vedic verses, He is addressed as raja varuna, the supreme ruler varuna.

According to Aurobindo, agni, indra, varuna and mitra are the four gods (or faculties) who represent the working of the Truth in the human mind and temperament. Mitra, according to the Vedic text is putadaksa (पूतदक्ष), possessed of a purified judgment; varuna is risadas (रिशादस्), the destroyer of hurters or enemies (the obstacles). There are two obstacles which prevent the intellect from being a perfect and luminous mirror of truth-consciousness; first, impurity of discernment or discriminative faculty which leads to the confusion of the truth; secondly, the many causes or influences which interfere with the growth of the truth by limiting its full application or by breaking up the connections and harmony of the thoughts that express it, and which thus bring about poverty and falsification of its contents. (Aurobindo, Vol. X. p. 71). These hostile agencies, in the Vedic terminology, are known as vṛtra, dasyu, ahi, etc, which we shall take up later on. In this context, varuna is risadas, destroyer of enemy, of all that seek to injure the growth.

Mitra, then a power like varuna of light and truth, especially represents love, joy and harmony, the foundations of mayas (मयस्), the Vedic beatitude.

Dayananda has derived the word mitra from the root nimida (ञिमिदा). snehane, to love or to show affection, with a pratyaya or particle ktra (क्त्र) added to it : मेद्यति स्निह्यति स्निह्यते वा स मित्रः i.e. the one who loves and shows affection is mitra. God is the supreme friend of ours and therefore, He is mitra.

The Nirukta (X. 21) gives other derivations : मित्रः प्रमीतेः त्रायते, संमिन्वानो द्रवतीति वा, मेदयतेर्वा, i.e. mitra is so called because he preserves from destruction (pramites trayate), or because he runs (dravati), measuring things together ($\sqrt{mi}$) or the word is derived from the causal of the verb mid (to be fat).

(ii) Minvano dravati, from root $\sqrt{}$ mivi, secane (मिवि सेचने), to impregnate, and from dru (द्रु) to move, to go, i.e.

mitra is one who impregnates whilst moving, and in this sense, mitra is also the sun or the cloud. There are other possible derivations : (i) माति परिमापयति इति मित्रम्, the one who measures out the entire universe, is mitra; (ii) मितं कर्मफलं राति ददातीति मित्र:,the one who awards the fruits of action judiciously is mitra.

How our supreme Lord is mitra is seen from the following verse :

मित्रो जनान् यातयति ब्रुवाणो
मित्रो दाधार पृथिवीमुत द्याम् ।
मित्र: कृष्टीरनिमिषाभि चष्टे
मित्राय हव्यं घृतवज्जुहोत ॥ (Ṛv. III. 59.1)

Mitra-Varuna Dyad—The first hymn to mitra-varuna (मित्रावरुण) is Ṛv. V. 62. The goal of journey of the manifested sun of divine knowledge is eternal and immutable truth. God is one, but in Him unite all divine virtues; the objective of all sacrifices is to unite all the wealth of being and knowledge (sat and cit), and power and bliss (ananda) in the supreme. Varuna is associated with all that is vast and pure (infinity and purity), mitra is associated with all that is shining (light) and harmony. The impeller of the cosmic movement and journey pours out knowledge in us, the milk of the herds, by the dawns of the inner light, and there descend the streams of immortal existence followed by the single and perfect movement of mitra-varuna, the light and the purity; the harmony and the infinity. It is the rain of heaven which, as if these two God-heads, the divine powers, pour down, upholding the physical existence in its fruits and the celestial in its herding radiances of illumination. Thus they create in man a force full of divine knowledge and a wide being which they guard and increase, a strewn seat for the sacrifice. This thosand pillared force of knowledge they make a home for themselves and dwell there in the revelations of the word. It is a home full and large with the sweatness and ecstasy of the supreme and inviolable peace and bliss.

In this context, one can go through the nine verses of Ṛv. V. 62. I shall quote here Aurobindo's literal translation of a few of them (Vol. X. p. 466).

1. ऋतेन ऋतमपिहितं ध्रुवं वां
   सूर्यस्य यत्र विमुचन्त्यश्वान् ।
   दश शता सह तस्थुस्तदेकं
   देवानां श्रेष्ठं वपुषामपश्यम् ।।

By the truth is veiled that ever-standing truth of yours, where they unyoke the horses of the Sun: there the ten hundreds stand still together; That One,—I have beheld the greatest of the embodied gods.

2. तत् सु वां मित्रावरुणा महित्वमीर्मा
   तस्थुषीरहभिर्दुदुह्रे ।
   विश्वाः पिन्वथः स्वसरस्य धेना
   अनु वामेकः पविरा ववर्त ।।

That is the utter vastness of you, O Mitra and Varuna, there the Lord of the movement milks the herds of his stable radiances by the days. Lo, your twain swell all the streams of the Blissful One and your one wheel moves in their path.

3. अधारयतं पृथिवीमुत द्यां
   मित्रराजाना वरुणा महोभिः ।
   वर्धयतमोषधीः पिन्वतं गा
   अव वृष्टिं सृजतं जीरदानू ।।

You uphold earth and heaven, O Mitra king and king Varuna, by your greatnesses; you increase the growths of earth; you nourish the shining herds of heaven; you pour forth the rain of its waters, O swift in strength.

8. हिरण्यरूपमुषसो व्युष्टा वयः
   स्थूणमुदिता सूर्यस्य ।
   आ रोहथो वरुण मित्र गर्त—
   मतश्चक्षाथे अदितिं दितिं च ।।

To that home whose form is of the gold, whose pillars are of the iron, in the breaking of the Dawn, in the uprising of the Sun, you ascend, O Varuna, O Mitra, and thence you behold the infinite and the finite.

The inherent idea of the term of varuna is infinity and purity and of mitra is light and harmony. Dayanand interprets mitra as pranavat suhṛt (प्राणवत् सुहृत्; life-like friendly, dear as life, and harmonious), and varuna as varah sresthah (वर: श्रेष्ठ:), the superb and pure. (Ṛv. II. 1.4)

INDRA

Dayananda derives the word indra from the √idi, (इदि) paramaisvarye, to become one possessed with highest glory : य इन्दति परमैश्वर्यवान् भवति स इन्द्र: परमैश्वर्य:; our supreme Lord is Indra, since none else possesses that glory which He possesses.

The Nirukta of Yaska (X.8) gives about 13 etymologies of the word indra, of which the following eight are of his own, and the rest five belong to other authorities :

(i) इरां दृणातीति—(इरा+दृ) (ira+dṛ)
(ii) इरां ददातीति—(इरा+दा) (ira+da)
(iii) इरां दधातीति—(इरा+धा) (ira+dha)
(iv) इरां दारयत इति—(इरा+दारय) (ira+daraya)
(v) इरां धारयत इति—(इरा+धारय) (ira+dharaya)
(vi) इन्दवे द्रवतीति—(इन्दु+द्रु) (indu+dru)
(vii) इन्दौ रमतीति—(इन्दु+रम्) (indu+ram)
(viii) इन्धे भूतानीति—(√इन्ध्) (√indh)

According to Agrayana इदं करणात्, i.e. the Lord is Indra since He does the most.

According to Aupamanyava, इदं दर्शनात् (idam+dṛs), our Lord is Indra, since He is greatest seer. The word is also derived from √इन्द्, √ind, meaning to be powerful, i.e. being powerful he tears the enemies asunder or puts them to flight. (इन्दते वैश्वर्यकर्मण:। इन्द्रञ्छत्रूणां दारयिता वा; द्रावयिता वा); or he honours the sacrificers (आदरयिता च यज्वनाम्) and for the same reason, the infinitesimal soul* in body is also indra, the seer, (Ait. Br. III. 13).

There is a ritualistic etymology of the word Indra: (indan) adarayịta ca yajvanam, i.e. the one who honours and respects the performers of sacrifices. For the word Indra, see the verse :

इन्द्रो दिव इन्द्र ईशे पृथिव्या इन्द्रो अपामिन्द्र इत् पर्वतानाम् ।
इन्द्रो वृधामिन्द्र इन्मेधिराणामिन्द्र: क्षेमे योगे हव्य इन्द्र: ।। (Ṛv. X.89.10)

*इन्द्रियं इन्द्रलिंगं, इन्द्रदृष्टं, इन्द्रसृष्टं, इन्द्रजुष्टं, इन्द्रदत्तमिति वा (Asta. V. 2.93).

Let us now discuss indra a little more in details. Indra is sometimes described as the eldest of the maruts (We shall discuss *marut*s later on)—इन्द्रज्येष्ठो मरुद्गणाः; Indra is often associated with vayu (wind-god, as if) who is the master of life, inspirer of that breath or dynamic energy, called the prana, which is represented in man by the vital and nervous activities. Everything about agni, maruts, vayu and indra is lustrous—maruts (and indra) have shining weapons, golden ornaments and resplendent cars. Not only do they send down the rains, the waters, the abundance of heaven and break down the things least established to make way for new movements and new formations—functions which, for the rest, they share with others, mitra and varuna, but like them they also are friends of Truth, creators of Light. In their connection it has been said, "Conceal the concealing darkness, repel every devourer, create the Light for which we long" (Ṛv. I.86.9—10). And further, in their context it has been said, "They carry with them the sweetness (ananda) as their eternal offspring, and play out their play brilliant in the activities of knowledge." (I. 166. 2). The maruts, therefore, are the energies of mentality, energies which make for knowledge. Theirs is not the settled truth, the diffused light, but the movement, the search, the lightning flash, and when Truth is found, the many-sided play of its separate illuminations. (Aurobindo). Indra is closely related to such maruts; they are Indra's brothers. The hymn I. 171 relates to indra and maruts.

In the hymn I. 170, there is a colloquy of indra and agastya. We have given its translation in the text; Aurobindo translates (Vol. X. p. 241) this colloquy as follows (the five verses):

INDRA—It is not now, nor is it tomorrow; who knoweth that which is supreme and wonderful. It has motion and action in the consciousness of another, but when It is approached by the thought, It vanishes.

AGASTYA—Why dost thou seek to smite us, O indra? The maruts are thy brothers. By them accomplish perfection; slay us not in our struggle.

INDRA—Why, O my brother agastya, art thou my friend, yet setest thy thoughts beyond me? For well do I know how to us thou willest not give thy mind. Let them make ready the altar, let them set Agni in blaze in front. It is there, the awakening of the consciousness to immortality. Let us two extend for thee thy effective sacrifice.

AGASTYA—O Lord of substance over all substances of being, thou art the master in force! O Lord of love over the powers of love, thou art the strongest to hold in status! Do thou, O indra agree with the maruts, thou enjoy the offerings in the ordered method of the Truth.

It is a wonderful colloquy, which establishes a relation between maruts, indra, agastya and truth and its attainment. It would easily be seen that agastya is not the mythological seer; he is the infinitesimal soul in each of us; indra is the supreme Lord and maruts are the vital forces, the pranas, in our body complex, and the entire colloquy has deeper meanings.

Agastya accepts the will of the God and submits. According to indra, agastya is his friend and brother and Agastya finally agrees to perceive and fulfil the Supreme in the activities of Indra. From his own realm, Indra is supreme Lord over the substances of being (sat) as manifested through the triple world of mind, life and body, and has, therefore, power to dispose of the formations towards the fulfilment, in the movement of Nature, of the divine truth that expresses itself in the universe,—supreme Lord over love and delight manifested in the same triple world, and has, therefore, power to fix those formations harmoniously in the status of Nature. Agastya gives up all that is realized in him, in the fixed parts of agastya's consciousness and directed in the motional towards fresh formations. Indra is once more to enter into friendly parley with the upward aspiring powers of agastya's being and to establish agreement between the seer's thoughts and the illumination that comes to us through the pure intelligence.

That power will then enjoy in agastya the offerings of the sacrifice according to the right order of things as formulated and governed by the truth which is beyond. (Aurobindo, Vol. X. p. 244).

Indra is so often associated with soma which is synonymous with the divine ananda; it is the principle of Bliss from which the very existence of man, this being with triple complex of physical, life-ful and mental realms is drawn. It is born of the sense-mind, in the Universal purusa (Ait. Up. III.2); it is sometimes identified with moon for this reason. Its sensation is an attempt to translate the secret delight of existence into the terms of physical consciousness, often figured as adri, the hill, the stone, or dense substance (a+dri), divine light and divine delight, are both of them concealed and confined, and have to be released or extracted. Ananda is retained as rasa, the sap, the essence, in sense objects and sense-experiences, in the plants and growths of the earth-nature, and among these growths. Soma plant symbolizes that element behind all sense-activities and their enjoyments which yield the divine essence (Aurobindo, Vol. X. p. 249).

Soma is the sun in its enlightenment; it is also moon in its beauty, charm and enjoyment; it is an elixir of life, being so exhilarating; it is a healing balm for all mental and supramental ills and injuries, and therefore, it has been symbolized by a conceptual plant, not one belonging to our biological flora, which though never existed, was always equated with a medicinal plant of hypnotic and exhilarating properties, the number of leaves of which increases or decreases with the waxing and waning of the moon. The medicinal characteristics of all the herbs conceptually depend, as if, on the soma content in them. In the rituals, different medicinal plants of the localities have been used under the title of Soma in Soma-sacrifices. Soma is the transcendental state, and in the Yogic Samadhi is a synonym of Divine Bliss.

Indra is known to be satakratu (शतक्रतु), the one of hundred actions or activities. Dayananda translates the term satakratu as asamkhya-prajnam (असंख्यप्रज्ञं, बहुकर्माणं वा)

(II. 16. 8; 22. 4), the one of infinite discriminating or truthful intellect, or of numberless actions. God alone is satakratu in the sense that His actions are cent per cent detached, whilst in human actions, one can be detached to a small percentage; if we strive, we may be pancakratu or dasakratu, with five or ten per cent detached actions. Our actions are based on the expectation of fruits; they leave lingerings after the performance. But Indra, the supreme Lord, alone is satakratu. The Yoga Sutras define this Lord, the Supreme Purusa, in these words : The Supreme Lord is an extra-ordinary spirit unaffected by afflictions, actions, fruitions and dispositions.

Indra is the slayer of vṛtra, the coverer. When Indra symbolizes the Sun, the coverer are the clouds. When Indra is the self, the coverer is ignorance, nescience, but Indra protects rich mind in its riches.

> अस्य पीत्वा शतक्रतो घनो वृत्राणामभवः ।
> प्रावो वाजेषु वाजिनम् । (Ṛv. I. 4.8)
> (When hadst drunk of this, O the one of hundred activities, thou becomest a slayer of the coverers and protect the rich mind in its riches—Aurobindo).
> Compare Aurobindo's translation with Wilson's :
> Having drunk, Śatakratu, of this (Soma juice), thou becomest the slayer of the vṛtras; thou defendest the warrior in battle.

Kratu is karma, act, but unattached; it is simultaneously wisdom and prajna, knowledge too. This knowledge can come to him only who has drunk the divine elixir, the soma, the exhilarating bliss, not the mundane wine or an alcoholic or drug preparation. It is enlightening, giver of divine wisdom and a balm for mental perturbations.

Indra smites vṛtra, the coverer, the evil, the serpent or ahi the nescience with his vajra or the thunderbolt. This vajra is the adamantine justice, the firm determination to smite against untruth, the evil of evils, the most ferocious demon. Vṛtra is the shroud of thick darkness of ignorance which covers truth and the discriminating faculty of the lower self, the soul.

Indra in smiting vṛtra takes the help of maruts. The maruts represent the progressive illumination of human mentality, until from the first obscure movements of mind which only just emerge out of the darkness of the subconscient, they are transformed into an image of the luminous consciousness of which indra is the purusa, the representative being. (Aurobindo).

The maruts, reinforced in strength will always need the guidance and protection of the superior power. In Aurobindo's terminology (Vol. X. p. 262) the maruts are the purusas of the separate thought-energies, whilst indra, the one purusa of all thought-energy. In indra, maruts find their fullness and their harmony.

Let there then be no longer strife and disagreement between this whole and these parts. The maruts, accepting Indra, will receive from him the right perception of the things that have to be known. They will not be misled by the brilliance of a partial light or carried too far by the absorption of a limited energy. They will be able to sustain the action of indra as he puts forth his force against all that may yet stand between the soul and its consummation.

THE ASVINS AND VISVEDEVAS

In the third hymn of Book I of the Ṛgveda, we have 12 verses, three of which are devoted to asvins (अश्विनौ), three to Indra, three to visvedevas (विश्वेदेवाः), and three to Sarasvati (सरस्वती). Traditionally, Asvins (twins, asvinau, in dual number) are regarded to be two sons of the Sun, begotten during his metamorphosis as a horse (asva), endowed with perpetual youth and beauty, and physician (also expert surgeons) of the gods; they are the heroes of many legends; they are the subject of enumeration in hymns I. 116 and 117. अश्विनौ देवानां भिषजौ, इति श्रुतेः —the two asvins are the physicians of the gods, such is the Vedic tradition (Sayana).

The three main interests of human soul are : (i) thought and its final victorious illuminations, (ii) action and its last supreme all-achieving puissances, and (iii) enjoyment and its highest spiritual ecstasies. Our last object is not the sense-enjoyment; this has to be replaced by Soma satisfying the innermost realm of human complex with divine ananda. For this purpose our thought-actions have to be divinized first. A triple-sacrifice has to be performed : the cow, the horse and the soma elixir are the figures of this triple sacrifice. The two asvins are to be invoked for this purpose :

1. अश्विना यज्वरीरिषो द्रवत्पाणी शुभस्पती ।
   पुरा भुजा चनस्यतम् ।
2. अश्विना पुरुदंससा नराशवीरया धिया ।
   धिष्ण्या वनतं गिरः ।
3. दस्रा युवाकवः सुता नासत्या वृक्तबर्हिषः ।
   आ यातं रुद्रवर्तनी । (Ṛv. I.3.1-3)

1. Asvins, cherisher of pious acts long-armed, accept with outstretched hands the sacrificial viands.

2. Asvins, abounding in mighty acts, guides (of devotion), endowed with fortitude, listen with unaverted minds to our praises.
3. Asvins, destroyers of foes, exempt from untruth, leaders in the van of heroes, come to the mixed libations sprinkled on the lopped sacred grass. (Wilson).

The three epithets of asvins in these verses are dravat pani (द्रवत् पाणि), subhaspati (शुभस्पति) and purubhuja (पुरुभुज). Purubhuja (also V.73.1) is not long-armed, it is "much enjoying"; subha like ratna or candra stands for light and enjoyment. Asvins are riders on horse; this horse, asva, is symbolic of force, life-energy, nervous force or prana (प्राण). Asvins, again, are gods of enjoyment, seekers of honey; they are the physicians, they bring back youth to the old, health to the sick, and the wholeness to the maimed. In movements, they are swift, violent and irresistible, their chariot is so well-known for swiftness. They are like birds in swiftness: अश्विना हरिणाविव गौराविवानु यवसम्। हंसाविव पततमा सुताँ उप॥ (Ṛv. V. 78.2) like the mind; like the wind: मनोजवा अश्विना वातरंहा; (Ṛv. V. 77.3). They bring in their chariot ripe or perfected satisfactions to man, and they are creators of bliss, mayas (समश्विनौ रवसा नूतनेन मयोभुवा सुप्रणीती गमेम; Ṛv. V.77.5).

All these characteristics indicate that the Asvins are twin divine powers whose special function is to perfect the nervous or vital being in man (pranamaya kosa) in the sense of action and enjoyment. And simultaneously, they are powers of Truth, of intelligent action, of right enjoyment; they are powers that appear with the Dawn; effective powers of action born out of the ocean of being, who because they are divines are able to mentalize securely the felicities of the higher existence by a thought faculty which finds or comes to know that true substance and true wealth. (Aurobindo, Vol.X.p.78). For we have in the Vedic Texts:

धिया देवा वसुविदा॥ (Ṛv. I. 46.2)

Who are divine, of pleasing appearance, children of the sea, willing dispensers of wealth, and granters of dwellings, (in recompense of) pious acts. (Wilson).

They are givers of that impelling energy for the great work which, having for its nature and substance the light of the truth, carries man beyond the darkness. We have translated the hymns I. 46 and 47, which would show the nature of these Asvins, which carry man to their ship, to the other shore beyond the thoughts and states of the human mind, आ नो नावा मतीनां यातं पाराय गन्तवे (Ṛv.I.46.7), to thẹ supramental consciousness. Surya (सूर्या), the daughter of the Sun, mounts their car as their bride.

In I.47.2, we have : त्रिबन्धुरेण त्रिवृता सुपेशसा रथेन यातमश्विना । That is, "Come asvins with your three-columned triangular car", and then in I. 47.4, we have : त्रिषधस्थे बर्हिषि विश्ववेदसा मध्वा यज्ञं मिमिक्षतम् । i.e., "Omniscient (visvavedasa) Asvins, stationed on the thrice-heaped sacred grass, sprinkle the sacrifice with the sacred juice". In their cars, these Asvins bring to us riches from the firmament or the sky beyond,—such riches which most of us covet (I.47.6). Evidently these riches are from the innermost realm of our life-complex, from the region of the vijnanamaya (विज्ञानमय) and the anandamaya (आनन्दमय) kosas.

Nasatya and Asvins—When we talk about Asvins, we refer to vayu (वायु) who supplies the vital forces, brings his steeds of life; here he calls the Asvins who use the vital forces, ride on the steed. The Asvins like gods descend from the truth-consciousness, the ṛtam (ऋतं); they are born and manifested, from Heaven, from dyau, the pure mind, the mental realm; their movement pervades all the worlds, —the mental, the vital and the physical (manomaya, pranamaya and annamaya),—the effect of their action ranges from the body through the vital being and the thought to the superconscient truth too. It commences indeed from the ocean, from the vague of the being as it emerges out of the subconscient and they conduct the soul over the flood of these waters and prevent its foundering on its voyage. They are, therefore, Nasatya (नासत्या), lords of the movement, leaders of the journey or voyage.*

These Asvins help man with the truth which comes to them, especially by association with the Dawn, with surya (सूर्य), Lord of Truth, and with surya (सूर्या), his daughter, but they help him move characteristically with the delight of being (sat). They are lords of bliss, subhaspati (शुभस्पति); their car or movement is loaded with the satisfactions of the delight of being in all its planes, they bear the skin dṛti (दृति), full of the overflowing of honey: (दृति वहेथे मधुमन्तमश्विना, IV. 45.3) ; they seek the honey, the sweetness, and fill all things with it. They, as Aurobindo says, are, therefore, effective powers of the ananda, which proceeds out of the truth-consciousness (sat-cit), and which maintains man in his journey. They are specially riders or drivers of horse, asvins, as their name indicates,—they use the vitality of the human being as the motive force of the journey: but also they work in the thought and lead it to the truth. They give health, beauty, and wholeness to the body; they are the divine physicians.

I shall quote here only two verses from the Ṛgveda IV. 45.

> मध्वः पिबतं मधुपेभिरासभि सत प्रियं मधुने युञ्जाथां रथम् ।
> आ वर्तनिं मधुना जिन्वथस्पथो दृतिं वहेथे मधुमन्तमश्विना ।। (3)
> Drink of the honey with your honey drinking mouths, for the honey yoke your car beloved, with honey you gladden the movements and its paths; full of honey, O Asvins, is the skin that you bear.
> (Aurobindo)

> प्र वामवोचमश्विना धियं धा रथः स्वश्वो अजरो यो अस्ति ।
> येन सद्यः परि रजांसि याथो हविष्मन्तं तुरणिं भोजमच्छ ।। (7)
> I have declared, O Asvins, holding the thought in me, your car that is undecaying and drawn by perfect steeds,—your car by which you move at once over all

---

Nasatya* (नासत्या) may be patronymic ; grammarians derive it from na+asatya (न+असत्य) = true = not false. Aurobindo derives it from nas (नस्), to move : Nasatya are asvins, since they are described as "swift-footed", "fierce-moving in their paths" etc.

the worlds towards the enjoyment rich in offerings that makes through to the goal.

(Aurobindo, Vol. X. p. 314).

Asvins, Sarama and Panis—In the wideshinings of the Dawn, these Asvins rise; for dawn is the illumination of the truth rising upon the mentality to bring the day of full consciousness into the darkness or half-lit night of our being. She comes as Daksina (दक्षिणा), the pure intuitive discernment on which Agni, the God-force, in us feeds when he aspires towards the Truth or as Sarama, the discovering intuition, who penetrates into the cave of the subconscient where the niggard lords of sense-action (Panis, पणयः) have hidden the radiant herds (cows) of the Sun and gives information to Indra, the self. Then comes the lord of luminous Mind and breaks open the cave and drives upward the herds, udajat (उदाजत्), upwards towards the vast truth-consciousness, the own home of the gods. Our conscious existence is a hill (adri, अद्रि) with many successive levels and elevations, sanuni (सानूनि); the cave of the subconscient is below; we climb upwards towards the godhead of the Truth and Bliss where are the seats of Immortality, यत्रामृतास आसते (Ṛv. IX. 15.2). (Aurobindo, Vol. X. p. 319)

This is how, one can penetrate into the mystery, with which are associated Asvins, Indra, Sarama, Panis, cows, the hill, the cave, the allegory of stolen cows by Panis, and their search.

Whilst commenting on 1.89.3, Wilson says in his notes, that asvins are so termed either from having horses (asvavantau) or from pervading all things, the one with moisture, the other with light. According to Yaska, who also states the question : who are they ? which is thus answered : aceording to some, (i) they are heaven and earth, (ii) to others day and night, (iii) according to others, the sun and moon; and (iv) according to traditionalists (aitihasikas, ऐतिहासिक), they were two virtuous princes (Nir. 12.1). Dayanand interprets Asvins differently at different places according to the relevant context; for example in II. 31.4, Asvins are suryacandramasau, सूर्यचन्द्रमसौ (the sun and moon); the word "asvinau" is followed by pati, palayitaram (पालयितारं, the two protectors), a word which is translated as the "two husbands" (of Surya). In interpreting II. 39.7 Dayananda interprets Asvinau as wind and fire (vayu and agni); again in II.39.8, to him, asvinau denotes a pair of leaders, acquainted with wide knowledge अश्विनौ नरौ—सकल विद्याव्यापिनौ नेतारौ; again in II. 41.7, we have the word asvina along with nasatya and asva-vat, and gomat; here the word asvina has been translated as vyapana-silau, (व्यापनशीलौ), the two widely-present, and he interprets the term as "teacher-preacher" pair : of course nasatya is a pair free from untruth; and probably he hints at another pair of "air-fire-driven space craft (वायु-अग्नि यान). Asvinau is also a pair of prana and apana (the in-breath and out-breath, प्राणापानौ).

VISVEDEVAH

The word visvedevah (विश्वेदेवा:) is of common occurence in the Vedic Texts, literally meaning "all devas", usually translated as "all-gods". I would rather put it as "all Nature's bounties", because the word "god" has in it a stink of polytheism.

The hymn I. 3 has three verses 7-9 associated with visvedevah; Wilson and Aurobindo translate them as follows :

> ओमासश्चर्षणीधृतो विश्वेदेवास आगत ।
> दाश्वांसो दाशुषः सुतम् ।। (7)
> Universal Gods, protectors and supporters of men, bestowers (of rewards), come to the libation of the worshipper.
> (O fosterers who uphold the doer in his work, O all gods, come and divide the soma-wine that I distribute.—Aurobindo).
> विश्वेदेवासो अप्तुरः सुतमागन्त तूर्णयः ।
> उस्रा इव स्वसराणि ।। (8)
> May the swift-moving universal Gods, the shedders of rain, come to the libation, as the solar rays come diligently to the days.

(O all-gods, who bring over to us the Waters, come passing through to my soma-offerings, as illumined powers to your places of bliss.—Aurobindo).

विश्वेदेवासो अस्रिध एहिमायासो अद्रुहः । मेधं जुषन्त वह्नयः ॥ (9)

May the universal Gods, who are exempt from decay, omniscient (ehimayasah)*, devoid of malice, and bearers of (riches), accept the sacrifice.

(O all-gods, you who are not assailed, nor come to hurt, free-moving in your forms of knowledge, cleave to my sacrifice as its upbearers.—Aurobindo).

These Nature's bounties appear to constitute a class, but not enumerated; nowhere in the Vedic Texts are we given the details of these divinities. Perhaps some of the Nature's bounties are specified in terms of agni, vayu, varuna, surya (aditya), mitra etc., but others still left un-enumerated are covered under the title visvedevah, since our environmental bounties are hundreds in number. In the famous santi-mantra (Yv. XXXVI. 17), dyau, antariksa, pṛthivi, apah, osadhayah, vanaspatayah, having been enumerated, we have the term "visvedevah" which stands for the entire rest, not covered so for in the list. Dayananda translates the term as sarve divya guna yuktah (सर्वे दिव्यगुण-युक्ताः), i.e. all the persons or illuminating (or full of wisdom) attributes (II. 3.4). In the hymn II. 41, we have the devatas as indra, vayu, mitra, varuna, asvinau, sarasvati, dyava-pṛthivi (Heaven and Earth), and in the midst of this galaxy, we have visvedevah too (II. 41.13), where this term is translated by Dayananda as "sarve vidvansah", all learneds. When the verses are to be interpreted at the level of society, Dayananda's interpretation is very appropriate; and again when interpreted at other levels, the all-gods represent all mental and supramental faculties, and at the cosmic level, all Nature's bounties.

* Ehi, एहि—come; ma yasih, मा यासीः —do not go away, and hence free-moving in your forms, as given by Aurobindo. Sarvatah prapta-prajnah, सर्वतः प्राप्तप्रज्ञः, or सर्वतो प्राप्तप्रज्ञाः, who have obtained knowledge universally—Sayana*.

SARASVATI, ILA, BHARATI and MAHI

Sarasvati, without the least doubt is the Divine Speech (Ait. Br. II. 24; III. 1, 2); she is plainly and clearly, the Goddess of Word, if we speak in terms of symbolism. It speaks of the Supreme Lord also : amongst His various names, one name would be Sarasvati, since as Dayananda says, who else could be the Highest Supreme associated with the revealed knowledge ? Our Lord has manifested Himself in His creation and in His word as knowledge personified.

The word "sarasvati" is derived from the root sṛ, gatau (√सृ, गतौ) or to move; deriving from this root, one has saras (सरस्), which with the particles matup (मतुप्) and nip. (ङीप्) gives the word sarasvati. Saro or saras means knowledge, or transcendental science—सरो सरस् नाम विज्ञानं, विज्ञानं नाम विविधं यज् ज्ञानं तत् विज्ञानम् and the one in whom such knowledge is sustained is sarasvati,—सरो नाम विज्ञानं विद्यते यस्या सा सरस्वती. Dayanand also derives the word similarly.*

Devaraja Yajvan, the commentator on Yaska's Nirukta, derives the word as "sarah prasaranamasyastiti", सर: प्रसरणमस्यास्तीति i.e. Sarasvati is one whose expanse is this entire creation. We have a very significant verse in which the Supreme Lord is represented as Sarasvati :

> सरस्वतीं देवयन्तो हवन्ते सरस्वतीमध्वरे तायमाने ।
> सरस्वतीं सुकृतो अह्वयन्त सरस्वती दाशुषे वार्यं दात् ॥ (Ṛv.X.17.7)
> Men aspiring for transcendental knowledge invoke the Lord Sarasvati; when one aspires to undertake sacred works for the good of all (adhvara), they also invoke Sarasvati. This Sarasvati blesses all of them who dedicate themselves for noble ends.

According to Aurobindo, sarasvati means "she of the Stream, the flowing movement", and is therefore, a natural name both for a river and for the goddess of inspiration. "But by what process of thought or association", says Aurobindo, "does the general idea of the river of inspiration come to be associated with a paricular earthly stream ? And in the Veda, it is not a question of one river which by its surroundings, natural and legendary, might seem more fitfully associated with the idea of sacred inspiration than any other. For it is a question not of one, but of seven rivers always associated together (sapta-sindhavah, सप्तसिन्धव:) in the minds of the Rsis and all of them released together by the stroke of the god Indra when he smote the Python who coiled across their fountains and sealed up their out-flow. It seems impossible to suppose that one river only in all this sevenfold outflowing acquired a psychological significance while the rest were associated only with the annual coming of the rains in the Punjab.* (Aurobindo, Vol. X. p. 88)

The word sarasvati occurs in three contexts particularly : (i) her invocation alone, (ii) her invocation along with various seven or more terms, which in later period came to be known as the names of several rivers in Northern India, particularly the Punjab, and (iii) her invocation along with the terms as Ila, Mahi and Bharati. Perhaps Mahi and Bharati may be identical. For we have a reference to "tisro devir" (the three enlightened ones) :

> इळा मरस्वती मही तिस्रो देवीर्मयोभुव: ।
> बर्हि: सीदन्त्वस्रिध: ।। (Ṛv. I. 13.9)
> May the three undecaying goddesses, givers of delight, Ila, Sarasvati and Mahi, sit down upon sacred grass. (Wilson).

---

* इमं मे गंगे यमुने सरस्वति शुतुद्रि स्तोमं सचता परुष्ण्या ।
असिक्न्या मरुद्वृधे वितस्तया ऽऽर्जीकीये शृणुह्या सुषोमया ।। (Ṛv. X. 75.5)
According to the Nirukta, these seven are the streams of mid-space, i.e. of the vital and mental realms.

The translation has been considerably improved upon by Aurobindo : "May Ila, Sarasvati, and Mahi, three goddesses, who give birth to the bliss take their place on the sacrificial seat (barhih), they who stumble not", or "who come not to hurt", or "do not hurt (asridhah, अस्रिधः). Aurobindo further says that "the epithet means, I think, they in whom there is no false movement with its evil consequences, (duritam, दुरितं), no stumbling into pit falls of sin and error."

The same idea occurs in another verse of the Ṛgveda :

> आ नो यज्ञं भारती तूयमेत्विळा मनुष्वदिह चेतयन्ती ।
> तिस्रो देवीर्बर्हिरेदं स्योनं सरस्वती स्वपसः सदन्तु ॥ (Ṛv. X. 110.8)
> May Bharati come speeding to our sacrifice and Ila hither awakening our consciousness (or knowledge or perception) in humanwise, and Sarasvati,—three goddesses sit on this blissful seat, doing well the work. (Aurobindo).

The post-Vedic mythology regards Ila as the earth, the bride of Visnu; Sarasvati, the goddess of eloquence, and wife of Brahma; the third, synonymous with speech, is called the wife of Bharata, one of the Adityas,—of course, this mythology is meaningless in context with our Vedic hymns.

Considering the various passages of the Vedic Texts, Aurobindo comes to the conclusion that sarasvati is the word, the inspiration that comes from the ṛtam, the Truth-Consciousness. Light in the Veda is a symbol of knowledge, of spiritual illumination; Surya is the lord of supreme sight, the Vast Light; bṛhat jyotih (बृहत् ज्योतिः) or the True-Light, ṛtam jyotih (ऋतं ज्योतिः). (There is always a type of association between ṛtam and bṛhat in the Vedic Texts). Shall we not associate a sort of parallelism between satyam, ṛtam and bṛhat on the one hand, sarasvati, ila and mahi on the other ? Mahi is the luminous vastness of Truth; she represents the largeness, bṛahat, of the super-conscient in us containing in itself the truth, ṛtam. She is, therefore, for the sacrificer like a branch covered with ripe fruit (varutri dhisana, वरूत्री धिषणा).*

वरूत्रीं धिषणां वह ।। (Ṛv. I. 22. 10)
Youthful Agni, bring hither for our protection the wives (of the gods) Hotra, Bharati, Varutri and Dhisana. (Wilson).

There is a good deal of sense when Aurobindo (Vol. X. p. 91) says, that as sarasvati represents the truth—audition, sruti, (श्रुति) which gives the inspired word, so ila represents dṛsti (दृष्टि) or truth-vision; thus dṛsti and sruti are the two powers of the seer of the truth (kavi or ṛsi), thus a close relation between ila and sarasvati; and bharati or mahi is the largeness of truth-consciousness, which, dawning on man's limited mind brings with it the two sister puissances. This is one way of explaining the triad.

This triad has also to be worked out on other planes also :

		Truth-consciousness	National
Satyam	Ila	Dṛsti, insight	Character
Ṛtam	Sarasvati	Sruti-word	Speech (language)
Brhat	Mahi (Bharati)	Largeness	Culture

Sarasvati as one of the sapta-sindhus—The Vedic literature is abundantly rich in referring to heptads or groups of seven : the seven delights, sapta ratnani (सप्त रत्नानि), seven tongues or flames of fire, sapta arcisah (सप्तार्चिषः), sapta jvalah (सप्त ज्वालाः), seven forms of rays,

*Youthful Agni, bring hither for our protection the wives: Hotra, Bharati Varutri and Dhisana (Wilson). Varutri does not refer to a mythological goddess; it means varaniya (वरणीय), which means one worthy of being chosen, preferred, who is excellent; Dhisana is synonymous of vac (वाच्) or vag-devi (वाग्देवी), the goddess of speech. (Wilson).

cows, sapta sindhavah (सप्त सिन्धवः), or seven mothers, sapta matarah (सप्त मातरः), seven fostering cows, sapta dhenavah (सप्त धेनवः), and of course the seven seers (Bears), sapta ṛsayah (सप्तर्षयः)

Just as we have the importance of heptads, we have dyads and triads also. Some of the significant dyads are : (i) divine and human, (ii) mortal and immortal; (iii) rodasi or heaven and earth, (iv) mind and body, (v) living (soul, cetana, चेतन) and non-living (matter or jada, जड), (vi) father and mother and so on. When heaven (dyau) and Earth (pṛthivi) symbolize two forms of natural energy, the mental and physical consciousness, they are no longer the father and mother, they become two-mothers. (Aurobindo, Vol. X. p. 93).

Amongst the well-known triads, we have (i) threefold divine principle, sat-cit-ananda, (सच्चिदानन्द), divine existence, divine consciousness and divine bliss, (ii) threefold mundane principles : mind, life and body corresponding to the three realms, mental sheath (manomaya kosa), vital or life-sheath (pranamaya kosa), and physical or material sheath (annamaya kosa). The three divine principles, sat, cit and ananda, combine with three mundane principles, mind, life and body, with a uniting link as the seventh one gives to the fullness seven principles (see Aurobindo, Vol. X. p. 93).

Mind (manas)				anand (bliss)
Life (prana)	+	Joint link (ṛtam bṛhat)		cit (Consciousness)
Body (sarira)		(mahan arnava)		sat (existence)
3	+	1	+	3	=	7

Ṛtam bṛhat (ऋतं बृहत्) is the same as mahan arnava (महान् अर्णव) or the Cosmic Mind or Cosmic Intelligence of the Vedic Texts, a link between the individual minds, and a link between in the infinitesimal individual mind and the Super-Mind.

In these terms, we have to understand sarasvati about which the Text says (I. 3. 11-12) :

यज्ञं दधे सरस्वती ॥ (11)

Sarasvati, the inspirer of those who delight in truth, the instructress of the right-minded, has accepted our sacrifice).

महो अर्णः सरस्वती प्रचेतयति केतुना ।
धियो विश्वा विराजति ॥ (12)

Sarasvati makes manifest by her acts a mighty river and (in her own form) enlightens all understandings. (Wilson).

USA AND SVAR LOKA

We have seen what the seven rivers, sapta apah, sapta sindhavah, sapta dhenavah, or sapta gavah, or saptagu are. The seven waters are not merely seven channels, they are the waters of being (ap means to move, to flow, i.e. also to bring into being. cf. apatya, अपत्य, a child). Let us now see what these usas, (उषा), or dawns are. The hymn 30 of the First Book has verses devoted to Indra and Asvins and three to Usa. We have the following lines :

कस्त उषः कधप्रिये भुजो मर्तो अमर्त्ये ।
कं नक्षसे विभावरि ॥ (20)
Usas, who are pleased by praise, what mortal enjoyeth thee, immortal ? Whom, mighty one, dost thou affect ?

वयं हि ते अमन्मह्याऽऽन्तादा पराकात् ।
अश्वे न चित्रे अरुषि ॥ (21)
Deffusive, many-tinted, brilliant (Usas), we know not (thy limits), whether they be nigh or remote.

त्वं त्येभिरागहि वाजेभिर्दुहितर्दिवः ।
अस्मे रयिं निधारय ॥ (22) (Ṛv. I. 30.20-22)
Daughter of heaven, approach with these viands, and perpetuate our wealth.

The third Book has a beautiful hymn, III. 61, devoted to Usa. I shall reproduce here Aurobindo's translation of only one verse :

ऋतावरी दिवो अर्कैरबोध्या
रेवती रोदसी चित्रमस्थात् ।
आयतीमग्न उषसं विभातीं
वाममेषि द्रविणं भिक्षमाणः ॥ (Ṛv. III. 61.6)

> By heaven's illuminings one perceives her a bearer of the truth and rapturous she comes with its varied light into the two firmaments. From Dawn as she approaches shining out on thee, O Agni, thou seekest and attainest to the substance of delight.

The words go=cow, asva=horse, ghṛta=water or clarified butter, vira=man or hero, apatya or praja=off-spring; hiranya=gold, vaja=food or even plenty are only the physical or ritualistic renderings of the terms, and similarly usa=dawn is a rendering of the physical or cosmic plane. These terms refer to deeper mystic meanings when applied to mental and spiritual realms.

It does then not mean that usa is not the physical dawn; according to the genius of Vedic expressions, one is gradually elevated from a lower realm to higher realms with deep inner meanings. We shall have in a few phrases, sometimes in one or two verses even, a reference to the dawn with which all of us are well-acquainted, and then the Divine Poetry would take us to the higher unknown and so far unrealized regions.

Dawn of the mystic meaning is the giver of cows, horses and other cattle; sometimes it is the bestower of food and wealth. In that case, it could not be the physical dawn, nor cows, horses, gold or food could be the mundane gifts of a household.

The Vedic Dawn is associated with cow (the lost cows), the sun, panis and their cave, indra, bṛhaspati, hound sarama and angirasas. The cows of the sun, and so the horses of the sun are a symbol for light. Sayana interprets cow (gauh) so often as rays also and sometimes as water. But in such contexts, we ought to take the word in a double sense, "light" as the true significance and "cow" as the concrete image and verbal figure. (Aurobindo, Vol. p. 119). For example, in I. 7. 3 we have "vi gobhir adrim airayat", वि गोभिरद्रिमैरयत् (charged the cloud with waters.— Wilson ; go=water).

> वि गोभिरद्रिमैरयत् ॥ (Ṛv. I. 7.3)

> Indra, to render all things visible, elevated the sun in the sky, and charged the cloud with (abundant) waters.—Wilson.
> Indra for far vision made the sun to ascend to heaven; he sped him all over the hell by his rays.—Aurobindo.

The go's or cows are concealed by the enemy vala, (वळ), by the Panis (पणयः) and on this occasion, the invocation to Indra is "Thou didst uncover the whole of vala of the cows". Evidently vala is the concealer, the withholder of Light, and it is the concealed Light that Indra restores to the sacrificer. This recovering of the lost or stolen cows is constantly spoken of in the Vedic hymns. These cows are not the physical herds of stolen cows by the Dravidians, but the shining herds of the Sun, of the Light (that burns within all of us). The verses I.4.1,2 have a reference to this type of cow, the light.[1] Here we have a reference to Indra, the maker of perfect forms who is as a good milker in the milking of the cows, that his ecstasy of the Soma drink is verily "cowgiving", goda id revato madah (गोदा इद् रेवतो मदः). "It is the height of absurdity and irrationality", as Aurobindo says, "to understand by this phrase, that Indra is a very wealthy god, and when he gets drunk, exceedingly liberal in the matter of cowgiving." The fact is that the cow is the symbol of Light and that Indra, when full of the Soma ecstasy, is sure to give us the Light. (Aurobindo, Vol.X.p.120)

Dawn is also often described as gomati which then means luminous or radiant; she is again not only gomati but asvamati too; she has always with her her cows and her horses. She creates light for all the world and opens out the darkness as the pen of the cow (cow is a symbol of light):

> ज्योतिर्विश्वस्मै भुवनाय कृण्वती
> गावो न व्रज व्युषा आवर्तमः ॥ (Ṛv. I. 92.4)

1. सुरूप कृत्नुमूतये सुदुघामिव गोदुहे । जुहूमसि द्यवि द्यवि ॥
उप नः सवना गहि सोमस्य सोमपाः पिब । गोदा इद् रेवतो मदः ॥
(Ṛv. I. 4.1, 2)

Dawn is then further said to be drawn in her chariot sometimes of ruddy cows, sometimes by ruddy horses: yunkte gavam arunanam anikam (युङ्क्ते गवामरुणानामनीकम्), which clearly means "her host of ruddy rays". (I.124.11). She is further described as the mother of the cows or radiances: gavam janitri akṛta praketum (गवां जनित्र्यकृतप्रकेतुम्) (I.124.5), the mother of the cows (radiances) has created vision. She is the leader of the shining herds: (गवां नेत्री), (VII.76.6); she is the mother of the herds, the guide of the days; गवा माता नेत्र्यह्नामरोचि (VII.77.2). Finally, it has been very clearly mentioned that "her happy rays came into sight like the cows released into movements":— प्रति भद्रा अदृक्षत गवां सर्गा न रश्मयः (IV.52.5); and further, "the cows (rays) remove the darkness and extend the light," सं ते गावस्तम आवर्तयन्ति ज्योतिर्यच्छन्ति सवितेव बाहू (VII.79.2).

Further in a hymn (VII.75.7), dawn is described as sharing in the action of the gods by which the strong places where the cows are concealed are broken open and they are given to men: सत्यासत्येभिर्महती महद्भिर्देवी देवेभिर्यजता यजत्रैः। रुजद्दृळ्हानि ददुस्रियाणां प्रति गाव उषसं वावशन्त (True with the gods who are true, great with the gods who are great, she breaks open the strong places and gives of the shining herds; the cows low towards the dawn); and then in the next verse, she is invoked to establish for the sacrifices a state of bliss full of the cows (light), of the horses (vital force) and of many enjoyments*. Thus it is clear that when we talk of usa and the herds that she gives, we refer to the shining troops of Light recovered by the gods (and the angirasa ṛsis) from the strong places of vala and the panis and the wealth of cows for which a devotee prays is no other than a wealth of this same enlightenment. This invocation is not only for luminous delight or luminous plentitude, so often it is for luminous impulsion or force :

साकं सूर्यस्य रश्मिभिः ॥ (Ṛv. V. 79.8)

Bring to us, O daughter of heaven, luminous impul-

* नो नु गोमद् वीरवद् धेहि रत्नमुषो अश्वावत् पुरुभोजो अस्मे। (Ṛv. VII. 75.8) sions along with the rays of the Sun. Here gomatirisa (गोमतीरिष) is not luminous or radiant food (as Sayana interprets), and much more absurd would be to interpret it as "food of cow or cow's flesh."

SVAR LOKA

We are placed on the Earth (prthivi), may we rise to the antariksa,, the interspace over which extends our atmosphere; may we then rise to the celestial space, dyauh, the superspace of galaxies, stars and other luminous bodies; may we then further rise to the svar loka, much beyond the celestial one, the supra-celestial. So speaks a verse of the Yajurveda.[1] (XVII.67). Of course, it is not the physical body of ourselves that would be taken away on this sojourn; no space-craft can take us on this flight. This flight or movement is in our interior realm; prthivi (पृथिवी) or Earth represents exterior body, mundane and physical, the annamaya (अन्नमय); antariksa (अन्तरिक्ष), the atmosphere with winds is the realm of vital forces, the pranamaya (प्राणमय); and beyond it is the realm of mental behaviours, the psychological, the manomaya (मनोमय). But ultimately, we have to go a little beyond it, which is the svar loka; the non-material innermost sheaths of enlightenment and divine bliss, the vijnanamaya (विज्ञानमय) and the anandamaya (आनन्दमय).

The conquest or recovery of the Sun and the Dawn is a frequent subject of allusion in the hymns of the Rgveda. Sometimes it is the finding of Surya, sometimes the conquest of Svar, the world of supra-sun. This Svar is not a synonym of Surya; from several passages of the Vedas, it is clear that Svar is the name of a world, a realm which is beyond heaven,—above the ordinary rodasi (रोदसी), Heaven and Earth. We have occasionally a reference to svarvatih apah (स्वर्वती: अप:), supra-heavenly water,—not the physical water; it is also saranavatih (सरणावती:), the moving one. The thunderbolt of Indra is known as svaryam

1. पृथिव्याऽअहमुदन्तरिक्षमारुहमन्तरिक्षाद् दिवमारुहम् ।
दिवो नाकस्य पृष्ठात् स्वर्ज्योतिरगामहम् ॥ (Yv. XVII. 67)

asmanam (स्वर्यमश्मानम्) the supraheavenly stone, which is not the ordinary thunderbolt;— it is the adamantine justice of firm determination, with which the clouds of darkness and ignorance are mercilessly smitten. Indra is also known as the presiding deity over this supraheavenly realm; he is svarpati (स्वर्पतिः), a Lord of supra-celestial region. Svar-realm is also known as uru-loka, the wide other world, उरुं नो लोकमनु नेषि विद्वान् त्स्वर्वज्ज्योतिरभयं स्वस्ति। (Ṛv. VI. 47.8).

We have already seen that the cows of the Vedic Texts are the hidden rays of the Dawn or of Surya (the sun); their rescue out of the darkness leads to or is the sign of the uprising of the sun that was hidden in the darkness; this is known as the conquest of Svar, the supreme world of Divine Enlightenment; and again then the Svar-world is the world of Divine Truth. The conquest of this Divine Truth is the highest objective of human aspirations.

Let me end this little note on the Svar-realm with a few Vedic passages, out of many :

1. युवं सूर्यं विविदथुर्युवं स्वर्विश्वा तमांस्यहतं निदश्च । (Ṛv.VI.72.1)
Ye found the Sun, Ye found Svar, Ye slew all darkness and limitations.

2. स्वर्यद् वेदि सुदृशीकमर्कैर्महि ज्योती रुरुचुर्यद्ध वस्तोः ।
अन्धा तमांसि दुधिता विचक्षे नृभ्यश्चकार नृतमो अभिष्टौ ॥
(Ṛv. IV. 16.4)
When by the hymns of illumination (arkaih), Svar was found, entirely visible, when they (angirasas) made to shine the great light out of the night, he (Indra) made the darkness ill-assured, so that men might have vision.

3. उरुं नो लोकमनु नेषि विद्वान् त्स्वर्वं ज्ज्योतिरभयं स्वस्ति ।
(Ṛv. VI. 47.8)
Thou in thy knowledge leadest us on to the wide world, even svar, the light which is freedom from fear, with happy being.

4. व्यस्तभ्ना रोदसी विष्णवेते दाधर्थ पृथिवीमभितो मयूखैः ।
(Ṛv. VII. 99.3)
उरुं यज्ञाय चक्रथुरु लोकं जनयन्ता सूर्यमुषासमग्निम् । (Ṛv. VII. 99.4)
Thou didst support firmly, O Visnu, this earth and heaven and uphold the earth all around by the rays. Ye two created for the sacrifice the wide other world, bringing into being the Sun, the Dawn and Agni.

5. घ्नन्तो वृत्रमतरन् रोदसी अप उरुक्षयाय चक्रिरे ।
भुवत् कण्वे वृषाद्युम्न्याहुतः क्रन्ददश्वो गविष्टिषु ! (Ṛv. I.36.8.)
Human beings, slaying the coverer (vṛtra), have crossed beyond both earth and heaven and made the wide world for their dwelling.

Thus this Svar loka of supra-celestial wideness, the one of illimitable light is supra-mental heaven, the heaven of the transcendental truth and bliss; of the immortal beatitude, and the light which is it's sustenance and constituent reality, is the light of truth. This is how Aurobindo also sees it and Dayananda also puts it. (cf. Dayanada on II.23.3; सूर्यवद्विद्याप्रकाशेनाविद्यान्धकार निवर्त्य*).

Angiras and Angirasa

Both these words, angiras (अङ्गिरस्) and angirasa (आङ्गिरस) are very popular in the Vedic texts. Of course, the names of the seers and their descendents are also associated with such terms as Angirasas, Atris and Bharadvajas, but I shall take up the term angiras as such, not as a proper name associated with a historical person, or a mythological concept. In several verses of the Ṛgveda (and also other Vedas), the discovery of Agni or man-produced fire is attributed to the angiras or atharvangiras[1], the seer or the class of seers, whose names

1. त्वामग्ने अङ्गिरसो गुहा हित—
मन्वविन्दञ्छिश्रियाणं वने वने ।
स जायसे मथ्यमानः सहो महत्
त्वामाहुः सहसस्पुत्रमङ्गिरः । (Ṛv.V.11.6)
Aurobindo regards angiras ṛsis as flame-powers of Agni and the bhṛgus as the solar powers of Surya.

appear as seers, rsi or rsis of hymns or some of their verses.

But then in the Ṛgvedic text, we have a reference to seven original angirasa rsis, as human fathers, pitaro manusyah (पितरो मनुष्याः), who discovered light and made the sun to shine and finally ascended to the Heaven of the Truth; then these angirasas are also spoken of or in connection with the finding of the cows. Whereas on the one hand, they appear to be deified human fathers, they are described as heavenly seers also, as sons of gods, sons of heaven, heroes and powers of the Asurah, the mighty Lord :

दिवस्पुत्रासो असुरस्य वीराः। (Ṛv. III. 53.7)

Then again, we have such passages in which our angirasas are symbolically powers of agni (Fire), sometimes forces of symbolic light and flame, and so often, they appear to coalesce into a single seven-mouthed angirasa with his nine and ten rays of the light: नवग्वे अङ्गिरे दशग्वे सप्तास्ये।

In the Unadikosah there is a Sutra angirah (IV.237), about which Dayananda writes:

अङ्गति प्राप्नोति जानाति वा स अङ्गिरः। ईश्वरोऽग्निः ऋषिभेदो वा।
तस्यापत्यमाङ्गिरसः। असि प्रत्ययस्य इरुडागमः।

This means, that one who achieves, attains, or knows, or perceives is angiras, the Lord, the Agni, the seer too. The diminutive of angiras is angirasa.

A similar derivation has been accepted by all authorities. The words angiras and agni are closely associated. Both may be derived from the root √ang, a nasalized form of √ag, meaning gati-pujanayoh, or movement, action, or light, and also adorable. In agni, we have a sense of brilliant or burning light, and we have numerous associated terms of similar connotations: agni, fire; angati, fire; angara, (अङ्गार) a burning coal, and angiras, which could mean flaming, glowing or burning. And this is why, in Indian traditions angirasas are in their origin closely connected with Agni.

These Angirases are the devatas of the hymn X.62. 1-6; they are the sons of Agni: ते अङ्गिरसः सूनवस्ते अग्नेः परिजज्ञिरे (5) and have been born about him in different forms all about heaven: ये अग्नेः परिजज्ञिरे विरूपसो दिवस्परि (6), and in the next clause, it is added, speaking of them collectively in the singular: नवग्वो नु दशग्वो अङ्गिरस्तमः सचा देवेषु मंहते (6), nine-rayed, ten-rayed, most angiras, this angiras clan becomes together, as if, full of plenty with or in the gods.

These two verses (5-6) are to be read in coherence with the seventh one*. As said by Aurobindo, "aided by Indra they set free the pen of cows and horses, they gave to the sacrificer the mystic eight-eared kine [asta karnyah, (अष्टकर्ण्यः) has been often interpreted as the cow on the ear of which the numeral figure of eight has been scribed] and thereby create in the gods, sravas, the divine hearing or inspiration of the truth." From all this, one can conclude that the angirases are here the radiant lustres of the divine Agni which are born in heaven (in the mental realm), therefore of the divine flame and not of any physical fire; they become equipped with the nine rays of the light and the ten, became the most-angiras, that is to say, most full of the blazing radiance of Agni, the divine flame, and are therefore, able to release the imprisoned light and force and create supramental or transcendental knowledge. The relation between these divine angirases and the flaming lustres of Agni may also be seen from several verses, such as:

वना वनन्ति धृषता रुजन्तः। (Ṛv. VI.6.3)

and

कया ते अग्ने अङ्गिर ऊर्जो नपादुपस्तुतिम्।
वराय देव मन्यवे ॥ (Ṛv. VIII.84. 4)

---

* इन्द्रेण युजा निः सृजन्त वाघतो
व्रजं गोमन्तमश्विनम्।
सहस्रं मे ददतो अष्टकर्ण्यः
श्रवो देवेष्वक्रत ॥ (Ṛv.X.62.7)

In this one, we have "अग्नि-अङ्गिरस्, as son of energy, (urjo-napat)"; and also V.11.6, which we have already quoted earlier: Thee, O Agni, the Angirases found thee established in the secret place (guham hitam), lying in wood and wood (vane-vane).

And when we talk of light or fire in the Vedic texts, we do not always talk of the physical or figurative. "We must not imagine", so says Aurobindo, "that the Vedic poets were crude and savage intellects incapable of the obvious figure, common to all languages, which makes the physical light a figure of the mental and spiritual, of knowledge, of an inner illumination". (Aurobindo, Vol. X. p. 158).

Angiras is, then, not only the Agni-powers; in several verses, he has been referred to as also a Bṛhaspati-power. We have, for example, a line :

यो अद्रिभित् प्रथमजा ऋतावा
बृहस्पतिराङ्गिरसो हविष्मान्—(Ṛv. VI.73.1)
Bṛhaspati, breaker of the hill (the cave of the panis) the first-born, who has the truth, the angirasa, he of the oblation.

And similarly, we have in another verse a mention of Bṛhaspati as the angirasa :

प्र सप्तगुमृधीतिं सुमेधां बृहस्पतिं मतिरच्छा जगाति ।
य आङ्गिरसो नमसोपसद्योऽस्मभ्यं चित्रं वृषणं रयिं दाः ।
(Ṛv. X. 47.6)

The thought goes towards Bṛhaspati, the seven-rayed, the truth-thinking, the perfect intelligence, who is the angirasa, to be approached with obeisance.

Indra is also described as becoming an angirasa, or as becoming possessed of the angirasa quality (I.100.4); he would like to have all the epithets of Angirasas :

सो अङ्गिरोभिरङ्गिरस्तमो भूद् वृषा वृषिभिः सखिभिः सखा सन् ।
ऋग्मिभि ऋग्मी गातुभिर्ज्येष्ठो मरुत्वान् नो भवत्विन्द्र ऊती ॥
(Ṛv. I. 100.4)

Indra in becoming the angirasa becomes marutvan, possessed of, or companioned by the maruts, luminous and violent gods of the storm and the lightning, uniting in themselves the vehement powers of vayu (wind), breath, the Lord of life, and the force of agni, the seer-will.

Maruts are even said to be as it were "Angirases with their Sama (साम) hymns, they who take all forms.":

विश्वरूपा अङ्गिरसो न सामभिः (Ṛv. X. 78.5)

It must also be remembered that Usa has also been invoked in terms of Angirasa; Usa has been described as angirastama, and indratama. It is so, because the power of agni, the angirasa power, manifests itself also in the lightning of Indra and in the rays of the Dawn, for we have, in VII.79.2-3 :

व्यञ्जते दिवो अन्तेष्वक्तून् विशो न युक्ता उषसो यतन्ते ।
सं ते गावस्तम आवर्तयन्ति ज्योतिर्यच्छन्ति सवितेव बाहू ॥ (2)
अभूदुषा इन्द्रतमा मघोन्यजीजनत् सुविताय श्रवांसि ।
वि दिवो देवी दुहिता दधात्यङ्गिरस्तमा सुकृते वसूनि ॥ (3)

(Ṛv. VII. 79.2-3)

The Dawns make their rays to shine out in the extremities of the heaven; they labour like men, who are set to work. The rays set fleeing the darkness; they extend the light as if the Sun were extending its two arms.

Usa has come into being most full of Indra power (indratama), opulent in riches, and has given birth to the inspirations of knowledge for our happy going (for good and bliss), the goddess, daughter of heaven, most full of angiras-hood (angirastama), orders her riches for the doer of good works. (Aurobindo).

THE MARUTS, SARAMA AND PANIS

The hymn 6 of the First Book of the Ṛgveda for the first time refers to Maruts; its stanzas 4 to 9 are devoted to this devata (deity). In this sukta, there is a beautiful stanza for Indra :

> केतुं कृण्वन्नकेतवे पेशो मर्या अपेशसे ।
> समुषद्भिरजायथाः ॥ (Ṛv. I.6.3)
> Mortals, you owe your birth (to such an Indra) who with the rays of the morning gives sense to the senseless and to the formless form. (Wilson.)

The Maruts are invoked with Indra, both rejoicing and of equal splendour (मन्दू समानवर्चसा I. 6. 7). Maruts are not alone; they come in troops; they stay somewhere in the region of sky or come from the solar space :

> अतः परिज्मन्नागहि दिवो वा रोचनादधि (Ṛv. I. 6. 9).

According to the Scholiast, there is a reference to the asuras, named panis, who are supposed to have stolen cows of the gods or of the angirases, and hidden them in a cave, where they were discovered by Indra with the help of the bitch sarama. A dialogue between sarama and robbers, panis is given in the hymn X. 108, in which she conciliates them. In other passages the cows are represented as forcibly recovered by Indra with the help of the Maruts.

In another hymn I. 15, Indra not only drinks soma in the company of ṛtu (divinified season), but the maruts also join in it. The hymn I. 64 is collectively devoted to the Maruts, where the Maruts are the senders of rain, and ripeners of fruits :

> वृष्णे शर्धाय सुमखाय मरुद्भ्यः । (1)

These Maruts are born handsome and vigorous from the sky : they are the sons of Rudra, the conquerers of the foes, pure from sin, purifiers of all, radiant as suns, powerful as evil spirits, diffusers of rain drops and of fearful forms :

ते जज्ञिरे दिव ऋष्वास उक्षणो रुद्रस्य मर्या असुरा अरेपसः ।
पावकासः शुचयः सूर्या इव सत्वानो न द्रप्सिनो घोरवर्पसः ॥

(Ṛv. I.64.2)

These Maruts decorate their persons with various ornaments; for elegance, they have brilliant jewelery on their breasts; lances are borne upon their shoulders; they are leaders, born from the sky, of their own accord.

चित्रैरञ्जिभिर्वपुषे व्यञ्जते वक्षः सु रुक्माँ अधि येतिरे शुभे ।
अंसेष्वेषां नि मिमृक्षुरृष्टयः साकं जज्ञिरे स्वधया दिवो नरः ॥

(Ṛv. I.64.4)

These Maruts are very brave persons; in the battles, they roar like lions (सिंहा इव नानदति, 8). On the other hand, they are benevolent to men (नृषाचः, 9); they scatter the nutritious waters; as grooms they lead forth a horse; they bring forth for its rain the fleet-moving cloud, and milk it thundering and unexhausted (6). They are vast, possessed of knowledge, bright shining, like mountains in stability, quick in motion, and like elephants, they put vigour in their ruddy mares (7). These Maruts, again, are the augmenters of rain; they drive with golden wheels the clouds asunder (11). These Maruts have been invoked for durable riches, attended by posterity and for riches reckoned by hundreds and thousands and ever increasing (15).

The hymns I.85-88 are again devoted to these Maruts, with additional informations. Sometimes, they decorate as females; they are gliders through air; they are the sons of Rudra (रुद्रस्य सूनवः); sometimes they yoke deer to their chariots for getting rain released from clouds; and thence they moisten the Earth like a hide with water :

प्रयद् रथेषु पृषतीरयुग्ध्वं वाजे अद्रिं मरुतो रंहयन्तः ।
उतारुषस्य विष्यन्ति धाराश्चर्मेवोदभिर्व्युन्दन्ति भूम ॥ (Ṛv. I.85.5)

Maruts have numerous achievements to their credit. Indra slays Vrtra (the coverer) with the help of Maruts. By their power, they bore the well aloft, and clove asunder the mountain that obstructed their path; they brought the crooked well to the place (where the muni was), and sprinkled the water on the thirsty Gotama*; the variously radiant Maruts came to his succour gratifying the desire of the sage with life sustaining waters (11).

जिह्मं नुनुद्रेऽवतं तया दिशा सिञ्चन्नुत्सं गोतमाय तृष्णजे ।
आ गच्छन्तीमवसा चित्रभानवः कामं विप्रस्य तर्पयन्त धामभिः ॥
(Ṛv. I. 85. 11)

(Thirsty Gotama's reference is also in I.88.4-5).

Maruts are in possession of swift-moving cars in which they fly like birds along well-defined paths; they collect clouds from the firmament and release water from them.

Maruts have been invoked to come with their brilliant light-moving, well-weaponed, steed-harnessed chariots, and they descend like birds, bringing with them abundant food :

आ विद्युन्मद्भिर्मरुतः स्वर्कै रथेभिर्यात ऋष्टिमद्भिरश्वपर्णैः ।
आ वर्षिष्ठया न इषा वयो न पप्तता सुमायाः ॥ (Ṛv. I.88.1)

Combining with the solar rays, these Maruts willingly pour down rain for the welfare (of people):

श्रियसे कं भानुभिः सं मिमिक्षिरे
ते रश्मिभिस्त ऋक्वभिः सुखादयः । (Ṛv. I. 87.6)

 Based on such Vedic verses, we have a legend, that Ṛsi Gotama, being thirsty, prayed to the maruts for relief who thereupon brought a well from a distance to his hermitage. The same legend appears in reference to Asvins (Nasatya) who raised up the well and made the base, which had been turned upwards. He curved mouth, so that the water issued for the beverage of the thirsty Gotama. (Ṛv. I. 116.9)

By scattering the clouds (or the first born of the clouds, ahi) and dispersing the darkness, Indra may be said to be the parent of the Sun and day light (आत् सूर्यं जनयन् द्यामुषासम्, I.32.4). In the struggle against this coverer, Vṛtra, or ahi (the clouds, the darkness), Maruts also accompanied Indra, but they did not attack Vṛtra; they merely stood nigh and encouraged Indra, saying, "O Indra, O Lord, strike: show thyself a hero" (brahmana); for we have, "verily, Indra, thou hast slain the wealthy barbarian with thine adamantine (bolt); thou singly assailing (him), although with auxiliaries (the Maruts) at hand."

We have in the Aitareya Brahmana [III. I6 (Xii. 5)], the lines: "when Indra had slain Vrtra, all the deities left him, thinking, 'He had not laid (him) low', the Maruts only his true comrades, did not leave; the Maruts, true comrades are the breaths; the breaths did not then leave him". We have a further passage in the Aitareya Brahmana : Indra, being about to slay Vṛtra, said to all the deities, 'Do you support me: do ye call to me'. Be it so', (they replied). They ran forward to slay. He (Vṛtra) perceived. They are running hither to slay me : well let me terrify them'. Against them he breathed forth. Before his snorting in haste, all the gods ran away, but the maruts did not abandon him, saying, 'Smite, O blessed One; strike, show thy strength'; they supported him. Seeing this the seer declares :

> 'Before the snorting of Vṛtra in haste, all the gods, thy comrades, abandoned thee. With the Maruts, O Indra, be there friendship for thee'.

'Then shalt thou conquer ever foe'. Thus Indra realized, these Maruts are indeed his friends. They showed me love: Well, let me give them a share in this litany. [Ait. Br. III. 20 (xii. 9)].

These Maruts, the vital breaths, are thus the only friends of Indra, the self-consciousness.

There is another text in the Ṛgveda, I.37.5. Praise the sportive and the restless might of the Maruts, who were born amongst kine (gosu-marutam, गोषु मरुतम्) (the tribe of Maruts among the cows); and whose strength has been nourished by the enjoyment of milk.

प्रशंसा गोष्वघ्न्य क्रीळं यच्छर्धो मारुतम् ।
जम्भे रसस्य वावृधे ॥ (Ṛv. I.37.5)

Here in the text, as has been pointed out by M. Langlois, the cows represent the clouds, and milk the rain. Aurobindo takes the psychological interpretation. A text further says that Maruts were born of milk for pṛsni: पृश्नियै वै पयसो मरुत: (pṛsni=dhenu=milch cow). In this connection we have: "That you, sons of pṛsni, may become mortals and your panegyrist become immortal.

यद् यूयं पृश्निमातरो मर्तासि स्यातन ।
स्तोता वो अमृत: स्यात् ॥ (Ṛv. I.38.4)

Maruts are further known to be the partakers of the evening oblations (I.87.1), and hence they are so often known as ṛjisinah (ऋजीषिण:) :

प्रत्यक्षस: प्रतवसो विरप्शिनो ऽनानता अविथुरा ऋजीषिण : ।
जुष्टतमासो नृतमासो अञ्जिभिर्व्यानिजे केचिदुस्रा इव स्तृभि : ॥
(Ṛv. I.87.1)

Annihilators (of adversaries), endowed with great strength, loud-shouting, unbending, inseparable partakers of the evening oblation, constantly worshipped and leaders (of the clouds), (the Maruts) by their personal decorations, are conspicuous (in the sky), like certain rays of the sun (or of stars=stṛbhih). (Wilson.).

The Scholiast, Sayana, has proposed various etymologies of name Marut (I.87.4), some of which have been borrowed from Yaska, the Nirukta XI.13*. They sound (ruvanti, रुवन्ति from √ru), having attained mid-heaven (mita, मित); or, they sound without measure (amitam); or they shine (from √ ruc) in the clouds made (mitam) by themselves; or they hasten (dravanti) in the sky. It has further been said, that all the minor divinities that people the mid-air are styled as Maruts; all females whose station is the middle-heaven, the all-pervading masculine vayu and all the troops (of demigods) are Maruts. Sayana in this connection refers to the mythology of the birth of fortynine Maruts, in seven troops, as the sons of Kasyapa. In the Satapatha Brahmana, II.5.1.13, we have a mention of seven-seven (=7×7=49) Maruts (सप्त सप्त हि मरुतो गणाः) whilst in the Jaimini Brahmana, we have a reference to 40 Maruts (चत्वारिंशत् मरुतो देवाः),—perhaps the remaining nine are the goddesses, like marici (मरीचि) etc.

Marici is perhaps the best amongst the Maruts. About three maricis, we have in the Satapatha Brahmana (V.3.4.21): एता वा आपः स्वराजो यन् मरीचयः, ता यत् स्यन्दन्तऽइवान्योऽन्यस्या ...उत्तराधरा इव भवन्त्यो यान्ति, which means the self-luminiscent water aggregates dispersed in space constitute marici; these aggregates move up and down.

The Satapatha also mentions of the Maruta-rays (मारुत-रश्मयः), different from the Sun's rays. Perhaps the Marut-rays and the maricis are radiations scattered by water-aggregates, and they exhibit brilliant colours. (mita-rocinah).

The Nirukta quotes the verse I.88.1 in the context of Maruts:

आ विद्युन्मद्भिर्मरुतः स्वर्कै रथेभिर्यात ऋष्टिमद्भिरश्वपर्णैः ।
आ वर्षिष्ठया न इषा वयो न पप्तता सुमायाः ॥ (Ṛv. I.88.1)

Come, Maruts, with your brilliant light-moving, well-weaponed, steed-harnessed chariots; doers of good deeds, descend like birds (and bring us) abundant food. (Wilson).

*अथातो मध्यस्थाना देवगणाः । तेषां मरुतः प्रथमागामिनो भवन्ति । मरुतो मितराविणो वा । मितरोचिनो वा । महद् द्रवन्तीति वा । तेषामेषा भवति, Nir. XI. 13). Ma-rutah. of measured sound: or of measured brilliancy (√mi √ruc); or they run away with much (mahad+ dru).

Whilst explaining the word marut in the Uṇādi-koṣa, Dayananda writes: म्रियते मारयति वा स मरुत् मनुष्यजातिः पवनो वा (I.94). This means, one who is killed, or the one who kills is marut: it may mean men in general and wind (or air) also.

To Dayananda, Maruts are the important persons of a society occupying high offices, and therefore, he has translated the term differently according to the context. The same has been recommended by Yaska also. [illegible] मन्त्रा निर्वक्तव्याः प्रकरणानुकूलत्वेन [illegible] (Dayananda). We shall refer to Dayananda's interpretation of Maruts in a few cases from the Yajurveda :

(i) Learned men, guests and the rtviks (participators in the yajñas (Yv. III. 44).
(ii) The householders (Yv. III. 45).
(iii) Wind or air (Yv. XV. 13).
(iv) Men in groups (Yv. XVII. 80-83).
(v) Distinguished commanders of an army (Yv. XVII.47).
(vi) Men of learning (Yv. XVII. 86).
(vii) Heads of the State (king), people, [illegible] and men of learning. (Yv. XVII. 86).
(viii) Mortal men (Yv. XXXIV. 48).
(ix) Souls in general (Yv. XXXIX. 7).

In the Ṛgveda, the entire suktas (hymns devoted to Maruts are : I. 37-39; 64;85-88;166;167;172; II. 34; V. 52-61; 87; VII. 56-59 and VIII. 7.

In these suktas, Dayananda interprets Maruts [illegible] as the characteristic (good or evil) of wind (I.37 [illegible]) and Maruts are those persons who are vested with the qualities of wind: e g , in I. 37.12 Maruts are the people of state even heads of army; in I. 38.3, people speedy in movements like wind; in I. 38.8 as simply wind; in [illegible] as the adepts in Yoga; in I. 39.1,8,9,10, as men of learning; in I. 64. 1,6, as wind; in I. 64.9, as rtviks well-versed in technology; in I. 64.13 as men vested with the qualities of wind; in I.85, as wind or wind-like [illegible] soldiers and commanders of army; in I.87.2 [illegible] employed in public bodies; in I.88.1 as the head of a state, or even people; in I. 166.1, as men in general; in I.166.3 as wind; in I.166.11,12 men working with the speed of wind or efficiency of vital breath; in I.166.9,14, men with the valour and strength of wind; in I.166.13; I.167.6; I.172.1, men loving as vital breath; in I.167.9, as strong people; in I.167.11; II. 34.8,9, as men of learning; in II. 34.1,2,5,6,11,15; V. 52.1-4, as mortals or men: again in V. 52.6 as wind; maruta (मारुत) also as belonging or pertaining to men of learning in V.52.1,3, and similarly else-where in the Fifth Book where he favours the interpretation as "men in general".[1]

"Indra, in becoming the Angirasa", so says Aurobindo, "becomes Marutvan, possessed of or companioned by the Maruts, and these Maruts, luminous and violent gods of the storm and the lightning, uniting in themselves the vehement power of Vayu, the Wind, the Breath, the Lord of Life, and the force of Agni, the Seer-Will are, therefore, seers who do the work by knowledge, कवयो विद्मना अपस:, as well as battling forces who by the power of the heavenly Breath and the heavenly lightning overthrow the established things, the artificial obstructions, कृत्रिमाणि रोधांसि, in which the sons of Darkness have entrenched themselves, and aid Indra to overcome Vrtra and the Dasyus. They seem to be in the esoteric Veda the Life Powers that support by their nervous or vital energies the action of the thought in the attempt of the mortal consciousness to grow or expand itself into the immortality of the Truth and Bliss". (Aurobindo, Vol. X. p.163).

These Maruts have been described in VI. 49.11, as acting with the qualities of the Angirasa (angirasvat), "O young seers or powers of the sacrifice Maruts, come uttering the word to the high place (or desirable plane of earth or the hill, अधि सानु पृश्ने:, VI. 6.4., which is probably the sense of varasyam according to Aurobindo), powers increasing, rightly moving (on the path, gatu) like the Angirasa, give joy even to that which is not illumined (अचित्रम्), that which has not received the varied light of the dawn, the night of our ordinary darkness". The Maruts have also been said to be as it were "Angirasas with their Saman hymns, they who take all forms (विश्वरूपाङ्गिरसो न सामभिः).

1. For मरुत् see V. 52.5.6; for मारुत V. 52. 8,13.14, (मारुतं, मारुतं गणम्).

In the conquest over darkness, the circumscribing Night (रात्री परितक्म्या, V. 30.14), vrtra ahi, sambara (I. 59.6) and vala, the Titans, Giants, Pythons, subconscient powers, who hold the light and the force in themselves, in their cities of darkness and illusion, not only Indra, but Maruts, Angirasas and also pitrs, the human fathers, have played a very important role.

It appears that this colossal darkness, the supramental nescience, in our struggle never gives it up to man, the mental being. The struggle is incessant and would ever go on in our inner realms with fresh vigours on either side. This nescience, or ignorance, has not merely to be cut away from us, but broken up and into, and made to yield up the secret of light and good and infinity (satya, rta and brhat). Out of this death, that immortality has to be conquered. "Pent up behind this ignorance", says Aurobindo, is a secret knowledge and a great light of Truth; prisoned by this evil is an infinite content of good; in this limiting death is the seed of a boundless immortality". (Vol. X. p.110).

Sarama and Panis—In this conquest over ignorance, an important role has also been played by Sarama (सरमा), about whom a legend was interwoven and who has come to be known as the Hound of Heaven, a bitch, accompanied with two Sarameya (सारमेयौ) dogs, white and black with four eyes (X. 14. 10-11).[1] This hymn is normally known to be the Funeral Hymn, where these two dogs, sons of Sarama, are messengers of Yama; but in fact, this hymn is not one of Death, so much as a hymn of Life and Immortality. It is worth noting the real character of Yama and his two dogs in the Vedic Text. In the Ṛgveda, Yama is not the god of Death but is some sort of the Sun; in the Asya Vamiya Sukta (I. 164), it is one of the names of the Sun (as well as of the Supreme Self), the other names being Indra, Mitra, Varuna, Agni, Suparna Garutman, and Matarisvan (46). Pusan and Yama both in the Isa Upanisad (16) are the appelations of the Sun (or God with Divine Light), or Yama is one of the twin children of the wide shining Lord of Truth. Yama is the guardian of Dharma, the Law of the Truth (सत्य धर्म) :

1. अतिद्रव सारमेयौ श्वानौ चतुरक्षौ शबलौ साधुना पथा । (Ṛv. X. 14.10)
यौ ते श्वानौ यम रक्षितारौ चतुरक्षौ पथरक्षी नृचक्षसौ । (Ṛv. X.14.11)

> हिरण्मयेन पात्रेण सत्यस्यापिहितं मुखम्
> तत्त्वं पूषन्नपावृणु सत्यधर्माय दृष्टये ॥ (Isa. 15)
> The face of Truth is covered with a brilliant golden lid; that dost thou remove, 0 Pusan, 0 fosterer, the law of the truth, for sight (15).

> पूषन्नेकर्षे यमसूर्य प्राजापत्या व्यूह रश्मीन् समूह ।
> तेजो यत्ते रूप कल्याणतम तत्ते पश्यामि योऽसावादित्ये पुरुषः
> सोऽसावहम् । (Isa. 16)
> 0 Pusan (0 fosterer), 0 sole seer, or ordainer (Yama), 0 illuminating Sun, 0 Power of the Father of Creatures (Prajapati), marshal thy rays, draw together thy light; the Lustre which is thy most blessed form of all, that in Thee I behold The Purusa there and there, He am I. (Isa. 16).

And so Yama is the fosterer, very much of the group of the Sun, Prajapati, Pusan, connected with Eternal Truth and Divine Light. His messengers (यमस्य दूतौ, X 14.12), the two sons of Sarama, should also be somehow connected with this Truth and Enlightenment. The Hymn X. 14 has to be taken in this light : The soul of the heaven-ascending mortal is bidden to "outrun the two four-eyed vari-coloured Sarameya dogs on the good path."

> अतिद्रव सारमेयौ श्वानौ चतुरक्षौ शबलौ साधुना पथा । (Rv. X. 14.10)
> Of that path to heaven, they are the four-eyed guardians, protecting man on the road by their divine vision.

and Yama is asked to give them as an escort to the soul on its way (यौ ते श्वानौ यम रक्षितारौ चतुरक्षौ पथिरक्षी नृचक्षसा). These dogs are "wide moving, not easily satisfied", and range as the messengers of the Lord of the Law (yama) among men. And the hymn prays, "May they (the two dogs) give us back bliss here in the unhappy (world) so that we may look upon the Sun:

> उरूणसावसुतृपा उदुम्बलौ यमस्य दूतौ चरतो जनाँ अनु ।
> तावस्मभ्यं दृशये सूर्याय पुनर्दातामसुमद्येह भद्रम् ॥ (Ṛv. X. 14.12).

The hymn X.108 is devoted entirely to a colloquy of Sarama and Panis. The information given in this hymn is also contained in the earlier references to Sarama in the Ṛgveda implicitly or explicitly: I.62.3; 72.8; III.31.6; IV.16.8; and V.45.7, 8.

> इन्द्रस्याङ्गिरसां चेष्टौ विदत् सरमा तनयाय धासिम् ।
> बृहस्पतिर्भिनदद्रिं विदद् गाः समुस्रियाभिर्वावशन्त नरः ॥ (Ṛv. I.62.3)
> When the search was set on foot by Indra and the Angirases, Sarama secured food for her young; then Bṛhaspati slew the devourer and rescued the kine, and the gods, with the cattle, proclaimed their joy aloud.

> स्वाध्यो दिव आ सप्त यह्वी रायो दुरो व्यृतज्ञा अजानन् ।
> विदद् गव्यं सरमा दृळ्हमूर्वं येना नु कं मानुषी भोजते विट् ॥
> (Ṛv. I.72.8)
> The seven pure rivers that flow from heaven, (are directed, Agni, by thee: by thee the priests), skilled in sacrifices, knew the doors of (the cave where) the treasure, (their cattle), were concealed; for the Sarama discovered the abundant milk of the kine, with which man, the progeny of Manu, still is nourished

Sarama, of course, is some power of the Light, and probably of the Dawn. The Vedic texts so often refer to the struggle between Indra and the Sons of the Cave; the struggle is symbolic between the powers of Light and Darkness.

I shall again repeat here, as I have done elsewhere, that, as Aurobindo also says (Vol. X.p.133), all the gods (the divine virtues) are conquerers and givers of the cows, the horses and the divine riches: but it is especially, the great deity, Indra, the self, who is the hero and fighter in this struggle or warfare and who wins for the man (the human complex) the Light and Force. Cow evidently stands for light, and horse for force. Therefore, Indra is constantly addressed as the master of the herds, gopati; he is even imaged himself as the cow and the horse; he, again, is the good milker whom all the persons of wisdom, the seers, wish to milk and what he yields are perfect forms and ultimate thoughts; he is vṛsabha (वृषभ) or the Bull of the herds; his is the wealth of cows, the enlightenment, and horses, the impelling forces for attaining enlightenment and beatitude; which all of us covet. And therefore, we have a verse:

गावो भगो गाव इन्द्रो मे अच्छान् गावः सोमस्य प्रथमस्य भक्षः ।
इमा या गावः स जनास इन्द्र इच्छामीद् धृदा मनसा चिदिन्द्रम् ॥

(Ṛv. VI. 28.5)

O people, these that are the cows, they are Indra; it is Indra I desire with my heart and with my mind.

This identification of cow and Indra is also very significant.

The dasyus who withhold or steal the cows are called the panis. Remember that these dasyus or panis are not historical people; they in the Veda do not represent a race either. They are one of us, and are present in all of us; and against them we have to wage a war, since they steal away our coveted riches, our cows, our horses, which have to be ravished from them by violence. The Arya is a personification of virtue and divine thoughts; he has to be constantly at guard against dasyus, a synonym of evil thoughts, wickedness, the nescience and darkness. It is so often that dasyus, the devils, take possession of us, they steal our virtues, they cover our wisdom with ill-thoughts, and thus they steal our cows, horses and other riches. In that case, with the aid of all the gods, the Self, Indra, has to discover and recover the lost wealth.

The dasyus who withhold or steal the divine wealth, the cows, are called the panis, a word originally meaning doers, dealers or traffickers; they are misers of the extreme. In the Unadi-kosa (IV. 119), the word Pani has been explained by Dayananda as "यः पणायति व्यवहारति, स पणिः, वणिग्वा." The market place or lane of trade or business is known similarly vipanih (विपणिः). At another place (II.71) the similarity between the vanik (the trader or businessman) and pani has been shown thus :

पणायति व्यवहारनीति वणिक्, वैश्यो वा; प्रज्ञादित्वात् स्वार्थेऽङ् वाणिजः ।

Normally the term pani is not derogatory, but when the same person, the same dealer, becomes a hoarder, a black-marketeer, a miser, a stealer, then the term stinks of an evil connotation*. In relation to Indra, Bṛhaspati, cows, the Angiras, Sarama, and the Sarameya dogs, the word pani stands under a malevolent category.

The Nirukta (II.16;17) discusses the verses I. 32.10;11 in details :

अतिष्ठन्तीनामनिवेशनानां काष्ठानां मध्ये निहितं शरीरम् ।
वृत्रस्य निण्यं विचरन्त्यापो दीर्घं तम आशयदिन्द्रशत्रुः ॥ (Ṛv. I.32.10)
The waters carry off the nameless body of Vṛtra, tossed into the midst of the never-stopping, never-resting currents. The foe of Indra has slept a long darkness. (Wilson).

दासपत्नीरहिगोपा अतिष्ठन् निरुद्धा आपः पणिनेव गावः ।
अपां बिलमपिहितं यदासीद् वृत्रं जघन्वाँ अप तद् ववार ॥ (Ṛv. I.32.11)
The waters, the wives of the destroyer, guarded by ahi stood obstructed like the cows by pani; but by slaying Vṛtra, Indra set open the cave that had confined them. (Wilson).

Commenting on the latter verse (11), Yaska says :

पणिर्वणिग्भवति । पणि. पणनात् । वणिक् पण्यं नेनेक्ति, that is, pani is,

---

* Similar to the word pani, in English language the word jew has double connotations (i) one who professes Judaism (goods sense), (ii) usurer trader who drives hard bargains (derogatory).

one who trades, who is engaged in business; who enhances the value or worth of a saleable article by giving a cleansed appearance (nenekti) (II.17). Regarding vṛtra, the comment says:

वृत्रो वृणोतेर्वा । वर्ततेर्वा । वर्धतेर्वा ॥

यदवृणोत्तद् वृत्रस्य वृत्रत्वम् इति विज्ञायते । यदवर्तत तद् वृत्रस्य वृत्रत्वम् इति विज्ञायते । यदवर्धत तद् वृत्रस्य वृत्रत्वम् इति विज्ञायते । (Nir II.17).

Vṛtra is derived from √vṛ (वृ), to cover, or from √vṛt (वृत्), to roll, or from √vṛdh (वृध्), to grow. Vṛtra is so-called because he covered, because he rolled and because he grew.

The chief of Panis is Vala (वल), a demon whose name signifies probably the "circumscriber" or "encloser", as Vṛtra means obstructor or enfolding coverer. "It is easy to suggest" so writes Aurobindo (Vol. X. p. 134), "as do the scholars who would read as much primitive history as possible into the Veda, that the panis are the Dravidians and Vala is their chief or god. But this sense can only be upheld in isolated passages; in many hymns, it is incompatible with the actual words of the ṛsis and turns into a jumble of gaudy nonsense their images and figures".

Vala dwells in a lair, a hole (bila बिल) in the mountains; Indra and the Angirasa ṛsis have to pursue him there and force him to give up his wealth: for he is Vala of the cows, वलस्य गोमतः (Ṛv. I.II.5). The Panis also are represented as concealing the stolen herd in a cave of the mountain which is called their concealing prison, (vivara, विवर) or the pen of the cows, vraja (व्रज), or sometimes in a significant phrase, gavyam urvam (गव्यमूर्वम्), meaning cowly wideness or the luminous wideness; the vast wealth of the shining herds. To recover this lost wealth, the sacrifice has to be performed; the Angirases or else Bṛhaspati and the Angirases together have to chant the true word or mantra; Sarama, the heavenly hound, has to find out the cows in the cave of Panis. Indra, strong with Soma-wine and the Angirases, the seers, his companions, have to follow the track, enter the cave or violently break open the strong places of the hill, defeat the Panis and drive upward the delivered herds. Remember, Indra is not, then, the only god who can break open the tenebrous cave and restore the lost radiances. There are other deities to whom various hymns make the attribution of the great victory. Usa is one of them, the divine Dawn, mother of these herds. (VII.75.7)[1]; Agni is another, who fights alone and sometimes with Indra too (VI.60.2)[2]; sometimes with Soma (I.93.4)[3]; sometimes Soma and Indra together (VI.44.2); sometimes the credit goes to Asvins also (VI.62.11)[4]; and also to Angirases (I.112.18)[5]; and so the Maruts (VI.66.8) as we have already seen, and also Pusan (VI.54.5 6,10). Sarasvati is also a killer of the Panis. In this context we are told (I. 100.18), that Sarama found the strong wideness of the cows. By right thought the seven Mighty Ones of heaven (the seven rivers) knew the Truth and knew the doors of bliss; Sarama found the strong wideness of the cows and by that the human creature enjoys."

स्वाध्यो दिव आ सप्त यह्वी रायो दुरो व्यृतज्ञा अजानन् ।
विदद् गव्यं सरमा दृळ्हमूर्वं येना नु कं मानुषी भोजते विट् ॥
(Ṛv. I.72.8)

Who are the Panis, who are the cows, who is Sarama, and who are the others who collectively give a form to the entire Vedic parable ? Is it the Sun of divine enlightenment, dwelling in darkness that has to be brought back from the innermost cavity of man, shrouded with evil thoughts. The cows are the Light of the Sun but in the Vedic Text, not of the mundane Sun which rises and sets every day in the celestial and earthly worlds. It is the Sun of Divine Light of spirituality which is to be invoked. It would be worth while to interpret the whole parable esoterically. Thoughts (dhi, धी) provide us with milk that nourishes us, it is the spiritual Power (asva, अश्व), and Light or enlightenment (go, गो), which are to be invoked in our struggle against the dominating influence of darkness, Vṛtras, Dasyus or Panis. The inferior truth of this world is mixed with much falsehood and error (अनृतस्य भूरेः) (VII. 60.5); on the other hand, we have to proceed to the Home of Truth (सदनाद् ऋतस्य, I.164.47; IV.21.3), a place where we have the triplet—the Truth, the Right and the Vast (satya, ṛta and bṛhat; Atharva. XII.1.1). We shall have to march ahead on the paths of Truth (ऋतस्य पथ्याः, III.12.7). Here in this world, we are engaged in a fight against evils, sins and darkness. Gods belong to the side of truth and devils and satans to the side of untruth; our satanic adversaries have been given in the Vedic texts the names of Vṛtra, Vala, Dasyus, Panis, or their kings. These powers of darkness have concealed light from us; or they rob us of it, and thus obstruct the inflow of the streams of Truth (ऋतस्य धाराः, V.12.2; VII.43.4); they do not permit our soul to ascend as if. Let us, therefore, pursue our inner sacrifice; let us invoke all Divinities in us, muster our strength, and with their help ascend to the cherished goal. For this, we shall have to develop right thinking and right understanding, and pursue the path of right action (ऋतस्य प्रेषा, ऋतस्य धीतिः, I.68.5). We are on a battle on one hand which is also our sacred pilgrimage. To assist us, all of us have an Inner Fire, an Inner Flame as our path-finder, a guide, a leader, a torch, the light of consciousness. Let us all have a Sarama with us, an intuitive secret help to show a way where all other aids fail; then invoke other goddesses, Sarasvati, Ila, and Bharati. One who goes through the text of the Veda, the Divine Revelation, he would find this Grand Parable elaborated or hinted at in various forms. And within the mystic meaning of the parable is incorporated the entire code of our human life on both the lowest and highest planes of achievement,—this is the most sublime philosophy of the Vedic Dynamic Realism.

2. ता योधिष्टमभि गा इन्द्र नूनमपः स्वरुषसो अग्न ऊळ्हाः । (Ṛv. VI.60 2)

ṚSIS OR THE VEDIC SEERS

Ṛgveda is homogeneous in structure

It has been the trend of the Western scholars to have differentiated between the different mandalas or Books of the Ṛgveda, belonging to different dates, containing the material essentially differing in cultural levels and in being the compositions of different authors belonging to various schools. For example, Wilson writes : "The absence of any obvious dependency of the suktas upon one another is sufficiently indicative of their separate and unsystematic origin. That they are the compositions of the partiarchal sages to whom they are ascribed, is sometimes, apparent from allusions which they make to the name of the author or of his family; but these indications are of unfrequent recurrence, and we must trust in general to tradition, as preserved by the Anukramanikas (अनुक्रमणिका) for the accuracy of the appropriation. Their being addressed to the same divinity is a less equivocal test of community and they probably were composed in many instances by the heads of families, or of schools following a similar form of worship, and adoring in preference particular deifications. Besides the internal evidence afforded by difference of style, the hymns not unfrequently avow a difference of date; and we find some ascribed to ancient ṛsis, while others admit their being of new or newest compositions. The great variety of metres employed shows also a progressive developments of the language, which could have been the effect only of long and diligent cultivation."

The Western mind, quite contrary to the Indian tradition, very readily discovers "progressive developments", and usually works on the evolutionary hypotheses and is very much prone to ignore homogeneity of material. Wilson accepts certain uniformities in entire Ṛgvedic material when he says, "There can be little doubt, therefore, that they (the Books) range through a considerable interval, although, as far as respects their general purport, they belong to the same condition of belief, and to a period during which no change of any importance took place in the national creed. The same divinities are worshipped in a similar strain, and with one or two doubtful exceptions, which are possibly interpolations, or which may admit of explanation offer nothing that is contradictory or incongruous."

It is to the credit of Dayananda and later on also of Aurobindo to have declared in unequivocal terms that the Ṛgveda is one in all its parts. It cannot be treated in strata. To Dayananda, not only the Ṛgveda, but all the four Vedas go to constitute the Single Veda, as if Aurobindo says, "whichever of its ten Mandalas we choose, we find the same substance, the same ideas, the same images, the same phrases. The Ṛsis are the seers of a single truth and use in its expression a common language. They differ in temperament and personality; some are inclined to a more rich, subtle and profound use of Vedic symbolism; others give voice to their spiritual experience in a barer and simpler diction, with less fertility of thought, richness of poetical image or depth and fullness of suggestion. Often the songs of one seer vary in their manner, range from the utmost simplicity to the most curious richness. Or there are risings and fallings in the same hymn; it proceeds from the most ordinary conventions of the general symbol of sacrifice to a movement of packed and complex thought. Some of the suktas are plain and almost modern in their language; others baffle us at first by their semblance of antique obscurity. But these differences of manner take nothing from the unity of spiritual experince, nor are they complicated by any variation of the fixed terms and the formulae. In the deep and mystic style of Dirghatamas Aucathya as in the melodious lucidity of Medhatithi Kanwa, in the puissant and energetic hymns of Visvamitra as in Vasistha's even harmonies we have the same firm foundation of knowledge and the same scrupulous adherence to the sacred conventions of the Initiates."

Thus Dayananda and Aurobindo are one in accepting a type of uniformity and congruency in the entire Vedic fabric texture. The entire Veda propounds one single Vedic Philosophy (the philosophy of life which is capable of gradually lifting one from the lowest rung of human life to the highest transcendental one, and takes into account the interwoven fabric of the entire human corporeal complex, starting from the grossest exterior, and finally by and by merging into the most subtle interior).

VEDIC SEERS

There is, however, a fundamental difference between Aurobindo and Dayananda. To the former, the traditional Vedic Ṛsis, whose names are preserved for us in the Sarvanukramanis and which have been associated with the hymns, are the persons of divine experiences, which became media for the spiritual knowledge. Dayananda in this respect follows Yaska, the celebrated author of the Nirukta; to them these rsis or seers are the persons who gave us the expositions from time to time of the inner meanings of the revealed hymns. The revealed hymns existed much prior to them. Of course, their elaborate expositions of the hymns are not available to us. The Supreme Self is the creator of this vast phenomenal world, including our human complex and simultaneousy, from the Self, we have received the Sacred Word (the Veda) too, and it was left to the ancient rsis to work out the coherency and congruency between all that was given to us as the Revealed Word and the truths that lie hidden in the ever-changing phenomenal universe. To Dayananda, the entire Veda is not the mystic enigma alone. The Vedas take us gradually from the so-obvious simple truths to the depths of transcendental mystic realities. The Vedas are meant for our today and tomorrow both.

I shall not enter into the details of this discussion. It is very creditable, almost miraculous, that the Ṛg Samhita is not only available to us with the Samhita and the Pada-Pathas we are in possession of numerous Vedic indexes also. The Sarvanukramani (edited by Macdonell, Oxford, 1886) has been composed by Katyayana and it is, as its name indicates, a collection of various indexes for the Ṛgveda. This work gives, in the form of Sutras, the first words of every hymn, the number of verses in that hymn, the name and the family of the ṛsi to whom the hymn is ascribed, the devata (the deities) or the subject title to which the hymn is devoted, and the metre or metres in which the hymn is composed. We have another index also, known as the Arsanukramani which is ascribed to Saunaka and it enumerates the ṛsis of the Vedic hymns according to the Mandalas. There is another book, of great importance to us, known as the Bṛhad-devata, also ascribed to Saunaka. It constitutes a more or less exhaustive manual dealing with devatas (gods so to say) celebrated in various hymns of the Ṛgveda. It contains almost forty legends referring to these gods, and is, therefore, an important work also. Some of the scholars place this book chronologically between the Nirukta on one hand and the Sarvanukramani on the other.

The Sarvanukramani provides a list of 407 ṛsis for the entire Ṛgveda. We are obliged to V.G. Rahurkar for his monograph "The Seers of the Ṛgveda", (Poona, 1964) for a detailed discussion on the subject of these ṛsis. The word ṛsi appears to have been variously derived. The Taittiriya Aranyaka[1] derives it from abhi +a+ṛs (to go upwards, to appear). Sayana derives it from ṛs (=to go)[2]. He further gives the grammatic derivation from ṛs+in. Dayananda bases his derivation on the Nirukta VII. 3. Seers have visions of the mantras[1]. Ṛsis have the penetrating insight, through which they are able to interpret the correct sense of the Vedic Texts for the good of every one of us. They are not the authors of the mantras but only the interpreters. The moment the Vedas were revealed in the beginning of human creation of a developed mind, the ancient seers started giving a serious thought as to the correct interpretation of the Vedic Texts. Names of some of these interpreters have been traditionally handed down to us, as the seers of the hymns. (Ṛgbhabhu, Dayananda, Chapter on Questions and Answers). In the beginning of the earliest culture, not to speak of the proper nouns, there were very few common names even. Many of the ṛsis have yet no names of their own, and they came to be known by certain terms or words occuring in the hymns which they had interpreted to the earlier society. The word thus occuring in the hymn is not a proper name, but later on in the history the ṛsi associated with this hymn came to be known by a term which occurs in a particular mantra. There is no history or historical names in the Vedic Texts. Later on in history, almost in all the periods, it was held sacred to give proper names out of the common terms occuring in the Vedic Texts. Later on in literature, mythological stories were concocted in connection with these seers. Wilson has ignored this traditional aspect of assigning names, and therefore, he has erred in many of his statements like "most of the ṛsis (associated with the Vedic Texts) are familiar to the legends of the Puranas, as Gotama, Kanwa, Bharadvaja, Vasistha, Visvamitra and others."

The hymns of the Second Book are associated (as interpreters with the Seer Gṛtsamada (गृत्समद), the son of Sunahotra, of the family of Angiras (आङ्गिरस: शौनहोत्र:); those of the Third, to Visvamitra, (विश्वामित्र), his sons and his kinsmen; of the Fourth to Vamadeva (वामदेव); of the Fifth to Atri (अत्रि) and his sons, who are rather of equivocal nomenclature; of the Sixth, to Bharadvaja, (भरद्वाज); and of the Seventh, to Vasistha (वसिष्ठ) and his descendants.

seers have visions of their poetic compositions (Laksman Sarup on Nir. VII.3). The ṛsis have direct vision of the sense carried by the Vedic verses. (Daya.).

The ṛsis of the First and three last Books are more miscellaneous. It must be accepted and well realized that it would be futile to establish a chronological sequence to these Books—the order of these Books indicates neither the chronological sequence of their arrangement in the Samhita revelation or interpretation, nor the intellectual eminence, prominence or mystic depth nor the social families which are traditionally believed to have got associated with them.*

The genealogies of some of the ṛsis are given in the Sarvanukramanı; for example :

I. Isiratha Kusika Gathi Visvamitra

Ṛsabha Renu Astaka Kata Madhucchandas

Utkila

Aghamarsana Jeta

II. Angiras → Rahugana → Gotama

Nodhas Vamadeva

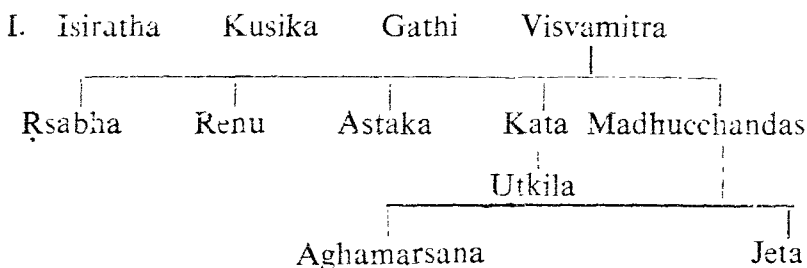
Bṛhaduktha Murdhanvan Amhomuk


*It has been sometimes suggested that the order of the Books Two to Seven is governed by the ascending number of hymns in these Books. The Second Book has the smallest and the Seventh has the greatest number of hymns. But this generalization fails to exist in the case of the Fourth and the Sixth Books, unless we rearrange the hymns in these Books as suggested by Bergaigne. Brough on the other hand points out that there is a striking symmetry of arrangement so far as the nucleus of the Rgveda is concerned. The Gṛtsamadas of Book II are the sole representatives of the Bhṛgus (भृगु). Books IV, VI and VIII represent the three well-known subdivisions of the Angirasas, namely the Gautamas (गौतम), the Bharadvajas and the Kevala Angirasas represented by the Kaṇvas (कण्व). On the other hand, Books III, V and VII belong to the non-Bhṛgu Angiras gotras. (V. G. Rahurkar)

III. The *pravaras of the Gotama family are given in the Asvalayana Srauta Sutras :

Family		Pravaras
Gotama	गोतम	Angiras, Ayasya, Gotama
Ucathya	उचथ्य	Angiras, Ucathya, Gotama
Rahugana	राहुगण	Angiras, Rahugana, Gotama
Somaraja	सोमराज	Angiras, Somaraja, Gotama
Vamadeva	वामदेव	Angiras, Vamadeva, Gotama
Bṛhaduktha	बृहदुक्थ	Angiras, Bṛhaduktha, Gotama

IV. The various Sutrakaras have given the pravaras of Atris (अत्रि) as follows:

Sutrakara	Pravaras of Atris
Baudhayana	Atreya, Arcananas, Syavasva
(बौधायन)	Atreya, Arcananas, Vadbhutaka
	Atreya, Arcananas, Gavisthira
Katyayana and	Atreya, Arcananas, Syavasva
Laugaksi	Atreya, Gavisthira, Paurvatithi
(कात्यायन,लौगाक्षि)	Atreya, Vamarathya, Pautrika
Apastamba	Atreya, Arcananasa, Syavasva
(आपस्तम्ब)	Atreya, Arcananas, Gavisthira
	Atreya, Arcananas, Atitha

The theory of pravara (प्रवर) is closely interwoven with that of gotra (गोत्र), the concept of pravara (literally "choice in vocation", entered into several domestic ceremonies like marriage, mekhalabandhana, in the Sacred Thread ceremony, and in the Caulakarma. The word pravara denotes one or more illustrious ancestors of the sacrificer,—the family ancestor of repute, or prominent mantrakṛta (मन्त्रकृत), seer.

At the time of a ceremony, hotṛ (होतृ, one of the priests) enumerates the names from the ancestor down to the descendent, whilst adhvaryu (अध्वर्यु, another priest) recites them in the reverse order, i e. from descendent going backwards to the ancestor. This is known as pravaro-ccara (प्रवरोच्चार).

Asvalayana (आश्वलायन)	Atreya, Arcananas, Syavasva
	Atreya, Arcananas, Gavisthira
	Atreya, Arcananas, Paurvatitha

(आत्रेय. अर्चनानस् आर्चनानस्, श्यावाश्व, वाभूतक, गविष्ठिर, पौर्वातिथि, वामरथ्य. पौत्रिक, आतिथ).

More than fifty Atris (seers belonging to the family of Atri अत्रि, i.e. आत्रेयाः) have been mentioned in the Ṛgveda:

Budha, Gavisthira, Kumara (or vṛsa), Vasusruta, Isa, Gaya, Sutambhara, Dharuna, Puru, Dvita Mṛktavahasa, Vavri, Prayasvat, Sasa, Visvasaman, Dyumna, Bandhu, (Sabandhu, Srutabandhu or Viprabandhu), Visvavara, Gauriviti, Babhru, Avasyu, Gatu, Samvarana, Prabhuvasu, Atri, Avatsara (Sadapṛna or Sutambhara etc.), Sadapṛna, Pratiksatra, Pratiratha, Pratiprabha, Svasti, Syavasva, Srutavid, Arcananas, Ratahavya, Yajata, Urucakri, Bahuvṛkta, Paura, Avasyu, Saptavadhri, Satyasravas, Atri Bhauma, Evayamarut, Apata, Gopavana, Trita, Andhigu, Visvakarman, and Bhuvana (and Sadhana).

V. The genealogy of the Bharadvajas (भरद्वाज), as provided by Sarvanukramani is something like this :

Angiras* (अङ्गिरस्)

VIII. Satarcins of the First Book—None of the ṛsis of the Vedic Texts is the composer of the poem; he is either the interpreter or (Seer) or the samhitikaraka, i.e. the one who assisted in the collection, the arrangements, and the compilation of the revealed hymns. Rahurkar in this connection observes, "Books I to X are generally believed to constitute the latest strata of the Ṛgvedic composition. On a careful examination of the suktas in these Books, however, it would seem that the above statement applies to the process of Samhitikarana in respect to these suktas rather than to their actual composition. The ṛsis of the First Book are referred to as satarcinah. They are so referred to under the assumption that each of these ṛsis (or the whole miniature family group relating to that ṛsi) has contributed hundred ṛks to the Ṛgveda Samhita." In this respect, Rahurkar gives an interesting table :

[मधुच्छन्दस्, मेधातिथि, शुन:शेप, हिरण्यस्तूप, कण्व, सव्य, नोधस्, पराशर, गोतम कुत्स, कक्षीवत् परुच्छेप, दीर्घतमस्, अगस्त्य]

Of course, as would be seen from this table, the concept of satarcinah will have to be modified; Gotama, Dirghatamas and Agastya are associated with more than 200 ṛks, whilst three of the ṛsis (Hiranyastupa, Savya and Nodhas) are associated with near about 73 Mantras only.

IX. The genealogy of the Kasyapa (कश्यप) family as given in the Sarvanukramani is as follows:

Marici
Kasyapa
Avatsara — Two daughters known as Sikhandinyau
[मरीचि, कश्यप, अवत्सार, शिखण्डिन्यौ]

X. The genealogy of Agastya, according to the Sarvanukramani is as follows:

Mitravarunau (मित्रावरुणौ)
Agastya (m. Lopamudra) — Vasistha
Dṛlhacyuta
Idhhmavaha
[अगस्त्य, लोपामुद्रा दृळ्हच्युत, वसिष्ठ]

XI. Seers of the Pavamana Book—The hymns of the Ninth Book are addressed to a single deity, the Pavamana Soma; the other Books have also hymns devoted to Soma. Many of the seers associated with the hymns of the Ninth Book figure in other Books too: e.g. Madhucchandas (IX.1), Medhatithi (IX.2, 4). Sunahsepa (IX.3); Hiranyas-tupa (IX.69), Asita and Devala (IX 5-7, 8-24), Dṛlhacyuta (IX.25), Idhmavaha (IX.26), Rahugana Gotama (IX.107), Syavasva (IX.32), Trita (IX.102), Rahugana (IX.37-38), Medhyatithi (IX. 41-43), Nidhruvi (IX. 63), Kasyapa (IX.64,67,4-6,91,92,113-114), Vatsapri Bhalandan (IX.68), Renu (IX.70), Kaksivan (I. 116-125; 126, 1-5; IX.74), Vasu (IX. 80-82), Vena, (IX.85), Atri Bhauma (IX.67.10-12;IX. 86.41-45;X.137.7), Gṛtsamada (IX.86.46-48), Vasistha (IX. 90), Nodhas (IX. 93), Kanva (IX. 94), Praskanva (IX. 95) Pratardana Daivodasi (IX.96), Vasistha (IX.97.1-3). Pramati (IX. 97.4-6), Vṛsagana (IX .97.7-9), Manyu (IX. 97.10-12), Upamanyu (IX. 97.25-27), Vasukra (IX. 97.28-30), Parasara Saktya (IX. 97.31-44), Kutsa (IX. 97.45-48), Ambarisa (IX. 98), Ṛjisvan (IX. 98), Rebhasunu (IX. 99-100), Visvamitra (IX. 101.13-16), Parvata and Narada (IX. 104-105), Gauri-viti (IX.108.1-2), Sakti (IX.108.14-16), Ṛnancaya (IX.108. 12-13) and Tryaruna and Trasdasyu (IX.110).

The following are the seers who are in no way associated with the Books I to VIII but almost exclusively belong to Book IX:

Nṛmedha, Priyamedha, Bindu, Prabhuvasu, Bṛhan-mati, Ayasya, Kavi, Ucathya, Avatsara, Amahiyu, Jamadagni, Bhṛgu[1], Vaikhanasah. The Seven Seers

1. The Sarvanukramani mentions the following thirteen members of the family of the Bhṛgu as seers of the Ṛgvedic mantras: Ita (X.171), Usnas (IX.87-89), Kavi (IX.47), Kṛtnu (VIII.79), Cyavana (X.19), Jamadagni (III.62.16-18; VIII.101; IX.62,65,67), Tanva (IX.93), Nema (X. 89), Pṛayoga (VIII.102); Pṛthu (X.148), Rama (X.110), Somahuti (II. 4), Syumarasmi (X.77).

(Saptarsi)[1] Vatsapri Bhalandana, Ṛsabha Vaisvamitra, Harimanta Angirasa, Pavitra, Vasu Bharadvaja, Prajapati Vacya (or Vaisvamitra); the three ṛsi groups (each with peculiar double names IX.86): Akṛstah Masah, Sikitah Nivavari, pṛsniyah Ajah; Usanas, Andhigu, Yayati[2], Nahusa, Manu Samvarana, Trita Aptya, Dvita Aptya, Agni, Caksus and Manu[3], Uru (IX.108.4-5) (perhaps an angirasa), Ṛjisvan (IX.108.6-7), Urdhvasadman Angirasa, Krtayasas (an angirasa, IX.108.10-11), Ṛanancaya (IX.108.12-13), Agni Dhisnyas (sons of Isvara, IX.109), Tryaruna and Trasadasyu (IX.110)[4], Ananata (IX.111) and *Sisu (IX.112).

The ṛsis of the Ninth Book have been classified as (i) Agastyas, (ii) Angirasas, (iii) Atreyas, (iv) Kasyapas, (v) Kanvas, (vi) Bharadvajas, (vii) Bhargavas, (viii) Vasisthas, (ix) Vaisvamitras and (x) Others unclassified.

XII. The Seers of the Tenth Book—Out of the total 151 Seers of this Mandala, 78 belong to the category of Ksudra-suktas, and 73 to the category of Mahasuktas:—this Book has been so often called as the residual Mandala, after having classified the Ṛks into definite groups during the process of the samhitakarana. In many cases the samhitakaras were not known at all, their names have been missing: where it was lost,—either wholly or partially—the samhitakaras have tried to recreate it as if. Rahurkar, in

---

1. The Seven Seers are Bharadvaja, Kasyapa, Gotama, Atri, Visvamitra, Jamadagni, Vasistha, (IX.67, also IX. 107, and X.137); their families are thus indicated:

(i) Bharadvajo Barhaspatyah
(ii) Kasyapo Maricah
(iii) Gotamo Rahuganah
(iv) Bhaumo' trih
(v) Vishvamitro Gathinah
(vi) Jamadagnir Bhargavah
(vii) Maitra-varunir Vasisthah

2. The Sarvanukramani gives the genealogy as follows:
Savarna, → Manu, → Nahusa, → Yahati.

3. Manu Apsava is the father, Caksus the son and Agni the grandson (IX.106).

4. Genealogy: Durgaha→Giriksit→Purukutsa (m. Purukutsani)→ Trasadasyu,→ Hiranin.

his studies on the seers of the Ṛgveda, has suggested four categories for the Tenth Book:

1. This category includes all seers in whose case both the personal name as well as the family-name are historically authentic.
2. A seer whose family-name is historical but whose personal name appears to be fictitious or conjectural.
3. A seer whose personal name appears to be authentic and historical, but whose family names are conjectural or invented.
4. Those cases where family names and personal names both appear to be conjectural.

The Tenth Book has the seers associated with the ksudra suktas (shorter hymns) and maha suktas (longer hymns). We do not know whether it is a mere coincidence that the number of hymns in the First Book is 191, and so is the number of hymns in the Tenth Book (191). To some of the scholars, it so appears that the samhitakaras deliberately made the hymns of the Tenth Book shorter or longer in this peculiar manner, because they wanted that the number of hymns in the First and the last Book to exactly coincide.

Some of the conjectured seers of the Tenth Book for obvious reasons are the following :

(i) Panis and arama (पणि-सरमा) (X. 108).—They figure in one of the most prominent Samvada Sukta. Sarama (सरमा) and Panis (पणय:) are said to be alternately the devata and ṛsi in this Sukt, which is evidently impossible. In all probability, the name of the original ṛsi or samhitakara was forgotten, and the participants in the dialogue were taken as the authors of such hymns. (In such cases, the injunction is यस्य वाक्यं स ऋषि: – Sarvanukramani).

(ii) Yama and yami (यम-यमी).—They are regarded as the son and daughter of Vivasvan(विवस्वान्) and are mentioned as the ṛsis as well as the devatas of the hymn X. 10. Yama-Yami Sukta is also one of the earliest dialogues of our literature. Keith says that their names denote twin brother and sister, and they are the first human pair, but according to Müller they are night and day.

(iii) Indra, indrani and vrsakapi इन्द्र, इन्द्राणी, वृषाकपि— The original tradition regarding the seers of Sukta X. 86 appears to have been lost or suppressed, and therefore, following the dictum, yasya vakyam sa rsih. Indra, Indrani, and Vrsakapi have been mentioned as seers.

(iv) Pururavas and urvasi (पुरूरवा-उर्वशी).—The Sukta X. 95 is a dialogue between Pururavas and Urvasi; and as such the Sukta has been attributed to them in absence of the name of a true seer (cf. yasya vakyam sa rsih). They are fictitiously known to be the seers.

(v) Surya (सूर्या).—This name, Surya, meaning the daughter of Surya or Savitr, is forcibly superimposed on the sukta X. 85, because the hymn relates to the marriage of Surya. Surya, in most probability, is any bride going to be wedded and is expected to lead a good family life.

(vi) Brhaspai (बृहस्पति).--He is said to be the seer of hymn X. 71. With Aditi, he is also mentioned as a seer of the hymn X. 72. This is obviously a fictitious tradition. The name of the original seer has been forgotten. This is a hymn, dealing with the "glorification of knowledge", and as such the Samhitakaras associated with it the name of Brhaspati, who is also known as kavinam kavih (कवीनां कविः, the seer of seers).

(vii) Visvakarma bhauvana (विश्वकर्मा भौवन).—Since Visvakarman is also the devata of the hymns X. 81, 82, Visvakarma Bhauvana could not be the seer of these hymns. The Nirukta says: Visvakarman sacrificed all beings in a sarvamedha sacrifice and finally sacrificed himself. This rk appears to be in his honour. In fact, Visvakarman Bhauvana is omnipresent God (X. 81 3); the verses X. 81. 2, 4) are expressive of the philosophical thoughts regarding the origin of the world.

(viii) Vasukra (aindra) वसुक्र (ऐन्द्र).— He is said to be the seer of hymns X. 27-29. This seer is regarded as the son of Indra,—obviously a fictitious concept. Sayana's commentary of X. 27. 2 says "वासुक्रेषु सूक्तेषु बाहुल्येन इन्द्रः स्तूयते।". The Aitareya Aranyaka (1. 2. 2), however, emphatically asserts that this hymn belongs to Vasukra. The word kapila occurs in X. 27. 16. Some of the scholars have suggested that divine birth of the ancient ṛsis is implied in X. 27. 15 when sapta refers to the Saptarsis, asta refers to the Valakhilyas (वालखिल्याः), nava to the Bhṛgus, and dasa to the Angirasas. Again traditionally the seer of the verse X. 28.1, has been ascribed to be the wife of Vasukra; there she complains that all the other gods have come to attend her sacrifice, Indra, her father-in-law, has not come*. Obviously, Vasukra is a fictitious name.

(ix) Vimada (विमद).—Vimada, another son of Indra, is a similar fictitious seer of the hymns X. 20-26; here Vasukṛta, the son of Vasukra is also mentioned as being the alternative seer of these Suktas. There might have existed a seer of the name Vimada, but his genealogical connection with Indra is obviously conjectural.

This description does not mean that all the seers, ascribed to the Tenth Book, are fictitious. Some of the authentic names appear to be, as follows : (Category I with names and families both authentic):

Trita Aptya, Sindhu-dvipa Ambarisa, Kavasa Ailusa, Lusa Dhanaka, Ghosa Kaksivati, Suhastya Ghauseya, Kṛsna Angirasa, Vatsapri Bhalandana, Saptagu Angirasa, Bṛhaduktha Vamadevya, Asamati Aiksvaka (X. 60, 1-4,6), Gaupayanas (Bandhu, Subandhu, Srutabandhu and Viprabandhu), Nabhanedistha Manava, Gaya Plata; Vasukarna, Vasukra, Ayasya Angirasa. Sumitra Vadhryasva, Bṛhaspati Angirasa, Gauriviti Saktya, Sindhuksit Praiyamedha, Jaratkarna Airavata (Sarpa) Syumarasmi Bhargava, Payu Bharadvàja, Murdhanvan Angirasa, Renu Vaisvamitra Aruna Vaitahavya, Saryat Manava, Tanva Prarthya, Arbuda Kadraveya (Sarpa), Baru Angirasa, Bhisag Atharvana, Devapi Arstisena, Vamru Vaikhanas, Duvasyu Vandana, Budha Saumya, Astaka Vaisvamitra, Sumitra, (Durmitra) Kautsa, Divya Angirasa Jamadagni Bhargava, (or Rama Jamadagnya), Astadanstra Vairupa, Nabhah Prabhedana Vairupa, Sadhri Vairupa, Upastuta Varstihavya, Bhiksu Angirasa (X.117), Uruksaya Amahiyava, Bṛhaddiva Atharvana, Citramahas Vasistha, Vena Bhargava, Kulmalbarhisa Sailusi (or Amhomuk Vamadevya), Kusika Saubhari (or Ratri Bharadvaja), Vihavya Angirasa, Sukirti Kaksivata, Sakaputa Narmedha, Sudas Paijavana, Mandhata Yauvanasva (or Ṛsika Godha), Saptarsayah (Bharadvaja, Kasyapa, Gotama, Atri, Visvamitra, Jamadagni and Vasistha), Anga Aurava, Jarita, Drona, Sarisṛkta and Stambamitra (X. 142, all are Sarngas), Atri Samkhya, Devamuni Airammada, Suvedas Sairisih, Pṛthu Vainya, Arcana Hairanyastupa, Mṛlika Vasistha (X. 150), Sasa Bharadvaja (X. 152), Sirimitha Bharadvaja, Purana Vaisvamitra, Pracetas Angiras, Visvamitra and Jamadagni (X. 167), Sabara Kaksivata, Samvarta Angirasa, (X. 172), Urdhvagrava Arbudi (Sarpa) (X. 175), Sibi Ausinara Pratardana Kasiraja, Vasumanas Rauhidasva (X. 179), Satyadhṛti Varuni (X. 185), Aghmarsana Madhucchandasa.

The last hymn of the Tenth Book (X.191) is known as the samjnana sukta (संज्ञान सूक्त), with Samvanana Angirasa (संवनन आंगिरस) as the ṛsi, who is an Angirasa (a ṛsi, belonging to the Angiras family). It must be said that the Samhitakaras have shown great propriety in concluding the Ṛgveda Samhita with this hymn which invokes the greatest social ideal of harmony, integrity and unity.

Sraddha Kamayani (श्रद्धा कामायनी) is the lady seer of the hymn X.151, of which the devata is also Sraddha, one of the noblest Suktas on Sraddha, the adoption of truth with all fidelity.

Ṛsikas or the lady-seers of the Ṛgveda—In the interpretation and Samhitikarana, not only male seers but ladies also took an important part. During the Vedic Period, our ladies were not denied the highest privilege of being the seer (ṛsikas) of the Vedic verses, expounders and the Samhitakaras of the Vedic Texts. Most of these female-seers figure in the Book X.

(i) Lopamudra (लोपामुद्रा).—In the First Book, the first lady-seer figuring is Lopamudra (I.179. 1-2) for the first two verses of the hymn, whilst the rest four are associated with Maitravaruni Agastya or Agastya's disciple, Brahmacari and Rati. The word Lopamudra occurs in the mantra of the same hymn (X.179.4). Dayananda explains the word lopamudra as "one completely absorbed or lost in oneself", i.e. a lady actively participating in union with her lover. M. Bergaigne is of opinion that the hymn has a mystical meaning, Agastya being identifiable with the celestial Soma, whom Lopamudra, representing fervent prayer, succeeds after long labour in drawing down from his secret dwelling place. (La Religion Vedique, ii, 394f).

(ii) Romasa (रोमशा).—She is the Brahmavadini Ṛsika of I.126.7. The word Ṛomasa occurs in this mantra. Romasa is said to be the wife of Svanaya (स्वनय) who is the seer of the preceding mantra I.126.6.

(iii) Visvavara (विश्ववारा).—She is the female seer of the entire hymn V.28; and belongs to Atri family. The hymn which is associated with her name is devoted to the subject of marital happyness and security of life. The word Visvavara occurs in the very first stanza, and the word has been translated by Dayananda as the lady who chooses or selects the whole universe and refers to cosmic light.

(iv) Angirasi sasvati (आङ्गिरसी शश्वती).—She is the ṛsika of VIII.1.34, (one verse only) and this word Sasvati occurs in this mantra. She belongs to the Angirasa family. The legend associated with a king Asanga was that he lost his manhood, became effeminate, and by the intercession of Medhatithi and Medhyatithi, he again became virile; Sasvati congratulates on his restoration. She may not be the historical seer of this mantra, but since words have been put into her mouth, she has been called a ṛsika of this mantra.

(v) Apala (अपाला).—She is the female-seer of the entire hymn VIII.91, and like Visvavara, she also belongs to the family of the Atri. A very interesting legend about her is narrated by Sayana in the preface to that hymn. Apala, it is said, was afflicted with a cutaneous disease and was consequently repudiated by her husband. According to the legend (perhaps taken from the Satyayana Brahmana), Indra dragged her through the wide hole of his chariot, the narrower hole of the cart, and the small hole of the yoke and she cast off three skins. The first skin became a hedge-hog, the second an alligator, the third chameleon. Wilson agrees with Prof. Aufrecht that the hole or span of the chariot and cart represents the opening between the four wheels; the hole of the yoke seems to him to mean the opening through which the animal's head passed.

(vi) Yami (यमी).—She figures as a ṛsika along with Yama in a dialogue hymn (X.10), and again in an entire hymn (X.154). She is known as Yami Vaivasvati, being the daughter of Vivasvan and Samjna (संज्ञा). She is a female counterpart of Yama, the procreator of human race also. The hymn (X.154) has the theme "New Life" bhava-vṛt-tam) therefore, it is appropriate that it should be attributed to Yami. Yama and Yami are also regarded as twin brother and sister. Yami may not be a historical seer–merely a conjectural name.

(vii) Sraddha (श्रद्धा).—Sraddha Kamayani (श्रद्धा कामायनी) is the ṛsika of X.151 (the entire hymn). This may be a merely allegorical name, and Kama may not be the gotra of this ṛsika.

(viii) Vasukra-patni (वसुक्रपत्नी).—She is the ṛsika of one verse (X.28.1). This hymn has the form of a dialogue between the father and the son. The verse is, as the legend says, spoken by Vasukra's wife, in ignorance, that her father-in-law, Indra (इन्द्र-स्नुषा) is present in disguise. Of course, the entire hymn is not so simple,—the mysticism behind the lines has to be explored.

(ix) Ghosa(घोषा).—Ghosa is the lady-seer of two hymns (X.39-40), and is said to be the daughter of Kak-sivan (कक्षीवान्). In the two hymns ascribed to her, we have a mention of a number of terms, round which legends were woven in latter literature: Cyavana, Taugrya, Vimada, Sundhyu, Vispala, Rebha, Atri, Saptavadhri, Pedu, Sayu, Bhṛgu, Kutsa, Bhujyu, Vasa, Sinjara, Kṛsa; many of these terms have occurred in Book I also. The word Ghosa also occurs in I.117.7 and Sayana commenting on this says, that she was the daughter of Kaksivan and was a Brahmavadini. As she was suffering from a disease she could not be given in marriage to any one, and so she stayed at her father's house where she became old. She was, however, cured of her disease by the favour of the Asvins and then she could be married (cf. X.39.3). The Bṛhaddevata gives her further details and says that Ghosa became sixty years old in her father's house. She knew that, by propitiating the Asvins, her father had obtained youth, long life, health etc. So she got an insight into these two hymns (X.39-40). The Asvins, in consequence, cured her of the disease and gave her a husband and a son, Suhastya (सुहस्त्य). In her hymn, so the legend says, she piteously prays the divine Asvins to heal her leprosy as they have healed many gods and men earlier (X.39.11). She is growing old at home (X.39.3), so let them grant her health, youthful beauty and help her to get a rich chieftain as husband (X.40.5). In the hymns ascribed to Ghosa, there is a verbal repetition of the phrases occurring in the hymns ascribed to Kaksivan and Kutsa. The parallelism is as follows:

X.39.1	=	I.118.3
X.39.4	=	I.117.13
X.39.8	=	I.112.8
X.39.9	=	I.116.3; I.112.7
X.39.12	=	I.117.2,15; I.118.1
X.39.13	=	I.112.8
X.39.14	=	I.120.6

Ghosa's genealogy with Angiras is as follows:

Angiras Ucathya (Ṛv.IX.50-52) Dirghatamas (Ṛv.I. 140–164) Kaksivan (Ṛv. I.116–125; IX.74) Ghosa (Ṛv. X. 30–40).

(x) Surya (सूर्या).—She is a conjectural seer of the hymn X.85, of which she is the sole ṛsika with 47 mantras. The hymn deals with the marriage of Surya (Surya's marriage 6–16); the hymn also contains the mantras which have a traditional significance for all general marriages with invocations and benedictions (20-28). The mantras 32–47 are still popular in Indian marriage ceremonies. The whole of the hymn has a living message for married couples.

Surya is supposed to be the daughter of Savitṛ.

(xi) Indrani (इन्द्राणी).—She is another fictitious lady-seer (not a historical one) of the hymn X.86, which is of a dialogue nature in which Indra, Indrani and Vṛsakapi have participated. The real Samhitakara of this hymn apears to have been lost or forgotten, and hence according to the tenet "yasya vakyam sa ṛsih", all the three have been, one by one, regarded as seers of the mantras spoken by them. The words Indra, Indrani and Vṛsakapi occur in several verses (e.g. X.86.11-13), Indrani or Saci Paulomi is also the lady-seer of X.159, since Saci is known to be the daughter of Puloma. The hymn X.145 is also known as Indrani-Upanisad.

(xii) Urvasi (उर्वशी).—She figures as one of the seers in the hymn X.95, which contains a dialogue between Pururavas and Urvasi. Here again, the ṛsi and ṛsika are conjectural, according to the tenet "yasya vakyam sa ṛsih".

(xiii) Sarama (सरमा)— The Sukta X.108 is a dialogue between Sarama and Panis, and according to the same tradition as above, in the absence of the name of an actual Samhitakara, Sarama and Panis have been conjecturally regarded as the seers. They are alternatively ṛsis and devatas both. Sarama, according to Aurobindo, represents some intellectual faculty (just as a similar word Sarasvati represents speech, learning and knowledge).

(xiv) Juhu (जुहू)— She is the seer of the hymn X. 109, and is known as Brahmajaya (ब्रह्मजाया, wife of Brahma) or a Brahmavadini. She is identified with vak. The legend says that her husband Brahma or Bṛhaspati had deserted her, but gods are said to have restored her to him. The sukta has been interpreted by Sayana in this light. In fact, it is one of the finest mystic suktas. In viniyogas, the word juhu stands for a ladle. The sukta consists of a symbolic description of the Brahman's function in respect to this mystic juhu. There is an alternative seer also mentioned of this sukta named as Urdhvanabha (ऊर्ध्वनाभा, which also means the wife of Urdhvanabha, or of Brahma).

(xv) Vak ambhṛni (वागाम्भृणी).— Vak is a female seer of hymn X.125, supposed to be the daughter of Ambhṛna (अम्भृण). The word vak means speech or sound in most general terms to which the sukta appears to refer—the thunder of the storm, the reawakening of life at dawn, songs of rejoice at the near birth of the world. The idea of the unity of the world is invoked. Either the name Vak as the ṛsika is conjectural, or the lady-seer got her name also after the sukta on which she had worked as an interpreter or as a Samhitakaraka.

(xvi) Paulomi saci (पौलोमी शची).— She is the lady-seer of the hymn X.159, where Saci is known to be the daughter of Puloma. It is difficult to say whether Indrani, the ṛsika of X.86 and X.145 is the same person as Saci of X.159. Saci and Indrani may be the conjectural names associated with the names of Indra, figuring so highly in the Vedic literature. According to Wilson, saci means an 'act'; the hymn X.159 is metaphorically the praise of Indra's acts. Saci, however, prides on her being a destroyer of the rival wife, sole spouse, and a victorious conquerer. Ritualistically this hymn is also known to be sapatni-badhana (सपत्नी-बाधन; destroyer of the rival wife).

VEDIC METRES

Numbers of Syllables in Standard Metres

In counting the number of syllables in a metre, only the number of vowels (svara) is counted, not of the consonants without the vowels; the svaras normally are a, ā, i, ī, u, ū, ṛ, ṝ, lṛ, e, ai, o, au, visarga (:) and anusvara (ṁ). Sometimes the euphonic changes on account of sandhis are resolved, and then the total number of syllables, as required, may be reconciled. We shall not take up here such complicated details of exceptions.

The metres arranged in an increasing series of 4, starting from 24, are as follows :

Name of the metre	Total No. of syllables	Name of the metre	Total No. of syllables
Gayatri गायत्री	24	Sakvari शक्वरी	56
Usnik उष्णिक्	28	Atisakvari अतिशक्वरी	60
Anustup अनुष्टुप्	32	Asti अष्टि	64
Bṛhati बृहती	36	Atyasti अत्यष्टि	68
Pankti पंक्ति	40	Dhṛti धृति	72
Tristubh त्रिष्टुभ्	44	Atidhṛti अतिधृति	76
Jagati जगती	48
Atijagati अतिजगती	52

Besides these fourteen types of metres, we have another group of seven further in the series :

Kṛti (80), prakṛti (84), akṛti (88), vikṛti (92), sankṛti (96), abhikṛti (100), and utkṛti (104); (not available in the Ṛgveda, but in other Samhitas as the Vajasaneyi Samhita, Taittiriya Aranyaka, and Taittiriya Brahmana).

Nicṛt, Bhurik, Virat and Svarat

The three Gayatra Padas go to constitute the Gayatri metre, with 8+8+8=24 syllables. If the total number of syllables is less by 1, then the metre is known as nicṛt gayatri (total 23 syllables); if exceeds by one, then it is known as bhurik gayatri (25 syllables). Again if the total number of syllables is less by 2, then it is virat (22 syllables in all); and finally if the total exceeds by 2, then it is known as svarat (26 syllables) in all. The well-known Gayatri Mantra, tat-savitur varenyam, is nicṛt gayatri, since the total number of syllables in it is only 23 (7+8+8), and not 24.

This type of decrease or increase by one or two in syllables is permissible in metres other than Gayatri also, and in that case, the metres would be known as nicṛt (x-1); bhurik (x+1); virat (x—2) and svarat (x+1), when x is the total number of syllables in the standard metres as given in the previous table.

Gayatri— The standerd gayatrı has 24 syllables in the order 8+8+8 in the three Padas. Several variations are shown here in the table. (गायत्री, पदपंक्ति, उष्णिगर्भा, पादनिचृत् अतिनिचृत्, यवमध्या, वर्धमाना, प्रतिष्ठा, ह्रसीयसी, विपरीतह्रसीयसी)

§ अश्व्यानां = अश्वियानां; कृत्व्यानां = कृत्वियानाम्

Usnik—The standard usnik has 7+7+7+7=28 syllables in four feet. The popular eight variations of the metre are given here. (There is another usnik of 8+8+12=28 syllables of gayatra and jagata Padas.) [उष्णिक्, पुर उष्णिक्, ककुप्, ककुब्न्यंकुशिरा, तनुशिरा, पिपीलिकमध्या, अनुष्टुब्-गर्भा].

Bṛhati— The standard bṛhati of the four padas has 9+9+9+9=36 syllables. About 9 prominent variations of this metre have been specially described in the Sarvanu-kramani and other books on the Vedic Prosody. (बृहती, पुरस्ताद् बृहती, न्यंकुसारिणी, उरोबृहती, स्कन्धोग्रीवी, उपरिष्टाद् बृहती, विष्टार बृहती, ऊर्ध्वबृहती, पिपीलिकमध्या, विषमपदा)

Pragathas

Pragathas (प्रगाथाः) are combinations of the above metres. For example : (बार्हत प्रगाथ, काकुभ प्रगाथ, महाबार्हत प्रगाथ, विपरीतोत्तर प्रगाथ, आनुष्टुभ प्रगाथ).

(i) Barhata-pragatha=bṛhati+satobṛhati= 36+40 =76, which can be scanned as [(8+8+12+8)+(12+8 +12+8)] as in 1.47.1-2 (combined) (Ayam va+Tribandhurena).

(ii) Kakubha-pragatha= kakup+ satobrhati=28+ 40+68 which is scanned as [(8+12+8)+(12+8+12+8)], as in VI.48.11-12 (combined) (Asakhayah+yasardhaya).

Long Metres

We shall now conclude this account with a brief outline of long metres, starting with 52 syllables (beyond the Jagati).

(i) Atijagati (52)=12+12+12+8+8, as in V.87.1 (Pra vo mahe).

(ii) Sakvari (56)=8+8+8+8+8+8+8, as in X.133.1 (Pro svasmai).

(iii) Atisakvari (60)=16+16+12+8+8, as in II.22.3 (Sakam jatah).

(iv) Asti (64)=16+16+16+8+8, as in II.22.1 (Trikadrukesu).

(v) Atyasti (68)=12+12+8+8+8+12—8, as in I.127.1 (Agnim hotaram).

(vi) Dhṛti (72)=12+12+8+8+8+16—8, as in I.133.6 (Avarmaha).

(vii) Atidhṛti (76)=12+12+8+8+8+12+8+8, as in I.127.6 (Sa hi sardho)

THE VEDIC METRES AND THE FOUR PRINCIPAL PADAS

The Vedic metres are not so complicated as they appear to be at the first sight;— they can be easily reduced to their primary elements. Counting the syllables in the most mechanical manner, the auhtors of the Pratisakhyas, in their highly complicated and elaborate system have assigned a nearly hundred names to every variety which they discovered in the Ṛgvedic hymns. But I would not like my readers to go to that length. In fact, as even the Pratisakhya authorities could see, all these metres are really but four (Sutras 988; 919) :

(a) The Gayatra pada, of eight syllables ending in (⏑–. repesents hrasva;—represents dirgha).
(b) The Vairaja pada, of ten syllables ending in – ⏑.
(c) The Traistubha pada, of eleven syllables ending in – –.
(d) The Jagata pada, of twelve syllables ending in ⏑–.

Then the next Sutra (990) says: The penultimate syllable in a Gayatra and Jagata pada is light (laghu,⏑), in Vairaja and Traistubha pada heavy (guru,–). This is called their vṛtta (metre, versus in Latin). Again remember, how careful is the author of the Pratisakhya in his language. He does not say that the penultimate is long or short (dirgha or hrasva), but he simply states that from a metrical point of view, it must be considered as light or heavy (laghu or guru), which need not mean more than that it must be pronounced with or without stress. The authors thus differentiate between the pairs dirgha – hrasva (long or short) and guru – laghu (heavy or light). From the metrical point of view only, that the penultimate syllables (even if they are not long or short), they should be pronounced as heavy or light.

It has been generally supposed, that according to the Pratisakhya, there must be a long syllable (–) in the eighth or tenth place of Traistubha and Jagata, and in the sixth place of Anustubha padas. Of cource, there is no rigidity about these working rules, and we shall not enter into these details here. (For a detailed discussion, see Max müller : Vedic Hymns, Pt. I, SBE. series, Preface LXXXIX.). Pratisakhya (Sutra 523) states, that "The final vowel of the eighth syllable is lengthened in padas of eleven and twelve syllables, provided a syllable follows which is short in the Samhita." (I.32.4; I.94.1). Pratisakhya (Sutra 525) provides : "The final vowel of the tenth syllable in padas of eleven and twelve syllables is lengthened, provided a syllable follows which is short in the Sam hita" (III. 54.22; II.34.9) and similarly "The final vowel of the sixth syllable is lengthened in a pada of eight syllables, provided a syllable follows which is short". (I.5.10); and if the seventh syllable is long, no change takes place. (IX.67.30).

Then another case is also to be taken for which there is a provision in Pratisakhya, Sutra 527: "In order to get the right number of syllables (in certain cases), we must pronounce sometimes one syllable as two". In these cases only with such a provision, the lengthened syllable be got into one of the places required by the preceding Sutra (526), viz., the sixth, the eigth or the tenth place. I have quoted these rules as a caution to an ordinary reader.

Counting of the number of syllables—It must be remembered that each syllable has to end in a vowel, and thus the number of vowels decides the number of syllables (it is immaterial whether the vowel is long or short, heavy or light). We have already mentioned about the four padas, the Gayatra (of eight syllables); Vairaja (of 10 syllables); the Traistubha (of eleven syllables) and the Jagata (of twelve syllables) and to these four, we may add another one, the half-Vairaja (of five syllables). We can reduce nearly all the hymns of the Ṛgveda to these simple elements, thus :

1. Three Gayatra padas=the Gayatri (24 syllables).
2. Four Gayatra padas=the Anustubh (32 syllables).
3. Four Vairaja padas=the Viraj (40 syllables).
4. Four Traistubha padas=the Tristubha (44 syllables).
5. Four Jagata padas=the Jagati (48 syllables).
6. Mixtures of Gayatra and Jagata padas=the Usnik (28 syllables), (a metre between Gayatri and Anustubh).
7. Mixture of the Anustubh and Vairaja padas=the Bṛhati (36 syllables) (a metre between Anustubh and Pankti).

Now I would like to refer to the rules regarding the counting of syllables. It is obvious that the following verse (III. 1) has (8+8+8)=24 syllables of the Gayatri metre (each syllable ends in a vowel).

Ag—ni—mi—le—pu—ro—hi—tam =8
Ya—jna—sya—de—va—mṛ—tvi—jam =8
Ho—ta—ram—ra—tna—dha—ta—mam =8

This is the samhita patha of the verse (the counting is done for the samhita patha only) and not the pada patha in which all words (pada) stand by themselves (as they do in Greek and Latin) without being joined together according to the rules of Sandhi. The text in which the words stand as joined by the rules of Sanskrit Sandhi is called the Samhita-patha. It is difficult to say whether the Pada-patha precedes the Samhita-patha or vice-versa. The Pratisakhyas start on the assumption that the Pada-patha is basic and it is taken, as it were, for granted, and devote their rules to the explanation of those changes which that text undergoes, in being changed into the Samhita text. This may not be true always; very often, the Samhita text appears to have been taken as basic by the authors of the Pratisakhyas also. (It is almost certain that neither the Pada nor the Samhita text, as we now possess them, represents the original text of the Veda. Both show clear traces of Scholiastic influence.)

But one thing is very much clear. Even in the present form, the original metre and rhythm of the hymns of the Veda are far more perceptible when the words are divided, than when we join them together throughout according to the rules of Sandhi. For practical purposes, the Pada text is far superior to the Samhita text in which the final and initial letters, that is, the most important letters of words are constantly disguised, and liable, therefore, to different interpretations. (Dayananda in his commentary, for this reason always insists on the Pada-patha).

For counting the number of syllables in a metre, Sandhis at some places have to be removed, and then the text would respond to the rules of prosody It must again be accepted that the Sandhi rules in the Samhita of the Ṛgveda, are by no means so uniform, rigid and regular as they are in later Sanskrit, and hence it is so often extremely difficult to bring all the exceptional cases under more or less general rules. There are numerous cases, cited by the Pratisakhyas where an initial a in the Veda is not elided after a final e or o; in ordinary Sanskrit, it will always be elided; in the Samhita it is sometimes elided and sometimes not. (See Sutra 138 and 153, and also 139, of the Pratisakhya; the author gives the rules of exception as if he is a statistician and not a grammarian.)

I would like to conclude this discussion, which may not interest my general reader, by quoting a passage from Max Müller (Vedic Hymns, SBE, Pt. I.,p.lxxviii) :

"It is far easier, as I remarked before, to discover the original and natural rhythm of the Vedic hymns by reading them in the Pada than in the Samhita text, and after some practice our ear becomes sufficiently schooled to tell us at once how each line ought to be pronounced. We find, on the one hand, that the rules of Sandhi, instead of being generally binding, were treated by the Vedic poets as poetical licences only; and on the other, that a greater freedom of pronunciation was allowed even in the body of words than would be tolerated in the later Sanskrit. If a syllable was wanted to complete the metre, a semi-vowel might be pronounced as a vowel, many a long vowel might be protracted so as to count for two syllables, and short vowels might be inserted between certain consonants, of which no trace exists in the ordinary Sanskrit. If, on the contrary, there were too many syllables, then the rules of Sandhi were observed, or too short syllables contracted by rapid pronunciation into one : nay in a few cases, a final m or s, it seems, was omitted".

VEDIC ACCENTS

In order to have a full conception of the inner meaning of the Vedic prose, poetry and lyric (the Yajuh, the Ṛk, and the Saman), one should be familiar not only with the grammar of the language, and the etymology of words, he should also be conversant with proper accentuations. The old interpreters of the Vedic verses have laid great emphasis on proper accentuations. Being the earliest divine human speech, the words of the Vedic language are in their most fluid and plasmatic state. A slight change of accents brings about very often a considerable change in the meaning of the word. And therefore, our ancestors, not only made heroic attempts to preserve the Vedic texts to this day by reciting and memorizing, they did their best to retain the accents also. Panini, the great grammarian and the author of the Astadhyayi devotes a number of aphorisms in the first, third, sixth and eighth chapters, and Dayananda edited a collection of these Sutras, and published it under the title of the Sauvara with notes and explanations. The Ṛk Pratisakhya (प्रातिशाख्य), and similar other treatises also deal with this subject. We shall try to reproduce here just a few indications on this abstruse subject to familiarize a common general reader with a brief outline.

It must be remembered that the readings of the Vedic texts are of two types: pada-patha (पद पाठ), with each word (pada) or term spoken clearly and distinctly, and when these padas are compounded together according to the rules of euphony or sandhi, we get the samhita patha (संहिता पाठ); in fact, sandhi is the euphonic junction of final and initial letters in grammar, every sentence in Sanskrit being regarded as a euphonic chain, a break in which occurs at the end of a sentence.

Four types of accents—It must be remembered that only vowels (a, ā, i, ī, u, ū, ṛ, lṛ, e, ai, o, au, etc.) are accented, and not the consonants. The vowels may be present as such, or along with consonants. For example, in the last letter 'म्' is un-accented because it is a consonant without a vowel.

The accents are of four types:

Udatta (उदात्त), Anudatta (अनुदात्त), Svarita (स्वरित), and Ekasruti (एकश्रुति).

(i) Udatta—The acute accent, also known as high accent or a sharp tone is known as udatta (उदात्त). In the system of the Ṛk, the Yajuh and the Atharva, there is no sign or symbol to indicate an udatta; (as in अग्निम्, there is no indication on 'ग्नि', which is udatta), in the Samaveda udatta is represented by the nagari numeral one (१).

अग्न आ याहि (Sv. 1. 1. 1).

Udatta is not normally indicated by any accent mark, but it can be recognized by two rules: (i) that syllable has udatta accent, which has no mark on it, and preceding it, there is no accent, (ii) that is also udatta which has an anudatta in precedence.

Example: अग्ने यं यज्ञमध्वरम् (Ṛv. I. 1. 4).

In this, according to the rule (i), अ is udatta, and according to rule (ii), यं, ज्ञ and र are also udatta.

(ii) Anudatta.—The anudatta is the accent-less vowel; it is also known as low or grave accent, not raised; it is a general tone, neither high nor low. It is represented in the Ṛk, the Yajus and the Atharva Samhita by a horizontal stroke below the syllable, as in अग्नि, अ is anudatta. In the Samaveda, it is indicated by a nagari numeral 'three' (३) written at the top of the syllable.

(iii) Svarita.— The svarita accent is a kind of mixed tone, produced by a combination of high (the udatta) and low (anudatta) tones, and therefore, named by Panini in the (Astadhyayi, I. 2.31) as samahara (समाहार). Svarita corresponds to the Greek circumflex and is of four kinds:

(i) Ksaipra (क्षैप्र), as in व्याप्त for वि+आप्त; (ii) jatya (जात्य), as in क्वं, (iii) praslista (प्रश्लिष्ट), as in दिवींव for दिवि+इव, and (iv) abhinihita (अभिनिहित), as in तें ऽब्रुवन् for तें अब्रुवन्.*

The svarita in the Ṛgveda is marked by a small upright stroke above a syallable, as in अग्निमींळे, मीं is svarita.

The svarita in the Samaveda is indicated by the nagari numeral 'two' (2) written on the top of the syllable.

(iv) Ekasruti.—The ekasruti (एकश्रुति) or monotony or the hearing only of one sound is the fourth type of accent; this may be called as pracaya (प्रचय) also. In eksruti, the separate functions of the udatta, anudatta and svarita become indistinct, and hence they become monotonous. Usually syllables which follow a svarita and are not indicated by any stroke, are known as eka-sruti; e.g. in

तां is a svarita, indicated by the vertical stroke, and the syllables which follow it रं and र which have no accent mark on them; and thus रं and र are known to be with ekasruti accent. Again in the same, the syllable तं is svarita and it is followed by मं with no accent mark on it, and hence it is also ekasruti in accent.

The ekasruti accent should be pronounced more or less like an anudatta since ekasruti follows a svarita which was originally an anudatta, and which is followed by an anudatta.

For an example, let us take the verse :

विश्वानि देव सवितर्दुरितानि परा सुव ।
यद्भद्रं तन्न आसुव । (Ṛv. V. 82. 5; Yv. 30. 3)

The Pratisakhyas describe nine types of Svaritas: (i) Sannidhija (सन्निधिज), (ii) Jatya (जात्य,),(iii) Abhinihita, (अभिनिहित) (iv) Ksaipra (क्षैप्र) (v) Praslista, (प्रश्लिष्ट), (vi) Tairovyanjana (तैरोव्यञ्जन), (vii) Vaivṛtta or Padavṛtta (वैवृत्त, पादवृत्त), (viii) Tairovirama (तैरोविराम) and (ix) Tathabhavya (तथाभाव्य); but we shall not enter here into these details.

the syllables with a horizontal stroke below are रि, नि, भ and घ; they are anudatta; the syllables with a vertical stroke at the top are वा, रा and सु: they have the accent svarita; the syllables without any accent mark and following the svarita are नि, सु, व and व are ekasruti. The first syllable वि, and then ता, य, इ, त and आ are with udatta accents.

The following are the workable rules in connection with accentuation:

1. A term or pada (पद) would never have more than one udatta; this is possible that it may not have any udatta (but never more than one).

2. On the contrary, one and the same term can have more than one anudatta, or several svaritas.

3. All the anudattas will have to be invariably indicated by horizontal strokes below the syllable (letter containing the vowel).

4. But if a term has a number of svaritas occuring succeedingly together, then only the first syllable will be indicated by a vertical stroke on its top, and not the succeeding svaritas, which in a way, become ekasruti.

5. (a) First the udatta is fixed up, if the term has any udatta; then the rest are temporarily designated as anudattas (with a horizontal stroke, for example, in the word वरुण, if व is udatta, then रु and ण are anudattas; if रु is udatta, then व and ण are anudattas: and if ण is udatta, then व and रु are anudattas :

वरुण, वरुण, वरुण

(Here the syllable without an accent mark is udatta)

(b) Then all the anudattas following the udatta are raised to svarita but not the anudattas preceding the udatta as shown below as (of the two svaritas in sequence, the first is retained svarita, whilst the rest become ekasruti, वरुण becoming वरुण.

वरुण, वरुण वरुण

6. The term in which all the syllables are anudatta, is known as nighata (निघात unaccented) Nighata is usually a vocative (sambodhana) or a verb. For example, in the verse विश्वानि देव, the word, देव (deva) is vocative, and thus it would be nighata, with both the syllables as anudatta. Similarly the word सवितः is vocative and hence a nighata. The word सुव, occuring twice is verb, and hence it is also nighata.

विश्वानि । देव । सवितः । दुः ऽइतानि

In this, the udattas for convenience are indicated with a cross (x) below the syllable; now the first anudatta after the udatta becomes, svarita, and succeeding anudattas become ekasruti (unmarked).

विश्वानि । देव । सवितः । दुः ऽइतानि

7. The terms in grammar fall under four heads: नाम (noun), आख्यात (verb), उपसर्ग (prefix), and निपात or non-declinable. In most of the prefixes, the first syllable is udatta; अभि is an exception in which भि, the second syllable is udatta, and not अ, the first syllyble. So now we have,

विश्वानि । देव । सवितः । दुः ऽइतानि । परा । सुव

8. The first syllable of a pronoun is also udatta, as in यत् and तत्, the first syllable य and त are udattas.

9. ते, वां, वः, मे, नौ, नः, in such pronouns if the sense is of anvadesa (अन्वादेश), i.e. thine, mine, yours, ours, then the accent on the syllable would be anudatta, but if ते means they, then the syllable is udatta. And so now

यत् । भद्रं । तत् । नः । आ । सुव

So now the accents in the pada-patha, become :

विश्वानि । देव । सवितः । दुः ऽ इतानि । परा । सुव ।
यत् । भद्रं । तत् । नः । आ । सुव ॥

10. (a) The first syllable of a nipata (undeclinable) is udatta.

(b) The last syllable of nama (noun) is udatta (but if it is vocative case, then it is all anudatta, i.e. it is a nighata); and thus the last syllable of the noun भद्रं and दुःऽइत is udatta (द्रं and इत are udatta).

Not indicating the udattas by any notation (i.e. now if remove the crosses at the base), we have the final Padapatha,

विश्वानि। देव । सवितः । दुःऽइतानि। परा । सुव।
यद् । भद्रं । तत् । नः । आ । सुव ।

Various notations in giving accents—We shall confine to the notations used in the Yajurveda, the Ṛgveda and the Atharvaveda.

1. Udatta and ekasruti (or pracaya) are not indicated by any notations (these syllables are unaccented as if).

2. Anudatta is indicated by a horizontal stroke below the syllable, as क.

3. Svarita is indicated by a vertical stroke at the top of the syllable, as क (one or more syllables following the svarita, but without a notation are ekasruti). Since the ekasruti follows a svarita and the syllable following the svarita has the characteristic of an anudatta, the ekasruti ought to be pronounced more or less like an anudatta.

4. Such syllables as follow the svarita, and have no notations on them are ekasruti.

5. The svaritas are of nine classes, which we shall not discuss; of these, the four notable ones are (i) jatya (ii) ksaipra (iii) praslista and (iv) abhinihita.

(i) The jatya svarita is a svarita on its own merit, i.e. due to its own intrinsic characteristics; it is also known as the nitya-svarita; e.g. कन्या, धान्यम्, क्वं, स्वः.

(ii) The vowels इ, उ, ऋ, लृ when followed by any other vowel are transformed to य्, व्, र्, ल् respectively in sandhi; this type of euphony is known in the Pratisakhyas as ksaipra-sandhi: e. g.,

वाजी + अर्वन् = वाज्यर्वन्; नु + इन्द्र = न्विन्द्र

As a result of these sandhis, the udatta ई and उ have combined respectively with anudatta syllables, and the resulting य् and व् have become svarita. Such *svarita*s, as a result of sandhi, are known as the ksaipra-svarita.

(iii) A sandhi between the two vowels is known as praslista, e.g.,

(a) अ+अ=आ, इ+इ=ई etc.
(b) अ+इ=ए, अ+उ=ओ, अ+ए=ऐ, अ+ओ=औ

As a result of such a sandhi, different schools of the Samhitas ascribe different changes in the accents (they are not unanimous on this) :

सुचि+इव=सुचीव (Ṛv. X.91.15)

(In this the udatta इ of सुचि is combined with anudatta इ of इव, and as a result of this we get the dirgha ई of ची with a svarita accent. Such a svarita as a result of combination of an udatta and anudatta is known as praslista svarita.

अभि+इन्धताम्=अभीन्धताम्=अभीन्धताम् (Yv.XI.61)

But in the Taittiriya Samhita—

अभि+इन्धताम्=अभीन्धताम् (IV.1.6)

(iv) अ following ए or ओ becomes unmanifest or becomes purva-rupa;—such sandhis are known as abhinihita, and the svarita generated as a result of such a sandhi is known as abhinihita-svarita :

ते+अवन्तु=तेऽवन्तु=तेऽवन्तु (Yv. XIX.57)
वेदः+असि=वेदोऽसि=वेदोऽसि

In the Madhyandina Samhita of the Yajurveda the abhinihita, as well as the praslista svaritas are denoted by a notation—'vertico-horizontal' stroke (∟) placed below the syllable.

6 Undulations or kampa — The undulations (when spoken with a jerk are of four kinds : jatya, ksaipra, praslista, and abhinihita produced as a result of a svarita of these types (described above) when followed by an udatta or a svarita. When a bronze plate is struck, it continues to vibrate for some time with a vibratory sound; similarly the undulations or kampas (कम्प) are produced as a result of jerking accentuations. The short syllable, with an accent of svarita, when pronounced with undulation or kampa is indicated by the nagari numeral one (१) with a vertical svarita stroke at the top and a horizontal anudatta stroke at the bottom. The numeral one indicates the short vowel (hrasva), and since the praslista and abhinihita svaritas (as a result of the sandhi) are never with a short (hrasva) vowel, the numeral one is never used in their case to denote the undulation or kampa.

Jatya : उक्थ्यं १ वचोयतम्रुचा (Ṛv. I.83.3)
Ksaipra : सुध्य १ङ् नामं भद्रम् (Ṛv. I.108.3)

It should be seen that in these illustrations, क्थ्य is jatya svarita, which is followed by व which is udatta (without a notation); and similarly ध्य is ksaipra svarita, which is followed by ना which is udatta.

The numeral one (१) is connected with a short vowel (hrasva svara) when spoken with a kampa, but when a long vowel (dirgha svara) is involved in producing the undulation or kampa, the nagari numeral ३ is used with a vertical stroke at the top and a horizontal stroke at the bottom of the numeral.

शतचक्रं यो ३ ह्यो वर्तनिः (Ṛv. X. 144.4).

In this the long vowel has an anudatta accent (a horizontal stroke at the bottom), and then it is followed by the numeral ३ with svarita and anudatta marks on the top and the bottom of the numeral.

The long vowel with kampa or undulation can be with all the four kinds of the svaritas :

Jatya : रथ्यो ३ वयस्वतः (Ṛv. II. 24.15)
Ksaipra : विक्ष्वा ३ योः (Ṛv. II. 4.2)

Praslista : अभी ३ दम् (Ṛv. X. 48.7)
Abhinihita : प्रथमं वां वृणानो ३ऽयं सोमः
(वृणानः+अयं) (Ṛv. I. 108.6)

It would be seen in these illustrations, that the svarita accents थ्यो, ह्वा, भी, and नो take an anudatta notation at the bottom of the long syllable and the numeral ३ takes svarita at the top and anudatta at the bottom; and finally the numeral is followed by व, यो:, द, and यं with udattas as accents.

Sometimes, in such cases the accented numeral ३ is also followed by a svarita, as in, शतचक्रं यो ३ ह्यो वर्तनिः (Rv. X. 144.4).

Thus १ stands for the svaritas related to the short vowels, ३ for the svaritas related to the long vowels; there is no svarita related in the same fashion to the triply prolated (pluta, प्लुत) vowels, and so no notation for it.

7. We have said that in those cases where jatya, ksaipra, praslesa and abhinihita svaritas are followed by an anudatta or ekasruti, or where there is no syllable at all following such svaritas, the notation used to indicate is a 'vertico-horizontal' stroke ∟, at the bottom of the syllable as घर्मोऽसि, वध्रोऽसि, वीर्याणि, प्रवोचं यः.

It must be remembered that when a ksaipra svarita is not preceded by an anudatta, this svarita is indicated as usual by a vertical stroke, a usual notation for the svarita.

त्र्यम्बकं यजामहे (Yv. III. 60), उर्व्या व्यद्यौत् (Yv. XII. 1)

But if the jatya, ksaipra, praslesa or abhinihita svarita is followed by an udatta syllable, then a trident-notation at the bottom of the syllable is used (ꟺ), which resembles English w.

Jatya : वेर्द्र्त्य म वेतां (Yv.II.9) here मं is udatta.

Ksaipra : पृथिव्यामुर्वन्तरिक्षमन्वेमि (Yv. I. 11) here न is udatta.
Praslesa : अभीमं महिमा (Yv. XXXVIII.17)-here मं is udatta.
Abhinihita; लोके ऽस्मिन् (Yv. III. 21)—here स्मि is udatta.

And so one should recognize that when a jatya, ksaipra, praslesa or abhinihita svarita is followed by an anudatta or ekasruti, then the notation used is vertico-horizontal stroke (∟), but when it is followed by an udatta, then the notation used is a trident (ω).

8. The notations, described above belong to the Madhyandina school of the Yajurveda; in other schools, the notations are different; for example, in the Kathaka Samhita, the udatta is indicated by a vertical stroke on the syllable (देवस्य त्वा सवितुः, I. 2); and if the svarita of the categories of jatya, ksaipra, praslesa and abhinihita are not followed by an udatta, it (the svarita), is indicated by a crescent stroke below the syllable : वीर्यमभिसमियात् (Kathaka XXIV. 5). प्राणो व्यात्तो ऽतिष्ठिता (XXXVIII. 5). We shall not discuss here the details of these differences. The Maitrayani Samhita has altogether a different system of notation.

We are not taking here the subject of assigning accent-notation in the mantras of Samaveda. Of the nine Samhitas of the Atharvaveda, only two are available, the Saunakiya and the Paippalada. In the Saunaka Samhita, the notation system for the udatta, anudatta and the ordinary or usual svarita is the same as in the Ṛk-Samhita. But for the jatya, ksaipra, praslesa and abhinihita svaritas, the syllable having the svarita is shown by an integration sign of calculus (∫), which follows the svarita syllable :

Jatya : दर्शय यातुधान्यः∫ (Saunaka Av. IV. 2.6).
Ksaipra : तन्वो∫ अद्य (I. 1.1).
Praslesa : नी∫ त एव (III. 11.2).
Abhinihita : ये∫ स्वादोहमुपामते (V. 17.17).

In the Paippalada Samhita of the Atharvaveda, the udatta is indicated by a vertical stroke on the syllable, and anudatta by a vertical stroke below the syllable :

शिवा शग्मा या (XIV. 2. 7), in which वा is udatta and शि is anudatta. The ordinary or the usual svarita is indicated by a dot (.) placed just below the svarita syllable, as in श़ and ksaipra svarita and the like are represented by a vertico-horizontal stroke below the syllable, as व्या in the above illustration. We shall take one more example :

तन्वा शन्तमया (XIV. 2. 8)

Here त is anudatta, श is udatta, त is ordinary svarita and वा is ksaipra svarita. All the ekasruti syllables following the ksaipra svarita etc. are indicated by a dot placed below the first such syllable. For example :

जिह्वाया आस्याय च (XVI. 104.6)

In this illustration, जि and आ are anudatta, ह्वा is udatta, या is the ordinary svarita, स्या is the jatya svarita and य is first ekasruti.

The Madhyandina school of the Satapatha Brahmana represents an udatta by placing a horizontal stroke below the syllable; for example, in

अथ स ꣳ स्थिते विसृजते (I. 1. 1. 2)

अ, स and वि are udattas.

9. Nasal sound before the usma (ऊष्म; श, ष, स, ह) and antastha (अन्तस्थ; य, र) consonants are represented by two notations (i) ꣴ and (ii) ꣳ ; the former one (ꣴ) is termed as short nasal, and the latter one (ꣳ) as the long. This notation is not used in the Ṛgveda and the Atharva, but profusedly used in the Yajurveda, and dubiously in the Samaveda.

Short ꣴ—अघश ꣴ सः (Yv. I. 1)= अघशंसः (श is short and is followed by an usma स).

द्युमन्त ꣴ समिधीमहि (Yv. II. 4)=द्युमन्तं समिधीमहि
मनसा स ꣴ शिवेन (Yv. II. 24)=मनसा सं शिवेन
विश्व ꣴ हि (Yv. IV. 2)=विश्वं हि
अह ꣴ रक्षसां (Yv. VI. 1)=अहं रक्षसां

Long ꣳ—

अपाꣳरे नाꣳमि (Yv. III. 12)=अपा रेतामि (पा and ना are long and hence notation ꣳ)

स्या ꣳ सुवीरः (Yv. III. 37).
स्वाहा ꣳ शाय (Yv. X. 5).
नवीना ꣳ हरिम् (Yv. XIII. 42).
हवी ꣳ प्यस्मे (Yv. VIII. 18).

Dependence of interpretation on Accents

The Vedic terms, being the most ancient and natural, constitute the plastic material of a semi fluid state, capable of giving multiforms of interpretation. In such cases of ambiguity, the accents go a long way in breaking of words into correct components and giving correct interpretations. There are the cases where the pada-patha is misleading : for example, usually, we have the following text of the verse :

वने न वा यो न्यधायि चाकन् (Ṛv. X 29.1).

In this text, we have वा and यो written separately, and according to Sakalya, वा and यः are the two distinct padas. But Yaska, the author of the Nirukta says :

वायो वेः पुत्रः।··· । वेति च य इति चकार शाकल्यः ।
उदात्तं त्वेवमाख्यातमभविष्यत् असुसमाप्तश्चार्थः । (Nir. VI. 28)

[As a trembling young bird has been placed on a tree As a trembling or anxiously longing, young bird, i.e. the young offspring of a bird. Sakalya has analysed vayah (वायः) into va (वा) and yah (यः); then the finite verb would have had the acute or udatta accent, and the sense would have been incomplete]. Here actually the finite verb is anudatta low or grave.

We take another illustration from the Yajuh (Yv. XXXII. 2), which can be written in two ways :

नतस्य प्रतिमाऽअस्ति (There is an idol of the inclined one).
न तस्य प्रतिमाऽअस्ति (There is no idol of the one described).

(न and त are both udatta, as accepted by convention)

If we accept the first one with the accents as traditionally accepted, then in न तस्य, न and त are both udatta or acute, but according to the well-known rule one word or term cannot have more than one udatta and therefore, नतस्य is ruled out in favour of the terms न and तस्य written or interpreted separately. "There is no idol of the one described" is, thus, the correct interpretation.

Let us take another similar illustration. We have in the Nasadiya Sukta (Rv. X.129.1)

किमावरीवः कुह कस्य

In this text कुह and कस्य are written separately with two udattas in कु and क.

Ravana translates it as कुहकस्य as combined : यथा कुहकस्यैन्द्रजालिकस्य; Dayananda translates it as : यत् प्रातः कुह कस्य वर्षाकाले धूमाकारेण वृष्टं किञ्चिज्जलं वर्तमानं भवति···(Ṛgbhabhu), in which on close observation, it appears that he translates कुह as क्वचित् or किञ्चत् (not every where, or just a little) and कस्य as जलस्य, i.e. of water. If कुह and कस्य terms are combined to give only one term कुहकस्य, then it cannot have two udattas or acute accents.

Interpretation differs with accents—Let us take a few examples from the ordinary Sanskrit usages:

(a) कृष्णकम्बलम् आनय and (b) कृष्णकम्बलम् आनय. Here (a) and (b) read the same with a difference in accents. In (a), ण of कृष्ण is udatta or acute, i.e. there is an acuteness in कृष्ण, and therefore, it would mean, "bring the one who has a black blanket." Here, the emphasis is neither on black nor on blanket but on the person who is putting on a black blanket, and yet, if seen minutely, there is an emphasis on "black"; there may be a number of persons with blankets, but the one, referred to is that person who puts on a black blanket, and therefore, the udatta accent has been placed on कृष्ण (black) and not on कम्बल (blanket). Here is an illustration of bahuvrihi compound, in which the compound word retains the same accent as that of the first term. (Panini: बहुव्रीहौ प्रकृत्या पूर्वपदम्, VI.2.1)

In (b), the udatta accent is in कम्बलम् (on ल), and hence it means that "bring the black blanket", which puts emphasis on blanket.

We shall now quote a few illustrations indicating how the interpretation differs with accents.

(i) We have a verse in the Ṛgveda :

हनो॑ वृत्रं जया॑ अपः (Ṛv. I.80.3) and the other in the Atharvaveda:

जयो॑ मे॑ सुव्य आहि॑तः (Av. VII.52.8).

In both of these verses, we have the word जय but with different accents. In the Ṛgveda verse, the word is udatta in the beginning जया॑ (ज is udatta, adi-udatta), and it means then that "(O Indra), may you win over waters or apas."

In the Atharvaveda, जयो, the word is udatta on the last syllable यो, and therefore, the text means that "victory is assuredly in my left hand."

Venkata Madhava has thus clearly stated, that if the accent differs, the interpretation should also be changed. A few illustrations from his Ṛgvedic commentary are given here :

	Word	Meaning
1.	जठ॑रः	अग्निः (fire)
	जठरः॑	उदरवचनः (stomach)
2.	यमः॑	येन गच्छति (by whom one goes)
	यमः	वैवस्वतः (Vaivasvata Yama)
3.	सत्यम्	ऋतार्थे (truth)
	सत्य॑म्	दारिद्र्ये (poverty)
4.	ज्येष्ठ॑ः	प्रशस्यः (the better)
	ज्येष्ठः	वयसा ज्येष्ठः (the elder)
5.	सुकृ॑तम्	निष्ठान्तम्
	सुकृत॑म्	क्विबन्तम्
	सुकृतम्	भावे निष्ठान्तं बहुव्रीहि

OUR TRANSLATION

The Vedas, since the earliest days of our civilization and culture have been regarded as the literature of Supreme Authority, the revealed code given to man by the divine Lord for his highest development and final release from bondage; it has come down to man as his first speech and first scripture at a period when there were no class restrictions, no racial, national and geographical boundaries, and therefore, the Vedas have a message for all people of all nations and of all times living on this terrestrial planet in the company of innumerable species of dumb and mute animal creatures, who for their code of living are guided dominatingly by their so-called instincts, whilst man is the only highly developed species, which has to be instructed, and the Vedas constitute the element of our first divine instruction.

The Veda or the Divine Knowledge is one, with a uniform divine philosophy of dynamic realism in this purposeful creation. The study of the Veda cannot be made structure-wise, scattered through a number of strata; it cannot be taken as a piece-meal. The Vedas, as a supreme surprise, have been preserved to us with utmost care in the form of four Books or Samhitas, all bearing the same message, indicating the same spirit of thought, possessing the same gospel of life; and thus the texts and their material content should be considered as an integral whole. It is against our traditional spirit to read into the lines of this sacred scripture numerous stages of evolutionary development, and regarding some passages as the earliest and primitive, whilst the others as highly evolved and therefore, the last to be composed. Our modern scholars of the Vedic literature trained on a new methodology, developed in the West during the past two centuries or so, have considerably erred on this score in their enthusiasm of anthropology, linguistics, philology and even archaeology. The Vedas were always held in high esteem, and therefore, they have been influencing history in several ways; they have been so often misunderstood also. It is to the credit of the Western scholars that they very scientifically edited the oriental texts, prepared their glosses, indexes and concordances; but their translations, annotations and the critical study lacked in the sense of that sympathy which a scripture meant to elevate mankind through all times deserves. It is not a fault of the modern scholars so much as of our own learned scholiasts for whom the Vedic texts remained for centuries merely formulae for ritualistic and ecclesiastical practices. Our people preserved the heritage of the mantras, but their dynamic meaningfulness was entirely lost to them. It was a blessed augury for all of us that at the close of the Nineteenth century, we had a person of the stature of Dayananda Sarasvati, well-versed in the Vedic literature and grammar, a man with clear vision and of a high spiritual order. He gave us a new insight into the studies of the Vedic texts. The Vedas are, according to him, to be interpreted with the Vedas themselves, and with the esteem with which the spirit of the seers of the Upanisads, and of the six systems of the Vedic philosophy looked upon them. In other words, the Vedas are to be interpreted with a theistic rationalistic view, given to us at a time when the language was in its most fluid natural form, free from the arrogance of specified and concretized meanings. Vedic texts are the first source of language and ideas both; they are, as so often mistaken, not the outcome of a language with which man-community was well-versed, and the outburst of the ideas, already evolved in the society. In this sense, the Indian philosophers have been saying, and never tired of repeating the same again and again, that the Vedas are apauruseya (अपौरुषेय) or non-man-composed. The Vedas constitute a source, not a reservoir. I know, it would be difficult for a man, trained on modern lines, to appreciate this vital difference. But once you accept this proposition, Dayananda's point of view of interpretation would be quite clear. Many of our present day scholars err in this respect. They start with an imposed hypothesis that like any other literature, the Vedas too derive their contents from innumerable channels, flowing from the Arctic regions, from the Central Asia, from the Middle-East, or from other remote corners of the world. This is quite natural to think so, if you regarded the Vedas as one of the most ancient reservoirs, fortunately saved for us from the ravages of times. But if you consider the Vedas, as the First Source, the entire picture would be different. Dayananda, and later on Aurobindo revived this idea again for us in modern times, quite in consonance with the concept held by the seers of the Upanisads and Indian philosophy. So they constitute a Divine Code, the First Source Book, and a literature to inspire us in all walks of our life for our individual and collective good. Not that we are interested in the study of a very ancient literature or language, not that we are interested in the history of human development through ages, that we should go through the contents of the Vedas, but since they contain in them an eternal message of life, and have a present-worth for all of us, that we should take to the studies of the Vedas, and adopt them for our dynamic life. They constitute a LIVING BOOK and not a dead past.

We have, in our present studies, tried to interpret the Vedas on the basis of the following traditionally accepted postulates:

1. The Vedas constitute the First Source Book of Knowledge, given to man, for his individual and collective good, in the present life and for a better future.

2. The Supreme Knowledge emanates from the same Lord as is the Creator of the universe also and to whom we owe our own corporeal existence in this life and the lives to come. And therefore, there should be no contradiction between what we read into the texts and what we observe in the creation.

3. The concept of divinity is a concept of monotheism; the entire creation is governed by one existence, supreme and super, omniscient, omnipresent and omnipotent. He alone is the Source Book of Knowledge and the First Cause of all that has been created. Our Lord, the First Cause, is an Infinite Unity; and He, the Supreme Self, with all His benevolence, has created this world for the good of numberless infinitesimal unities (the category of lower self), out of the eternally existing matter, self-endowed with plastic material causality.

4. The world is real, in no sense a dream, a myth, an illusion, but all the three, the Creator, the creation, and the infinitesimal selves, constitute a dynamic reality.

Our Lord is not only the cause of creation, and the source of knowledge, the moral code for man has also been provided by him. He is the primary source of an ethical code. He Himself is morality-personified. He is Truth, He is Justice, He is Benevolence, He is Activity and He is the Supreme Bliss. An interpretation of a Vedic Text which goes against the concepts of morality, exemplary ethics and standard values of life, is, therefore, not acceptable. The personal ethics is outlined in the five yamas and five niyamas enumerated in the Yoga Sutras of Patanjali. The five restraints or yama are: (i) benevolence or non-violence, ahimsa (अहिंसा), (ii) truthfulness or satya (सत्य), (iii) abstinence from misappropriation or asteya (अस्तेय), (iv) celibacy or bramacharya (ब्रह्मचर्य), and (v) freedom from avarice, non-covetousness or aparigraha (अपरिग्रह). The five observances or niyamas are: (i) cleanliness or sauca (शौच) (ii) contentment or santosa (सन्तोष), (iii) austerity or tapas (तपस्), (iv) study and self-evaluation or svadhyaya (स्वाध्याय), and (v) devotion to the Supreme Lord or isvarapranidhana (ईश्वरप्रणिधान). The Atharva-veda enumerates some of these values as satya (सत्य, truth), bṛhat (बृहत्, infinite), ṛta (ऋत, eternally right), diksa (दीक्षा, consecration), tapas (तपस्, austerity or penance), brahma (ब्रह्म, knowledge), and yajna (यज्ञ, selfless dedication)—these are the values which sustain our life on this Mother Earth (Av. XII. 1. 1).

6. The Vedas have a message for all and sundry; they treat man as a son of the Mother Earth and the celestial father. The Vedas were given to us at the earliest times when there were no geographical boundaries of land, sea or interspace, and no proper names were given to a land, to a mountain, to a river or to a sea either. All men belonged to a common world, and they stood for universal fraternity. It was centuries afterwards, that the rivers, and lands were given proper names borrowed from the Vedic texts. Neither our Himalayas were known by this name, nor our Vindhyas, neither the Sindhu, the Ganga, the rivers of the Punjab or of the Indo-gangetic plane had yet their names, nor the cities like Ayodhya, Prayaga or Kasi were known as cities either. The Vedas speak of the eternal history or the sasvata-itihasa, and not the history as we understand it today. Names of places, and objects like rivers or hills and persons were given much after. The Vedas do not give an account of any conflict or war of human history; they speak of the eternal conflict that goes in man even today,—an internal conflict between truth and non-truth, good and evil, between the baser and noble instincts, a conflict between nescience and knowledge. It is the ultimate victory of light over darkness which has been so often spoken of in so many ways. It is a conflict between Arya and Dasyu, the law-abider and law-breaker, but it is not the racial conflict. The asuras or panis are not the Assyrians; the Dasyus are in no sense the Dravidians. To see an account of racial or national conflicts in the lines of our Vedic texts, or to trace the history of our relationships to the days of the first revelation would be our utter ignorance and scholiastic injustice.

7. Man has been blessed with language; this is warranted by his capacity of uttering distinct syllables, vowels and consonants of our vocal organ and of identifying them with distinctness by our hearing aid. Man is thus, by his nature, a hearing and speaking biological species. In that sense, our Lord has provided him with divine Speech as a vehicle to communicate and receive ideas. Whilst this speech is man's special privilege, it has its own limitations. It is one of the most important vehicles given to us for our communication, but after all, it is a very poor vehicle. In a set language of limited vocabulary, we have to express our thoughts of gross and abstract realms both. In its term, we have to express the entire spectra of all human experiences. Sugar is sweet in a biochemical sense, music is sweet in another sense, one's face is [illegible] in another way; our relations are sweet in [illegible] [illegible]otation, and thus we have the sweetness, as if of the ephemeral and physical realms, and beyond that some other type of sweetness of mental and spiritual realms. Each and every sweetness has its own spectrum, but our vocabulary is poor. There is a celestial world outside with the sun, moons, and stars, but there is a similar world of inner experience in our interior too. The Vedic texts have their own peculiar fascinating way of taking you step by step, so often in one and the same hymn, from a mundane object to the higher level, and elevating you higher and higher, they would take you to the most abstract and delightful spiritual realms. These texts would be talking to you in terms of your household fuel-fire, but lift you up by and by to the highest elevated fire of the innermost core of the Anandamaya and the Vijnanamaya Kosas. They might start with the description of a sweet herbal extract (so well known as Soma), but take you to the Soma of your invigorating youth, and finally to the highly elevating and exhilarating experiences of our spiritual realm. Thus these texts would sometimes in one and the same hymn would take you upon a sojourn from the most familiar known mundane realm to the loftiest experience, for which we do not possess any vocabulary in our language. Similar to Soma, we have so many other terms, which are applicable on mundane plane as well as the higehst spiritual plane. For example, Maruts may be ordinary soldiers of an army, brilliantly dressed and decorated, and accomplished with shining weapons. They may be again rain-bearing thunder-clouds in the spatial regions; they may equally constitute our vital forces of inner realms, when we talk of them in a spiritual context. Indra as a resplendent lord may be the head of any organization, even a state; again for the same reason, he may be lower self (the soul or atman) in a body; he may be one of the names of the sun, or he may be our Creator, the Supreme Lord.

8. Like all divine things, the Vedic text is capable of mutliple interpretations. The multiplicity is due to various reasons. The texts are in a fluid language, which in its most natural form, is capable of multiple interpretations. In this sense, a term like "go" (गो) may mean earth or cow or both. Interspace has been given sixteen synonyms in the Nighantu, including words as apah (which may also mean water), pṛthivi (also meaning earth) and samudra (also meaning sea). The word parvata means mountain and cloud both; the sruti or Veda contains terms nearest to their etymology, and in that sense, the word like 'tata' means father and also son; the word nana means mother and daughter both. The word pati (the protector) stands for husband and father (or the head of a group) both; bhrata and bharta (brother and husband) carry the same sense. In the sruti, the etymological means would naturally give rise to the multiplicity of interpretations. On the other hand, in the sastra, each term should have a definite restricted connotation.

Multiplicity of interpretation is also due to the universality of concepts. What is applicable to a small group may equally be applicable to large groups. The study of units takes us to the study of groups. Then, we have another type of multiplicity which arises out of the analogies or parallelisms. This gives birth to the well known adhi-bhuta (अधिभूत), adhi-deva (अधिदेव), and adhyatma (अध्यात्म) concepts. One and the same text may be interpreted in a parallel way in all the three realms: physico-chemical, biological and psychological; very often, there is another type of cryptical multiplicity of interpretations, which is also permissible in the Vedic texts. The words, bhuh, bhuvah and svah, may be cited as examples of this category; the words agni, mitra, varuna, soma, indra, asvinau, are also cryptical in the same sense, and have to be interpreted according to the context.

There is another cryptographical group represented in terms of numerals. The so-often quoted example of the type is the Text :

चत्वारि शृङ्गा त्रयो अस्य पादा द्वे शीर्षे सप्त हस्तासो अस्य ।
त्रिधा बद्धो वृषभो रोरवीति महो देवो मर्त्यां आविवेश ॥

(Ṛv. IV. 58.3)

This has been translated by Griffith as follows :

> Four are his horns, three are the feet that bear him, > his heads are two, his hands are seven in number.
> Bound with a triple bond, the steer roars loudly, > the mighty God hath entered into mortals.

Now who is this steer; and what is the idea behind the numerals four, three, and seven? In the ritualistic interpretation of Sayana, the four Vedas are the four horns of agni; and if identified with aditya, then the four cardinal points are the four horns. The three feet in the former case are the three daily sacrifices, in the latter morning, noon and evening. The two heads are, in the former case, the Brahmaudana (ब्रह्मौदन) and Pravargya (प्रवर्ग्य) ceremonies; in the latter, day and night. Similarly, the seven hands are explained, alternatively, as the seven metres of the Veda (gayatri, usnik etc.) or the seven rays of the sun; and the triple bond as the Mantra, Kalpa, and Brahmana, prayer, ceremonial, and rationale, of the Veda, or the three regions, heaven, firmament, and earth. According to Mahidhara (since this verse is also found in the Yajurveda, XVII. 91), the four horns are priests; or nouns, verbs, prepositions and particles; the three feet are the Vedas, or the first, second and third persons; or the past, present and future tenses; the two heads are two sacrifices, or the agent and object; the seven hands are the metres or the cases of the noun; and the three bonds are the three daily sacrificies, or the singular, dual and plural numbers. The Nirukta (XIII.7) also discusses this verse, and Patanjali in his commentary has discussed it in relation to the subject of grammar (as indicated by Mahidhara).

There is another crypto-numerical verse of the same type :

> चत्वारि वाक् परिमिता पदानि तानि विदुर्ब्राह्मणा ये मनीषिणः ।
> गुहा त्रीणि निहिता नेङ्गयन्ति तुरीयं वाचं मनुष्या वदन्ति ॥
> (Ṛv. I 164.45: Av. IX.10.27)

discussed by the Nirukta (XIII. 9): Speech has been measured out in four divisions; the three, kept in close concealment, cause no motion; of speech, men speak only the fourth division. Speech or vak, it is said, was created four fold; three kinds of which are in the three regions (the Rathantara on Earth, the Vamadeva on the firmament, and the Bṛhati in the heaven). According to the Nirukta, the three maha vyahṛtis and om constitute the four divisions. According to grammarians, the four are nama (noun), akhyata (आख्यात) (verbs), upasarga (prepositions) and nipata (particles); according to ritualists, the four are mantra, kalpa, brahmana, and vyavahariki (व्यावहारिकी). According to the etymologists, the four divisions are ṛk, yaju, sama, and vyavahariki. Dayananda considers the four divisions to be nama (noun), akhyata (verb), upasarga (prepositions) and nipata (particles); of these the three (nama, akhyata and upsargas) are used only by the people of learning, whilst the ignorant ones, the common people, use only the nipatas or prepositions. According to another school, the four divisions pertain to reptiles, to birds, to small snakes, and the fourth is the speech of common man. Another classification considers the speech of cattle, birds, musical instruments and primitive races of forests.

9. In order to interpret a word, one should be familiar with the rules of grammar and etymology both. The interpreter should be familiar with several disciplines of knowledge, since neither grammar nor etymology alone would lead to a sound interpretation. One should be familiar with the Vedic diction also. The nature of our problem of interpretation would be clear from the two passages, which we quote from the Nirukta (II.5 and 6); here the word gauh (गौः) has been interpreted in ten ways: (i) The word gauh is a synonym of 'earth', so called because it goes very far, or because people go over it (√gam, गम्). Or it may be derived from √ga (गा) with the suffix au (ga—au—gau). (ii) Moreover, it is a synonym of 'an animal', from the same root also. (iii) Further, in the latter meaning, there are Vedic passages where primary forms of gauh are used in a derivative sense: "mix Soma with milk" (गोभि श्रीणीत मत्सरम्, IX. 46. 4; gobhih—with milk; matsaram—soma). Here gauh is used in the sense of milk.

Matsarah (मत्सरः) means soma; it is derived from the root √mand (मन्द्), meaning to satisfy. Matsarah is a synonym of greed also: it makes man mad after wealth. Payas (पयस्) (milk) is derived from the √pa (√पा), to drink, or from √pyay (प्याय्), to swell. Ksiram (क्षीरम्), (milk) is derived from the ksar (√क्षर्), to flow; or it is derived from √ghas (√घस्), to consume, with the suffix ira (ईर), like usira (उशीर,, root of a plant). (iv) "Milking Soma, they sit on a cow-skin" (अंशुं दुहन्तो अध्यासते गवि, X. 94.9), i.e. gauh is used in the sense of cow-skin used for sitting on. Amsuh (अंशुः, Soma is so called because) no sooner than it goes in, it is agreeable, or it is agreeable for life. Carma (चर्म, skin) is derived from the root √car (√चर्), to move, or it is so called because it is cut off from the body. (v) Moreover, gauh means skin and phlegm :"Thou art girded round with skin and phlegm, be strong" (गोभिः सन्नद्धो असि वीळयस्व, VI. 47.26); this is said in praise of a chariot. (vi) Moreover, it means tendon and phlegm: "Girt with tendon and phlegm, it flies when dischared" (गोभिः सन्नद्धा पतति प्रसूता", VI. 75.11); this is in praise of an arrow. (vii) Bow-string is called gauh also: if it be gavya (गव्या), it is the derivative form; if not, it is causal, i.e. it sets arrows in motion: "On every strip of wood, twanged the well-strung string: thence the men-eating birds flew" (वृक्षे वृक्षे नियता मीमयद् गौस्ततो वयः प्र पतान् पूरुषादः, X. 27. 22).

In this passage the word vih (विः) is a synonym of bird, and is derived from the root vi (√वी), to go. Moreover, it is a synonym of arrow also from the same root [thus vih (विः) = bird = arrow]. (viii) The Sun is called gauh also, for we have: "Lo that charioteer in the sun who has joints" (उतादः परुषे गवि, VI. 56.3). "Having joints means having brilliance", says Aupamanyava. Moreover, a ray of the sun illuminates the moon. That the illumination of the moon is caused by the sun is to be established by the following: "Susumna is the ray of the sun, the moon is the holder" (सुषुम्णः सूर्यरश्मिश्चन्द्रमा गन्धर्वस्तस्य, Yv. XVIII. 40, S.Br. IX. 4.1.9). This too is a Vedic passage. (ix) That ray is called gauh also. "Here indeed they thought of the ray" (अत्राह गोरमन्वत, I. 84.15). (x) All the rays are called gavah (गावः) also: "We desire to go to those regions of you two, where are nimble and many-horned rays. There indeed, shines forth brightly that highest step of the wide-striding Visnu''.

> ता वां वास्तून्युश्मसि गमध्यै यत्र गावो भूरिशृङ्गा अयासः ।
> अत्राह तदुरुगायस्य वृष्णः परमं पदमवभाति भूरि ॥

(Ṛv. I. 154. 6)

We have illustrated our point of view by citing only one example, i.e. the interpretation of the word "gauh" out of hundreds of such words occurring in our Vedic texts.

10. The Vedic philosophy is not the philosophy of pantheism, —it is not the heathen worship of all gods either. It is not the doctrine that God is everything and everything God. It is not the monism either in the sense that only one being exists; it does not deny the duality of matter and spirit, prakṛti (प्रकृति) and atman(आत्मा)The Vedic doctrine is not the concept of henotheism, which represents the belief in one God without asserting that he is the only God. It is not a concept that when we talked of God as Agni, we attributed to him super-most qualities, whilst we thought of other gods Indra, Mitra, Varuna, Visnu, or Soma as subservient to him; and the next moment when we talked of Varuna, we attributed supermost attributes to him, giving other gods as a secondary position. Nor is the Vedic philosophy a philosophy of primitive theism of anthropological nature, nor is it the concept of atheism. It is a concept of all embracing pure monotheism, depending on the coexisting eternal and immortal God, the one, the supreme all-knowing and omnipotent blissful existence, an Infinite Unity, along with numberless infinitesimal unities, known as lower self or the soul (the jivatman, जीवात्मा), infinitesimal but existing for all times, the uncreated beings, which for their knowledge and bliss depend on the grace of God, who is just and benign. Coexisting with the above-mentioned two categories the Supreme Self, and numberless infinitesimal lower selves, is a third eternal category of Prakṛti or matter with the material causality as its only attribute; it provides a multidimensional canvas to the Great Artist, the Supreme Self, for creation. The art is His, the canvas is hers, of the prakṛti. He manifests Himself through His creation. The glory of the Sun, the beauty of the Moon, the vast force behind the Wind, clouds or storms is His. He is the light behind all lights; He is the Force beyond all forces; He is the divine behind all divinities, and he is the supreme bliss behind all that is pleasant and sweet. And in that sense, He becomes the Personified Fire, the Personified Light, the Personified Sun, the Personified Wind and so on and so forth. He alone is to be invoked, whilst apparently we are invoking His manifestations in this creation. This is the sublime concept of monotheism behind the curtain of his glory manifested in His divers creation.

The lower self when embodied in a corporeal complex manifests itself also in the same way. The minor gods to to be invoked in this case are eyes, ears, the organs of smell, taste and touch and breathing system. The glory of these minor gods is de facto the glory of the self, the atman. In the Cosmic Complex is the glory of the Supreme Lord, and through His glory, the Nature's bounties, the minor gods, become glorious and worthy of invocation; in our body complex, the real glory is of the self, whilst so long, the self stays in the body, its glory secondarily glorifies the sense-organs, which in the Vedic terminology, are also known as minor gods.

Veda and Deva—In the Vedic texts, the word for god or gods is deva or devata. Dayananda defines the word devam as दातारं हर्षकरं विजेतारं द्योतकं वा (Ṛv. I. 1.1), i.e. the one who is a donor, the cause of happiness, the cause of victory, or the shining one. At another place, he translates devan (देवान्) as दिव्यानीन्द्रियाणि, विद्यादिदिव्यगुणान्, दिव्यान् ऋतून्, दिव्यान् भोगान् वा (I. 1. 1), i.e. the glorious sense organs, glorious attributes as learning etc., the glorious seasons, and glorious objects of enjoyment. The word deva (देव) is a synonym of learned persons (Daya. on Ṛv. I. 34. 11; 40. 3; 44 13; 53. 11); it is synonymous with Sun, Moon, Earth and other celestial bodies: पृथिवी सूर्यलोकादय: (Daya. on I. 164. 39); the word deva or devata stands for 33 entities : eight vasus (वसव:), eleven rudras (रुद्राः), twelve adityas (आदित्याः), Indra (इन्द्र) and Prajapati (प्रजापति) (S.Br.). Each verse or hymn of the Vedas is associated with certain devatas; which indicate the subject-matter of the verse. This we shall take up in some details.

Vedas and Devatas—We have a detailed discussion on devata (deities) in the Nirukta; i.e. a discussion on the subject-matter in the Vedic verses. Yaska in the Nirukta (VII. 1-5) says: The section which enumerates appellations of deities, to whom panegyrics (stuti) are primarily addressed is called daivatam (दैवतम्), i.e. relating to deities. A seer addresses his panegyrics for the fulfilment of certain desires, and from whom he wishes to attain his objects. Such stanzas of panegyrics are of three kinds: (i) indirectly addressed (paroksakrta, परोक्षकृत), (ii) directly addressed pratysksakrta, प्रत्यक्षकृत), and (iii) self-invocations adhyatmikya, आध्यात्मिक्य). Of these the indirectly addressed stanzas are composed in all cases of nouns but the verb of the third person only. For example: (a) Indra rules heaven, Indra earth (X. 89. 10). (b) I will indeed proclaim the heroic exploits of Indra (I. 32. 1).

Then, the directly addressed stanzas are compositions in the second person, and are joined with the word "thou" as the pronoun. For example, Thou, O Indra, art born from strength (X. 153. 2).

Moreover, the praises are directly, while the objects of praise are indirectly, addressed; e.g.,

Do not praise any other (VIII. 1.1).
Sing forth, O Kanvas (I. 37. 1).

The self invocations are compositions in the first person, and are joined with the word 'I' as the pronoun, e.g. the hymn of Indra Vaikuntha (X. 48; 49) the hymn of Lava (X. 119) or the hymn of Vak (X. 125):

I was the first possessor of all precious gear (X. 48.1).

I have enriched the singer with surpassing wealth (X. 49.1).
I, in my grandeur, have surpassed the heavens and all this spacious earth. Have I not drunk the Soma Juice. (X. 119. 8)
I travel with the Rudras and the Vasus, with the Adityas and All-gods, I wander. (X. 125. 1)

Of the three types of the verses, directly addressed, and indirectly addressed are by far the most numerous. Self-invocations (adhyatmikyas) are few and far between.

In some verses, there is only praise of the deity without any benediction being invoked; for example, in the hymn, "I will indeed proclaim the heroic exploits of Indra"[1] (I 32. 1). Further, in some verses there is only benediction without any praise being offered, as "may I see well with my eyes, may I be radiant in my face, may I hear well with my ears."[2] Such verses are invariably found in the Yajurveda (adhvaryaveda आध्वर्यं वेद), and sacrificial formulae, There is another category, where there are asseverations (sapatha, शपथ) and imprecations (abhisapa, अभिशाप), e.g., अद्यामुरीय यदि यातुधानो अस्मि। (May I die today, if I be a juggling demon. (VIII. 104. 15).

अधा स वीरैर्दशभिर्वियूयाः। (Now may he be deprived of ten heroes.) (VII. 104.15).

Further, in some verses, there is an intention of describing a particular state :

न मृत्युरासीदमृतं न तर्हि। (Then was no death, nor indeed immortality.) (X. 129.2).

तम आसीत् तमसा गूळ्हमग्रे। [In the beginning (of creation), there was darkness, hidden in darkness.] (X. 129.3).

1. इन्द्रस्य नु वीर्याणि प्रवोचम्। (Ṛv. I. 32.1)
2. सुचक्षा अहमक्षीभ्यां भूयासम्। सुवर्चा मुखेन। सुश्रुत कर्णाभ्यां भूयासम्। (cf. Paraskara Gṛ. Su, II. 6.19; Asva. Gṛ. Su. III. 6.7)

Then in some verses, there is apprehension (परिदेवना) arising from a particular state :

> सुदेवो अद्य प्रपतेदनावृत् । (The benevolent God may fly forth today and never return.) (X. 95. 14)
> न विजानामि यदि वेदमस्मि । [I do not know whether I am this or (that)]. (I. 164.37)

Then in certain verses, there is censure (निन्दा) or praise (प्रशंसा); e.g.,

> केवलाघो भवति केवलादी । (He alone is guilty who eats alone.) (X. 117.6)
> भोजस्येदं पुष्करिणीव वेश्म । (This dwelling place of a liberal person is beautiful like a lotus bed.) (X. 107. 10)

Similarly, there is censure of gambling (द्यूत-निन्दा) and praise of agriculture (कृषिप्रशंसा) in the dice-hymn. (X. 34).

There are certain stanzas in the Vedic texts where deities are not assigned or specified. Such stanzas, according to the Nirukta, belong to the same deity to whom that particular sacrifice, or part of the sacrifice is offered. Before taking up the work of commenting on the Vedic texts, Dayananda prepared for his personal use, the index of devatas of all the four Vedas, that is he tentatively assigned the subject matter with care and scrutiny. In such cases, seers are supposed to be guided by visions in respect to the interpretations of the Vedic Mantras (एवमुच्चावचैरभिप्रायैर्ऋषीणां मन्त्रदृष्टयो भवन्ति, Nir. VII. 3).

Where there is no reference to sacrifice, and no deity specified, the verses are said to belong to Prajapati according to ritualists, and to Narasamsa (नाराशंस) according to etymologists.

Sometimes, the devata or deity may be an optional one, or even a group of deities. It is indeed a very prevalent practice, as the Nirukta says, in every-day life in the world to dedicate things in common including what is sacred to gods, to guests and to the manes.

In some hymns or verses, we find that not only the well-known deities are praised, the non-deities are - also praised like deities; for example, the objects beginning with horse and ending with herb (Nigh V. 3. 1-22) together with the eight pairs अष्टौ द्वन्द्वानि (Nigh. V. 3. 29-36). On such cases, the author of the Nirukta says, "The student should not think that matters relating to gods are adventitious as it were. On account of the super-eminence of the deity, a single soul is praised in various ways. Other gods are the individual limbs of a single soul. Or else, as people say, seers praise objects according to the multiplicities of their original nature, as well as from its universality. They are produced from each other. (e. g. Daksa is said to be born from Aditi, and Aditi from Daksa). They are the original forms of each other. They are produced from karma (action), they are produced from the soul. Soul is even their chariot, their horse, their weapon, their arrows; soul is indeed the all in all of gods. And thus, according to Yaska, the non-deities are but different manifestations of the same single soul as if. They all shine by the divine glory of the Supreme Self. And therefore, even the non-deities are treated as if they are deities.

According to the etymologists, there are three deities (devatah) only (Ait. Br. II. 17): (i) Agni, whose sphere is Earth, (ii) Vayu whose sphere is atmosphere or inter-space, and (iii) Aditya or the Sun whose sphere is heaven. In our human complex, these three deities correspond to the physical body, vital complex, and psychological complex. Of these each receives many appellations on account of his super-eminence, or the diversity of his function, just as a priest, though he is one, is called the sacrificer (hotṛ), the director (adhvaryu) the possessor of the sacred lore (brahama) and the chanter (udgatṛ).

The author of the Nirukta has also discussed the question of appearance (akara-cintana आकार चिन्तन) of these gods. Some say, that they are anthropomorphic for their panegyrics as well as their appellations (purusavidha) are like those of sentient beings. We have such texts :

ऋष्वा त इन्द्र स्थविरस्य बाहू ।
(O Indra, the two arms of the mighty one are noble). (VI.47.8)

आ द्वाभ्यां हरिभ्यामिन्द्र याहि ।
(O Indra, come with thy team of two bay steeds). (II.18.4)

अद्धीन्द्र पिब च प्रस्थितस्य ।
(O Indra, eat and drink the (Soma) placed before (thee). (X.116.7)

आश्रुत्कर्ण श्रुधी हवम् ।
Hear our call, O God that has't listening ears (I. 10.9)

This is merely a literary style of addressing these deities, for everyone knows that fire, air, sun, earth or moon are unanthropormorphic (in no way like a man). It must be rememered, that not only deities but inanimate objects, like stones, herbs, dice etc. have also been addressed, as if they are anthropomorpdic.

अभि क्रन्दन्ति हरितेभिरासभिः ।
(They shout with their green mouths). (X. 94.2)

This is a panegyric of stones. (ग्रावस्तुति :).

सुख रथं युयुजे सिन्धुराश्विनम् ।
Sindhu yoked the comfortable car, drawn by a horse. (X. 75.9).

This is a panegyric of a river (नदी-स्तुतिः).

One should, therefore, have a full familiarity with the Vedic diction or the verbal style before he can really interpret the Vedic stanzas. It is the divine knowledge which is being imparted to man, who, at least, is expected to know of himself, and therefore, the Vedic texts appear to have anthropomorphic contexts, even when they are referring to inanimate objects or deities.

Another peculiarity of the Vedic diction must be realized. It is a fact that according to the Vedic concept, our Supreme Lord is one, though He is known by various names, according to His attributes, functions and nature.

We have a verse :

> इन्द्रं मित्रं वरुणमग्निमाहुरथो दिव्यः स सुपर्णो गरुत्मान् ।
> एकं सद् विप्रा बहुधा वदन्त्यग्निं यमं मातरिश्वानमाहुः ॥
> They call Him Indra, Mitra, Varuna, Agni, and He is heavenly noble-winged Garutman.
> To what is one, sages give many a name; they call it Agni, Yama and Matarisvan. (Ṛv. I. 164.46)

And thus Indra, Mitra etc. are different names, titles or attributes of one and the same Supreme. But, it is so often that it appears that gods are being jointly invoked. Indra is jointly invoked along with Agni, Soma, Varuna, Pusan, Bṛhaspati, Brahmanaspati, Parvata, Kutsa, Visnu and Vayu. Mitra is jointly praised with Varuna; Soma with Pusan and Rudra; Pusan with Vayu and Parjanya with Vata. The function of Aditya or sun is to draw out and hold the juices with his rays. This Aditya is jointly praised with Candramas, Vayu and Samvatsara. (Ait. Br. II. 32; III. 31).

Salient Features of the Present Translation

1. The translation is meant to be enjoyed by all, and in no case is meant for Vedic scholars and the spirit of the text is given in a simple language for those who would like to be inspired with the Vedic lore.

2. The language used is the present day prose, and not the Biblical English. Even for God, the second person plural has been used, and not the second person singular, commonly in usage in the Vedic text.

3. The Vedic grammar takes up a considerable licence in respect to inflexions and so on, and therefore, simplest grammatical rules have been followed in our translation. As far as possible, present tense, including present perfect, have been given preference over past tenses.

4. Each verse is capable of multiplicity of interpretations; in our translation, we have preferred to interpret text from spiritual and psychological point of view to inculcate love, dedication and devotion to our Lord. There are yet occasions, where interpretations have been given on other lines, whenever the subject matter obviously refers to social topics.

5. The words like Indra, Agni, Mitra and Varuna have been translated in regards to the connotations they represent. They have not been treated as specific deities or gods; they represent common appellations to lower self or the Supreme Lord. They are attributive and not proper names. And so are terms like Maruts or Asvinau.

6. Interpretations are based on the fact that there is no conflict between the Vedic ideas and the experiences and observations in the divine creation. No interpretation would be held valid if it goes contrary to Nature's Laws, or contrary to the morals or high values of life.

7. Since the Vedas were given to us prior to human history, the interpretations are given on the basis of the concept that no historical or geographical references are to be sought for in the Vedic texts.

8. The Vedas constitute the divine knowledge; there is no primitivism in the Vedas. It would have been erroneous on our part if we had interpreted them anthropologically or archaeologically.

9. The Vedas precede all our philological contacts. The Vedic words occur in their most natural form, and as such, they have been interpreted in the natural way. In this respect, the derivations indicated by the authors of Nirukta, the Unadi Kosa, and the lines shown by Dayananda and Aurobindo have been very useful.

10. The Vedas are the Source Books, and much later in history, these texts came to be used for ritualistic purposes, and therefore from time to time, various types of viniyogas were suggested. We have tried our best to see that the interpretations are not prejudiced by ecclesiastical and ritualistic considerations. This does not mean that the fire ritual, or yajna, with fuel, butter and edible and medicinal preparations, has no sanction in the Vedas. The Vedic texts speak of the havir yajna, cosmic yajna and spiritual yajna with a unique parallelism.

IN MEMORY OF

VED RATAN MOHAN

Col. Ved Ratan Mohan, M.P. was born at Rawalpindi on July 30, 1920. He graduated from the Punjab University and later took his Master of Commerce Degree from Delhi University.

Shri Ved Ratan Mohan's father Shri N.N. Mohan was a prominent industrialist and a generous philanthropist. Shri Ved Ratan Mohan made his own memorable contribution to the success of the enterprises in which his family was interested. He also took active interest in public life and supported many worthwhile causes.

In 1961, the honorary rank of Captain was conferred on Shri Ved Ratan Mohan; in 1966, he became a Lieutenant Colonel in the Territorial Army; in 1972, the honorary rank of Colonel in the Territorial Army was conferred on him.

He was elected as Deputy Mayor of the Municipal Corporation, in Lucknow. Later he was elected to the office of the Mayor. In 1964, he was nominated as a Member of the Uttar Pradesh Legislative Council. In 1967, he was awarded Padama Shri. In 1971, he became the recipient of the Padma Bhushan Award. In 1972, he was elected to Rajya Sabha, the Upper House of Indian Parliament, from Uttar Pradesh.

He died on July 28, 1973, deeply mourned and widely lamented.

He had travelled extensively and had a wide range of interests and accomplishments. Photography, painting, music and poetry had a claim on him. Equally, he gave generously of himself to the solution of public problems and to personal hardships of individuals in distress. He was deeply interested in Indian culture and in educational institutions as vehicles of India's cultural renaissance and socio-economic reconstruction. The Vedas and their message energised his inspiration and impelled him to consecrated action for human welfare.

Ved Ratan Mohan

Preface

The Vedas are the Word of God. At the very beginning of the Creation, man received knowledge of the Vedas. The Ṛgveda is the most ancient of all the holy scriptures in the world.

Knowledge of the Vedas is not intended for a particular race or country. God revealed this knowledge for the greatest good of mankind. This noble objective is reflected in the following words of the Vedic sages :

May all be happy and rid of diseases,
May all have a happy and harmonious life,
May nobody ever be afflicted with suffering.

The Vedas have been translated into several languages. Scholars like Griffith, Wilson and Max Müller have written commentaries on the Vedas in English. But the need for bringing out an unconventional and standard translation of the Vedas has been felt for quite sometime. The task, however, involved dedication, hard work and considerable financial resources.

Col. Ved Ratna Mohan, ex-M.P., was a promising youngman, the scion of a family which had implicit faith in the Vedas. His brilliant career was cut short by untimely death in 1973. His father, late Shri Narendra Mohan, was a leading industrialist of India. Devoted to social service, he took keen interest in the dissemination and distribution of religious literature. He had unshakable faith in God. Daily he would perform yajna and once in a year he would perform this on a big scale when all the mantras of one of the four Vedas would be recited. He had named his eldest son Ved Ratna (Jewel of the Vedas). He had desired the late Ved Ratna to do some service to the Vedas. But fate had willed otherwise. Col. Ved Ratna died before he could fulfil his father's wish.

His younger brother Major Kapil Mohan, who has great reverence for the Vedas like his father, made the noble resolve to get all the four Vedas translated into English and publish them on behalf of the Narendra Mohan Foundation in the sacred memory of his elder brother. This Foundation was endowed by the sons of the late Shri Narendra Mohan, the founder of the Mohan Industries, in accordance with the wishes of their father. A hospital, a college, and several other charitable institutions devoted to public service are being run by the Foundation.

The task of rendering the four Vedas into English was entrusted to the Veda Pratishthana by the Foundation. Dr. Govardhan Lal Dutta, a famous educationist and Head of the Pratishthana, requested the Vedic scholar Svami Satya Prakash Sarasvati to undertake the highly onerous responsibility. Indeed one could think of no other scholar better qualified than Svami Satya Prakashji to accomplish this task. I am happy that Svamiji was kind enough to accede to the request. He is devoting most of his time to the translation work though he is a parivrajaka, a peripatetic monk. In this task, he is collaborating with Pandit Satyakam Vidyalankar.

Thanks are particularly due to Shri Vishwanath for his unstinted cooperation in the excellent printing of this work. No words would be adequate to express my warm appreciation and grateful thanks to Major Kapil Mohan, Svami Satya Prakashji and other colleagues and co-workers of the Veda Pratisthana who have generally helped in the accomplishment of this sacred task.

Our labours would be fully rewarded if through this English translation of the four Vedas, attempted for the first time in India, the divine message enshrined in the Vedas impregnates human consciousness everywhere.

BOOK ONE

We worship the adorable God, the high priest of cosmic activities, the divine, the one who works through the eternal laws, and who feeds and sustains all that is divine and luminous. 1

May the adorable God, eternally adorned by the seers of times, past and present, be a source of inspiration to wise men of all ages. 2

May the inspiration derived from the adorable God be a source of ever-increasing affluence, vitality and prosperity. 3

O Lord, you are the protector of the unobstructed cosmic sacrifice of creation. May the blessings from all sides assuredly reach the seeker of truth. 4

The adorable God, the source of vitality and knowledge, the giver and acceptor, is truth personified, and divine unparalleled. May He be a source of inspiration to the aspirants. 5

O adorable Lord, vital, living and energetic, may you bestow on your devotees all that is good in you. This, verily, in its turn, would be dedicated to your service by them. 6

Day and night, we approach you, Lord, with reverential homage through sublime thoughts and noble deeds. 7

We approach you, Lord, the radiant, the sustainer of the cosmos, the constant illuminator of truth, with humility to appreciate the glory ever-increasingly manifested in your own creation. 8

Lord, be unto us easy of access, as a father is to his son. May you be ever-present with us for our sake. 9

O Lord of the cosmic vitality, may you, loving as you are, come to us. These devotions are all for you. Please accept them, and hear the invocations of minstrels and intellectuals. 1

O Lord of the cosmic vitality, we, your devotees, invoke you with holy praises, pouring forth sweet emotional yearning from our hearts. 2

O Lord of cosmic vitality, your inspiring voice resounds all through the thoughts and feelings of your devotees, the perceptors of your divine wisdom, who have tasted the sweetness of your favours. 3

O Lord, resplendent and the source of cosmic vitality, verily our songs and invocations are for you and your eternal order. May you come to us and nourish us with your blessings. 4

O source of cosmic vitality and Lord-resplendent, law and order is abiding in this creation. You are, assuredly, aware of our devotional thoughts and emotions. May we always keep the light of love and dedication burning for you and for your eternal laws. 5

O source of cosmic vitality and Lord-resplendent, may you bless the devotee for his dedication. Only your blessings will enable him to realize his aspirations. 6

I invoke the lord the source of light and bliss. He is the dispeller of evil forces. Verily, with His blessings, the worshippers will be bestowed with happiness and wisdom in life. 7

O the source of light and bliss, you are the augmenter and dispenser of knowledge for every mortal man in this life. May you be pleased to fulfil the truthful aspirations of your devotees. May all their noble endeavours attain success. 8

O supreme Lord of cosmic enlightenment, may we attain prosperity through our selfless work and may we be strong to accomplish them. O Lord, you exist for the benefit of all of us—so we think. You are the refuge of multitudes. 9

O the twin faculties—mental and vital, O cherishers of the noble deeds, with which we all benefit, may you derive gains at the sacred cosmic creation with spontaneity and without reservation. 1

These twin faculties, mental and vital, lead to mighty acts, and guide our thoughts, expressions and actions, endowed with fortitude. May these faculties be always of service to us in our intellectual pursuits. 2

O twins, you are dispeller of evils. You are a protection for us from untruth and you are the inspirer of our organs of actions and perceptions, may you come and dwell within for achieving fulfilment of all that is knowable and enjoyable. 3

O soul, the lower self, of wonderful splendour, listen to us. All attainments of the vital and mental complex are meant for your acceptance. 4

O soul, you are apprehended by understanding, admired by the wise, and sought after by the seekers. May you accept and assimilate what comes out as the essence of a toiling and purposeful life. 5

O soul, the self, may you come in company with your faculties full of awareness and quick in acquirements; come, accept and assimilate the knowledge derived by the mind and senses. 6

May our entire group of sense organs, supporter of human life, bestower of rich rewards and giver of confidence, function perfectly in consonance with the inner self, the soul. 7

May our swift-moving senses, givers of happiness, bring functional perfection, as the solar rays diligently bring day-light. 8

May our entire sense-organs be free from decay. May they be full of cognitional activities and devoid of malice. They are capable of receiving and remitting the rays of divine knowledge. May they all be nourished to the full. 9

May the divine speech, the fountain head of all faculties (mental and spiritual), the purifier and bestower of knowledge, the recompenser of worship, be the source of inspiration and accomplishment for all our organised benevolent acts. 10

O divine speech, you inspire those who delight in truth. You instruct them who are diligent. Please assist us in our efforts to perform the organised sacred acts. 11

This speech-divine sets in motion all the energies of the soul and intellect. It enlightens the wisdom of all who are seekers of truth. 12

Day by day we invoke the resplendent God, the inspirer of all beneficial works for our assistance, as a good milch-cow is called (by the milker) for milking. 1

O inherent source of bliss, you are the vital force behind the sense-organs; may you bless us in our daily duties and accept our devotional prayers. 2

You are always present in the thoughts of virtuous and rightminded devotees. May we all deserve your nearness. May we be not left behind while you reveal your glory to others. 3

O seeker of wisdom, go to the wise, and to the pious, free from blemishes. Go to the bestower or gifts. He will be your best friend. Invoke Him for enlightenment. 4

Let our preceptors earnestly direct us to God's devotion and exclaim : "O evils, depart henceforth from every place". 5

May we dedicate all our actions and essence thereof to our supreme Lord. He alone is the inspirer of all noble deeds. He alone is the giver of joy to mankind, the source of energy for the fulfilment of our aspirations and the bestower of divine bliss. 7

O Lord, the embodiment of total selfless actions, with all your nobility, you have become slayer of evil forces. May you defend all of us in the strifes and struggles of life. 8

O Lord, the embodiment of selfless actions, we invoke you in the grim battle of life to obtain success and true prosperity. 9

We sing the glory of that almighty, who is the soure of wsidom and the accomplisher of good deeds. Let us acclaim Him to be the friend of the dedicated and the best amongst all. 10

Let us all, O friends and devotees, assemble here and offer our congregational prayer to, and repeatedly sing the glory of the resplendent Lord. 1

Let us pour forth our heartfelt prayers in our sacred songs. Only He is the bestower of true happiness. Only He is the destroyer of evil forces. 2

Let us sing to the glory of that supreme Self with intense devotion, whose adversaries, with all their strength, are unable to face the horses harnessed in His car, (i.e. unable to face the vigour of His opposition). 4

These heart-throbs, coming as prayers, are sweet expressions of our gratitude and devotion. Assuredly, they will fetch blessings from merciful God for our enlightenment and prosperity. 5

O resplendent Lord, you are the supreme accomplisher of all that is noble and beneficial. May you be pleased with our heartfelt prayers and extend your blessed hand to enfold us in your embrace. 6

O Lord of supreme intelligence, we approach you for acquiring a spark of your divine wisdom. May our earnest prayers reach you and bring forth blessings from you. 7

O supreme Self, these hymns extensively speak of your glory. O Lord of total selfless actions, may these verses magnify you. May our chanting of sacred hymns arouse affection for you. 8

May the supreme Self, the possessor of enternal knowledge, invincible vigour and strength, envelop us with blessings from all sides. 9

O supreme Lord, the only object of our devotion, may our fellow-brothers bear no malice towards us. May mortal men never hurt us. Keep us away from all adversaries, O merciful God. 10

Just as in the cosmos, the circumstationed planetary body derives light from the sun, similarly the mind and speedy vital forces derive light and life from the God-blessed inner soul. 1

May they harness to the car of their human body of lovely highly-spirited, enduring and speedy compound faculties (mental and vital) to reach their destination. 2

O mortals, you owe your rise to eminence to that resplendent God who with the rays of the dawn awakens life in the lifeless and gives form to the formless. 3

Thereafter the compound faculties, inspired by the inner self for work and worship, resume to conceive their task as the mother conceives life in the embryo. 4

Aided by the speedy vital and mental faculties, may you traverse places difficult of access, and discover divine enlightenment as a cowherd recovers cows hidden in a cave. 5

Illustrious seekers of divine wisdom, conscious of the greatness of supreme Self, glorify the all-wise and self-resplendent God, in the same manner as the reciters of hymns do for enlightenment. 6

The vital powers, strengthened by the mental conciousness of the inner self, rejoice and shine with equal splendour. 7

This sacred rite is performed to adore the invincible power of the soul, along with the blameless, brilliant and aimable hosts of compound faculties (mental and vital). 8

Therefore, O compound faculties, may all of you come here whether from celestial space (knowledge-phase) or from far-off galaxies (bliss-phase) ; as in this rite we are reciting hymns in your adoration alone. 9

Verily, we seek the gift for light for inner-self ; may be it comes from this earthly region (physico-material-phase),or from this celestial space (knowledge-phase) or from the vast firmament (bliss-phase). 10

The chanters of the Sāman extol the resplendent Lord with songs, the reciters of the Ṛk with prayers, the priests of the Yajuṣ with divine verses. 1

The resplendent Lord the wielder of adamantine justice, is the co-ordinater of all elements. At His command all cosmic energies are harnessed to the richly-decorated aura and they come speedily to our help. 2

The resplendent Lord elevated the sun in the sky to render all things visible and charged the clouds with abundant waters. 3

O invincible resplendent Lord, may you, with insuperable defences, protect us in the struggles of hard life. 4

We invoke our ally, the resplendent Lord, for great prosperity and wisdom, and for protection against evil forces. 5

Therefore, O Lord, showerer of blessings and granter of all desires, may you break open the dark clouds of evil forces and comply with our requests. 6

In every succeeding danger and distress we invoke your help. Whatever our invocations, they are all for you, O resplendent Lord. We cannot find words to pay a befitting homage to you. 7

The mighty Lord invests men with His strength and showers His blessings on them and defends, as a bull defending a herd of kine. 8

God alone rules over men. The whole universe is His kingdom. He alone controls and directs our five cognizant senses. 9

We invoke God from anywhere. May He be exclusively our own. 10

O resplendent Lord, may you bless us with that spiritual wealth which is everlasting and which would lead us to victory and power, and protect us from evil forces. 1

Whereby, we, under your auspices, resolve our internal conflicts and become messenger of peace and prosperity in the world. 2

O almighty God, may we, armed with your powerful divine force, completely annihilate our inner vices in the struggles of life and be victorious. 3

O supreme God, may we with the aid of virtues, vigour, valour and sharp intellect, provided by you, conquer our enemies, however remote and hidden in our subconciousness. 4

Great is our God, greater than the greatest,—beyond our measure. He is boundless, much beyond the celestial space and is the source of all greatness. 5

May our wise and pious men attain their wishes in the struggles of their own personal life and secure prosperity for their descendents. 6

God has infinite powers and capacity to draw and discharge like oceans, He protects the entire objects of creation by His radiance. Like oceans He collects and like the sunrays, He disperses. 7

So, His bounteous gifts and divine wisdom and wealth are given to His devotees as spontaneously as ripe fruit from a loaded branch. 8

So, too, resplendent God, your magnificent gifts are readily bestowed on dedicated persons like me. 9

Come to us, resplendent God, with all your grandeur and majesty, to guide the sincere seeker of truth in his pursuit and accept his homage with delight. 1

May these ecstatic devotional songs so composed and loving invocations be offered to the rejoicing resplendent God, the accomplisher of all things. 2

O all-knowing, resplendent God, the seer of all, may we feel your grace in all our efforts. May you be pleased to take us in your communion. May you reciprocate our prayers. 3

Resplendent God, showerer of blessings and protector of your worshippers, I have sung to you the divine hymns with the hope that they would reach you. We invoke you for their acceptance. 4

Resplendent God, bestow on us your precious rare benefits, which would be enough and more than enough for us, and are thine and only thine. 5

O embodiment of total selfless actions, the chanters of the Sāma extol you with songs, the reciters of the Ṛk with prayers, the priests of the Yajuḥ with their prose and thereby elevate the honour of their family and descendants. 1

When your earnest seeker in his pursuit ascends rung by rung, God, you also assist him in his endeavour, enlighten his path and bless him for success. 2

O resplendent God and accepter of devotions, come to us and lead us with your splendid inspiring and vigorous revelations and virtues manifested in this wonderful world. 3

To Him alone we pray for friendship, for wealth and for valour; He alone is powerful, and He alone can protect us from injury and confer wealth on us. 6

O bounteous God, throw open the gates of knowledge and wealth, for only you can render them easy attainment and give us in abundance. 7

All the evil forces of the earth and celestial regions are ineffective in your presence. May you give strength to our noble efforts, mental or physical, to the fullest extent. 8

Omniscient God, you hear every word, even every heart-throb, however feebly expressed. Listen quickly to my invocations; accept my loving utterances as it were from a friend. 9

We know you, O generous giver of blessings. You respond to the call of devotees whenever they are in trouble. We invoke you for protection and you shower a thousand-fold bounties on us which protect us like the shield. 10

As the sun breaks open the dense dark clouds which obstruct the rays of the light, (or as concealed cattle is released from a cave by breaking open its doors), so God removes evil forces and brightens the path of virtuous devotees. Wise men can cast out fear when they have found God as their ally. 5

Attracted by your bounties, I again come, O mighty God, to you, singing your glory in full-throated voice. All right-minded faithful men come to you for your blessings, as they have known your munificence. 6

Resplendent God, let the deceitful and tyrannous people be defeated by honest people through their clever strategy. May they (the virtuous and honest) be rewarded by you with abundant wealth and food. 7

Even more, with full faith and enthusiasm than ever, may the reciters of sacred hymns sing the glories of God, the sovereign master of the universe whose bounties are thousands, beyond the counts. 8

We accept adorable God as the messenger of all virtues, presiding over our sacred performaces, and the source of all inspirations. We adore Him as we acclaim Him as the perfecter of benevolent deeds. 1

With dedicated noble deeds and invocations we offer homage to our lord of men, most enlightened and respendent Lord, beloved of many. Assuredly, He will respond to our offerings with a generous heart. 2

Through the adorable God. the terrestrial and cosmic fires are also kindled. May we all sing the glory of God, who is ever-young and all-wise. He is the only guardian of virtuous devotees. He accepts earnest offerings and showers on us His blessings generously. 6

May we worship, the all-wise, the all-knowing and the supreme sustainer of eternal laws. He is the one who destroys evils, apparent or concealed, through His supreme goodness. 7

O adorable God, messenger of all virtues, may you be the protector of him, who serves you through his pious actions, and who dedicates his life to the service of mankind. 8

May you, O purifier, be propitious to him who approaches you through honest devotion and through pious mind dedicated to the well-being of the needy and saintly. 9

Adorable God, may you inspire enlightened devotees who have assembled for work and worship and impel them to make united efforts for good of mankind. 10

O adorable God, we invoke you at our place of work and worship, and may we feel your radiance of purity and benevolence; may you be pleased by our wide-ranging prayers. 12

O all purifying adorable God, thoroughly enlightened, may you bring down to us the bounties of Nature, and may we perform the fire-ceremony to receive these bounties. 1

O wise and adorable, your awareness purifies and protects each and every part of the human body. May our noble deeds bring to us the bounties of Nature, material and spiritual. 2

I invoke the most adorable Lord, the one praised by all people, the sweet-tongued, completely dedicated, and the giver of nature's gifts. 3

O adorable God, enlighten hither the sense-organs; accompanying the wonderfully convenient body-chariot. You are the guardian of the interests of men. 4

O wise devotees, may you offer your tender and affectionate regards to adorable God to attain divine bliss, whilst you pour out the nectar of clarified butter (in the fire-ceremony) and spread the grassy-seats. 5

May the doors of divine knowledge and selfless service be set open this day and this very moment, so that we perform our sacred work unhampered. 6

May I admire the beauty of night and dawn, also at the time of this fire-ceremony; Nature has already provided them with a grassy-seat (as if, in the firmament). 7

I invoke both the sweet-tongued and eloquent divine poets, in order that they may bless and conduct the work of our fire-ceremony. 8

May the ever-glorious blissful virtues—ila, saraswati, mahi wisdom, speech and prosperity—occupy respectable places in our ceremony. 9

We invoke the supreme architect of this infinitely vast creation, who reveals His glory through splendid multifold manifestations. May He be solely ours. 10

O God, bestower of wealth of herbs and plants, we offer homage to you through our noble deeds and thoughts. May divine knowledge be our reward. 11

May we offer auspicious prayers to the resplendent Lord with the exclamation of SVAHA at the residence of the worshipper. We call also upon Nature's bounties to help us here. 12

14

May you be present with us, O mighty God, with all your Nature's bounties, whilst we adore you and pray, and may you bless those who pray with sweet emotional expressions and keep us away from selfish activities. 1

Adorable Lord, may you be with us for our enlightenment; the intellectuals extol your divine virtues. May you come to us along with Nature's bounties. 2

May our aspirants of wealth and wisdom, equipped with hard labour and learning, entreat the Lord of universe through devotional acts and prayers for getting material and spiritual prosperity. 7

May God, the bestower of all fortunes, grant wealth of every kind, ever-given to any one. May this wealth of ours be utilized for the benefit of the divines (i. e. for the welfare of humanity and not for self-gratification). 8

May those who seek and give true wealth and wisdom be firmly established in the world and command respect in their society. May they dedicate their work to God. 9

May you be generous to us, O benefactor, the prime cause of all the creation. We adore you, and invoke. Be with us and reveal your glory to us through your splendour. 10

The twin faculties—mental and vital—are accompanied and blessed by the brilliant wisdom of God, and they work through eternal laws. May our devotional offerings to God go to enrich these divine faculties. 11

May the supreme benefactor be identified with the household fire and thus partake in the welfare of every being in the family. May He have due regards for those who worship Him with devotion. 12

O resplendent God, accepter of our sweet devotional expressions, let your shining light, swift and radiant as the sun, reveal your glory. O bestower of bliss, please be with us. 1

O merciful resplendent God, please be with us and assist us in our noble deeds with your infinitely swift and all-wise goodness, and accept our offerings. 4

Please accept our devotions and be with us at this place of work and worship. All our deeds are dedicated to you alone. All our devotions flow unto you. May you accept them like a thirsty stag eagerly looking for water. 5

These over-flowing sweet expressions of intense devotions are for you only, O God. Accept them whether they are sprayed above in the sky or sprinkled on lowly grass. May you accept them and be ever-generous to bless us. 6

May these prayers, melodious and touching, stir your heart and be ever acceptable. Accept these prayers poured forth from the inmost of our heart. 7

Almighty God, the dispeller of evil forces, is present at every place of sacred performance, carrying His blessings, and accepts our devotions that gladden His heart. 8

May you, therefore, O God, embodiment of selfless noble actions, fulfil our desire for all wealth and wisdom. We offer our profound meditations and praises to you. 9

I seek the protection of almighty God, the sovereign ruler of the universe, the Lord of vitality and God of peace and prosperity; may He bless us with happiness. 1

For, He is ever the guardian of mankind and grants protection to His loyal devotees, of whom I am one. 2

Pray, grant us wealth, O almighty Lord, the source of all vitality, peace and prosperity; may we be blessed to remain always by your side. 3

May these devotional prayers offered in congregation by persons of pure words and thoughts be acceptable to you and may the persons be rewarded with your choicest blessings. 4

The resplendent God, the source of vitality, is the only giver among the givers of thousands; only He is to be praised for all the blessings that are received from Nature's forces working at His command. 5

Through His protection we earn, and whilst we earn it, it must be preserved and multiplied. 6

I invoke you God, the almighty, the source of vitality, for manifold wealth, and please let us have victory over the evils that torment us. 7

The mightiest of the mighty, the king of kings, please quickly bestow happiness upon us, for our thoughts go to you and you alone. 8

May the earnest praise, and the congregational praise, which I offer to you, O Lord of vitality, reach you for your acceptance and response. 9

Protect us, O all-wise God, so that no cruel censure of a malevolent creature may reach us. 3

The mortal brave, whom the almighty, the all-wise and showerer of blessings, protects, never meets destruction. 4

O Lord the preceptor, blissful, may you keep away mortals from committing sins. 5

I solicit understanding from the presiding Lord, the desirable, the bountiful and the wonderful, who befriends souls. 6

Without His assistance, invocations do not reach Him even if offered by intellectuals. He verily would lead us to our objective. 7

Through Him may our invocations become worthy to commune with His divine self. 8

He, the illustrious leader, leads His devotee on the divine path, makes him resolute in mind and assists him to achieve extensive results from his selfless service. 9

Earnestly we invoke you to dwell in the innermost chambers of our heart, to accept our loving devotions to you. Please come to us, O adorable God, with your vital forces. 1

None of the cosmic forces nor any person in particular deserves our dedication. Please come to us, O Lord of spiritual fire, with vital forces to accept our offerings of deep love. 2

No one except you is divine and devoid of malignity. No one knows who causes the great waters to come down and who presides over the eternal laws; please come to us, O adorable Lord, with the vital forces. 3

No one knows, who is fierce and mighty, who commands the rain to come down and who has unconquerable strength. Please come to us, O adorable God, with vital forces, to embrace us and enlighten. 4

O adorable God, may you come to us with vital forces, brilliant, terrific and yet benevolent and protective. 5

O Lord of spiritual fire, may you be with us with vital forces working behind the luminaries in the radiant celestial regions beyond the sun. 6

O adorable God, please be with us with vital forces which scatter the clouds, and set in motion the cosmic forces. 7

O adorable God, please be with us with vital forces which work through the clouds, through the rays of the sun and with their vigour agitate the ocean. 8

O adorable God, may you be with us with your vital forces; I pour out the devotional prayers, sweet like elixir, which may lovingly be accepted by you, and enjoyed. 9

This hymn, rich in thoughts, has been addressed by the sages with their own mouths to the learned. 1

Efforts of such persons alone will lead to glorious success as they dedicate themselves to God selflessly with their words, thoughts and skill. 2

With the aid of two universally-true-laws (particularized and generalized) these learned and spiritualized sages have carved out the ideal way to a progressive and happy society. Also, they speak such sublime words, as would inspire mankind for ever. 3

These prudent persons, preservers of a sacred heritage, being honest and straight-forward, consistently strive to promote these eternal principles of life. 4

Together they receive and enjoy the blessings of the resplendent, venerable, ever-shining supreme Lord. 5

These enlightened sages first observe and make a deep study of the secrets of God's creation, and of divine knowledge and then repeatedly form their own versions invested with new vigour and suited to the times. 6

Together and individually, through their sevenfold benevolent deeds, they attain threefold glory—(physical, mental, and spiritual). 7

Through their pious acts, these illustrious sages receive their share of the reverential homage, dedicated to the supreme Lord and Nature's bounties. 8

I invoke hither the resplendent and adorable Lord to whom we offer our devotions; let Him, acceptor of the nectar of bliss, receive our humble offerings. 1

O men, praise the resplendent and adorable Lord in your sacred worship, and sing unto Him the hymns in Gayatri verses. 2

We invoke the resplendent and adorable Lord, the preserver of the spiritual fire of devotees, offering heartfelt expressions of devotion. 3

Strengthened by that faith, we invoke the resplendent adorable Lord. May He be with us hither to awaker divine consciousness and happiness. 4

May the mighty resplendent and adorable presiding Lord render the fiends (men dangerous to society) powerless and make sterile the devourers of the virtuous. 5

O supreme and glorious God, preserver of the virtuous, may you continue to be the bestower of truth and justice, stationed in a position where you have a full knowledge of the consequences of our actions. May you bestow happiness upon us. 6

22

Awaken the pair of mental and vital powers. Yoke them every morning in work and worship. May they experience the joy of spiritual eminence. 1

We invoke these divine vital powers animating the chariot of the human body. May they touch the height of spiritual radiance. 2

O vital powers, the innermost chamber of the prayerful devotee, to which you are proceeding in your car, is not far from you. 4

For preservation, I invoke the divine creator, imbued with golden radiance. Only realization of His nature leads one to the final destination. 5

Worship the eternal divine creator alone for protection; with the aid of His imperishable laws we can achieve our noble aspirations. 6

We invoke the source of light, the divine creator, bestower of a wonderful home full of wealth and wisdom. 7

May our friends assemble and sit down to pay homage to the divine creator, for only He can bestow divine wisdom. 8

O adorable God, may you depute all the vital virtues of cosmos and Nature's bounties to embellish our devotional prayers. 9

O adorable God, may all the lovable virtues, generosity, wisdom, knowledge and intellect gather here to promote our well-being and guidance. 10

May these divine virtues, full of infinite vigour and preserving faculties, be with us in all our activities for our protection and happiness. 11

I invoke all virtues, venerability, resplendence and adoration, O glorious God, for spiritual bliss and felicity. 12

May the Lord of the terrestrial and celestial regions bless us and give us strength to achieve our aspirations. 13

The spiritualized sages, through their wisdom and worship, enjoy ever-increasing spiritual bliss which takes them to the highest level of righteousness here and beyond. 14

May our enjoyment on this earth be devoid of painful experiences and may we have a comfortable place to live and may we enjoy the full span of a happy life. 15

May the omnipresent God, along with Nature's bounties, preserve us on that part of the earth whence the Lord measured the seven regions. (This refers to that part of the earth on which the divine revelation came to men through seven metres of the Vedic verses). 16

The omnipresent and the all-powerful God dominates over all the three regions, earth, mid-region and the celestial. His one step is rooted in the deep dark mystery, beyond the knowledge of mankind. 17

The omnipresent God, the preserver of the indomitable, created three regions, the earth, mid-region and the celestial. He sustains and preserves the sanctity of all vital functions that keep life ticking. 18

Behold the marvellous creations of omnipresent God who fulfills our noble aspirations. He is a true friend of the soul. 19

The wise and true seekers realize God through meditation within their own self; they see Him vividly as the eye ranges over the sky. 20

By transcendental meditation and pious acts the vigilant seeker of truth realizes the all-pervading God within the innermost cavity, the supreme abode of the Lord. 21

These melodious and blissful devotional hymns are poured forth from the heart of devotees; may you be with us, O God, the source of vital breath, and accept them. 1

We invoke God, the source of enlightenment and vitality, to accept our devotional offerings. 2

The sages invoke the all-wise, glorious vital God, who is ever present far and near, who has countless eyes to witness all our actions for our preservation. 3

We invoke the most venerable, the most vital, most friendly and sublime God to accept our devotional offerings. 4

We invoke the most venerable and resplendent God, who with eternal truth encourages us to perform noble and pious actions. 5

May the venerable God protect us on all occasions; may the sun provide us with all defences; may both of them make us most opulent. 6

We invoke resplendent God, associated with vital powers in this world, for accepting our devotional prayers. May the resplendent God and vital powers bring us joy from all sides. 7

The divine vital powers, in association with the resplendent God, are benefactors of mankind. May they hear our invocations. 8

O learned persons, may you destroy the darkness of ignorance with the blessings of the resplendent God. Let not evil-minded men ever prevail over us. 9

We, the seekers of knowledge, invoke Nature's bounties, powerful vital powers and other wealth born of the mother earth. O Lord of celestial regions, may they come to bless us and accept us and accept our devotional prayers. 10

O men, whenever you march ahead on a noble mission, these vital powers will lead you along with heroic loud exclamations of victory. 11

Born of spiritual radiance, may the vital powers give us protection, happiness and prosperity. 12

As a shepherd brings back, and exhibits before others, the lost lamb, in the same way the bright sun having made the firmament wonderful by its light, brings to the earth the heavenly bliss. 13

The resplendent God, the nourisher of all, knows fully the hidden bliss dwelling like a sovereign in the cave of our heart. 14

As a cultivator who ploughs with bullocks raises barley from the earth, in the same way God successivly brings out the six seasons along with the bounties of the lunar months. 15

As mothers always bring happiness to their children, in the same manner, the streams, nourishers of mankind, flow incessantly, adding milk and honey to their waters all the way. 16

May these streams of water which are contiguous to the sun (in the sense that water is carried away by rays) and those waters with which the Sun is associated, be propitious to our sacred work and worship. 17

I invoke the Lord for the divine waters which are enjoyed by the rays of the sun. For these flowing streams, we offer our gratitude (to the Lord). 18

O learned persons, may you know that there is ambrosia in the waters, there is healing balm in them, and there are medicinal herbs; know this, and by their proper use become wiser. 19

Wise men have acclaimed that within the waters dwell all balms that heal, the waters contain all healing herbs, and also the fire, the benefactor of the universe. 20

O waters, bring to perfection all disease-dispelling medicaments for the up-keep of my body, so that I may live long to see the bright sun. 21

O waters, take away whatever is wrong or deficient in me, though I may have knowingly violated or deliberately not followed the exhortations (of the elders in respect of conducts of a healthy life) or taken to untruth. 22

I have just now entered the waters; I have become one with the spirit of this water. May the fire-divine (the divine energy), abiding in the waters, come and infuse divine vigour in me. 23

O fire-divine, infuse divine vigour in me and confer progeny and long life. May I have the blessings of Nature's bounties from the seers and from the resplendent Lord. 24

Tell me, amongst so many immortal divinities of the universe who is the self-radiant, and whose glory we should meditate on; and after having lived a full life, who will deliver us to the living world so that we may be born again to see a father and a mother. 1

The supreme God, the foremost adorable, whose auspicious name we meditate on, will deliver us back to the world so that we may be born again to see a father and a mother. 2

O divine creator, the ever-protector, you are the Lord of precious things, therefore, we ask earnestly of our share in the enjoyments of the world. 3

We invoke you for that prosperity full of kindness which lies in your hand and is available to them who are free from hatred. 4

O supreme Lord, the possessor of wealth, we shall strive to attain the heights of affluence under your protection for the benefit of all and sundry. 5

Not even those birds, that fly high through the air, attain the height of your summit, nor your strength and vigour; not even these, the waters that flow on for ever, nor hills which abate the wind's wild fury. 6

The venerable Lord, the sovereign master of the universe, sustains erect the tree's stem in the baseless region; its branches spreading in the downward direction, whilst its root is high above. May they become concentrated in us as the sources of existence. 7

The venerable king of the universe determines the broad path of the sun by which he travels on his daily course, a path to traverse in pathless space. May He repel every obstructing force that might cause darkness and destroy the living force of life. 8

O venerable king, a hundred balms are yours, a thousand to endure pains and teach us how to heal our wounds. May your blessings be all-pervasive and profound. May you keep us afar from falsehood. Far away, may you drive off destruction, and liberate us from sins that have been committed by us. 9

These constellations are set high in the heaven above us; they are visible in night, and go elsewhere by day. Our venerable Lord's laws remain always unviolated, and accordingly by night, the moon moves on in its splendour. 10

Praising you with devotional prayers, I implore you to enlighten me with that sacred knowledge which the worshippers seek through offerings and reciting sacred hymṇs. O venerable Lord, do not look at us with disdain and do not deprive us of our life-span. 11

That is what the wise men tell us every day, every night, and this is what our heart seeks to know. May the highly intelligent men help us in our liberation from the evil, and may the venerable Lord set us free. 12

Even a highly intelligent man is seized and bound to the three-fold pillars—(birth, life and death). He invokes immortal God. May the all-wise, glorious God liberate him; may He loosen his bonds and make him immortal. 13

Through prostration and devotional prayers and virtuous actions we implore you to loosen the bonds of our sins; O venerable Lord, be with us and save us from the evils we have committed. 14

O venerable Lord, loosen the bonds that hold me, loosen the bonds upper, middle and lower. We shall obey your eternal laws, faithfully follow your command and thereby avoid sin. 15

Desire to cling to life interferes with my tranquil meditations, as the birds that return and hover around their nest. 4

When shall we for our own happiness completely surrender to you, O venerable Lord, eminent in strength and guide of all men ? 5

May you accept the common invocation (to God and the sun), being kind to the giver and undertaker of this pious pledge. 6

He who knows the path of the birds flying (flight of desires) through the air, He abiding in the ocean knows the course of ships, the destination of life. 7

God, the Lord of the pledges, and acceptor of offerings, alone knows the secrets of the twelve months and divisions arising therefrom. 8

He who knows the course of the powerful cosmic winds, also knows those which lie much above in the celestial regions. 9

Supreme sovereignty is of our venerable Lord, the acceptor of holy rites, guide of all actions, and He becomes one with His children. 10

He alone is capable of seeing through the marvels of the present and future. 11

He gives glory to mankind not only outwardly, but He is present in our innermost being. 15

My searching thoughts revert to Him who is omniscient, and who is like kine going back to pasture. 16

Allow us to proclaim, O gracious Lord, that you have accepted our offerings and worship. 17

I have seen Him whom all may see. I am feeling the presence of His divine chariot above the earth—His activity around us—I am sure He has accepted my devotional songs. 18

I invoke you, O venerable Lord, to make this day a happy one. I implore you for your helpful blessings. 19

O omniscient God, your glory enlightens the celestial, terrestrial and all the other regions of the universe. May you listen to my prayers and respond, and bless me with prosperity. 20

May you release us from the upper bond, untie the bond between, and loosen the bonds below, that we may live. 21

O Lord of cosmic energy, assume your vestments (of light) and assist us in our noble acts. 1

O adorable God, ever-fresh and ever-young, may your radiant being help and guide us in our duties. 2

O adorable one, you are like a father that guides his son, a friend that helps his friend, and a brother that assists his brother. 3

O venerable God, destroyer of evil forces, pleasant law-giver, may you live in our inner-self, even as you grace other external human endeavours. 4

You are generous in your eternal friendship to humanity; listen to our repeated invocations and take delight in our prayers. 5

Whatever we offer in repeated and plentiful oblations in the recognition of Nature's bounties, is assuredly an offering to you. 6

May the Lord of men, and the performer of dedicated acts, the gracious and the noble, be dear to us, and may we also be dear to our Lord by our spiritual fervour. 7

Blessed by you, men with spiritual fervour imbibe the best of your qualities; may they use them to help mankind. 8

O adorable God, may both of them, those who are blessed with learning and the others who are not, cooperate with each other for the progress of mankind. 9

O kind-hearted venerable God, the source of strength, may you with your life-giving energies help us in the performance of noble deeds, guide us with sacred wisdom, and bless us with plenty of food. 10

With deep reverence, we express our obligations to the virtues of the fire-divine, the sovereign Lord of fire-rituals, whose flames resemble the hairy tail of a horse. 1

May He (the fire-divine), the source of our strength, with his fleeting and vigorous energies shower down on us (Nature's gifts). 2

May you, O adorable Lord, who is present everywhere, protect us, whether near or afar, from men seeking to do us injury. 3

O adorable God, may you distribute to Nature's agents the essence of our offerings (in the fire-ceremonies) and awaken in our hearts the wisdom contained in the newest hymns (of the divine texts). 4

May you procure for us the sustenance that comes down to us from the celestial region and the interspace, and grant us the wealth that is on this earth. 5

You are the possessor of wonderful radiance. You are the dispenser of blessings like the waves of a river, parted by interjacent (islets) and you generously shower your blessings on the person who completely surrenders to you. 6

O adorable God, the man whom you protect in internal and external conflicts, becomes free from all vices and he attains eternal wisdom. 7

You are an embodiment of endurance and you never transgress the laws established by yourself. May you bless the person who battles against all vices and never transgresses your regulations and laws. 8

May the person, blessed by the learned, and by whom all people stand protected, lead us across the struggles and make us victorious and bestow on us rich bounties. 9

O cosmic Lord, earnest to prayers, may you enter into the spirit of our songs of praise for the completion of the sacrifice that benefits all mankind. 10

May the vast illimitable, precursor of light, and resplendent adorable Lord inspire us with wisdom and strength. 11

May the Omniscient, adorable and effulgent God listen to our sacred divine prayers and shower blessings on us as a generous master gives to the needy. 12

We offer our reverence to Nature's great bounties—reverence to those who are old, and reverence to them who are young. May we speak with the force at our command, the glory of all the divine powers. May we not overlook any of them, however big (or small). 13

O resplendent soul, this broad based stone, the root-cause of creation, is placed high for grinding and extracting the essence, which is wisdom and happiness. Please do recognize and partake the effusions of the mortar, coming out with divine rhythm. 1

O resplendent soul, during any noble performance, when there are two platters for containing the juice, broad like the hips, please do recognize and partake the effusions of the mortar, coming out with divine rhythm. 2

O resplendent soul, as a housewife learns and practises giving and collecting substances ground in the mortar, and teaches others to do so, so please do recognize and partake the effusions of the mortar, coming out with divine rhythm. 3

O resplendent soul, when a cord is used with a churning staff to restrain and guide it, like reins for the horse, please do recognize and partake the effusions of the mortar, coming out with divine rhythm. 4

Indeed, O mortar, you are present in every home giving out rhythmic sounds; may you give forth a lusty sound like the drum of the conquerors. 5

O Lord of the forest, as the wind gently blows before you, so also O mortar, gently prepare the essence of wisdom and happiness to be made acceptable to the inner soul. 6

O sacrificial implements, stretch your wide jaws, like hay-horses champing the grains. 7

May we propose and offer the sweet extracted essence of wisdom and happiness to the resplendent soul (just as a man extracts the essence of herbs by grinding them in a mortar with a pestle). 8

May this spread the remains of the spiritual essence (of wisdom and happiness) upon the platters, sprinkle it upon the blades of grass, the filters, and place the residue upon the cow hide. 9

Note: The platters are the pranamaya and manomaya kosas (the vital and mental sheaths). The essence of knowledge and happiness (which are the contents of the vijnanamaya and anandamaya kosas) passes on to the self, known as Indra.

O resplendent Lord of boundless wisdom, and ocean of spiritual bliss, even if we be unworthy (according to high standards) may you enrich us with unlimited prosperity, physical, mental and spiritual. 1

O handsome and mighty Lord of food, your benevolence endures for ever. O resplendent Lord of boundless wisdom may you enrich us with unlimited prosperity,-physical, mental and spiritual. 2

Let the messengers of attachment (sloth and violence) go to sleep; looking at each other, let them sleep, never to wake up. O resplendent God of boundless wisdom, may you enrich us with unlimited prosperity,—physical, mental and spiritual. 3

O hero, may those who are our enemies sleep and those who are our friends be awake. O resplendent God of boundless wisdom, may you enrich us with unlimited prosperity,—physical, mental and spiritual. 4

O resplendent God, possessor of boundless wisdom, destroy this ass (of our evils), that keeps braying in a discordant tone; O resplendent Lord of boundless wisdom, may you enrich us with unlimited prosperity,—physical, mental and spiritual. 5

Let the adverse stormy wind, with its wayward course, alight after—in some barren forest. O resplendent Lord of boundless wisdom, may you enrich us with unlimited prosperity,—physical, mental and spiritual. 6

(On the material side, the prosperity consists in having thousands of bright and healthy cows and horses).

Slay all those who revile devotees and commit violence against them. O resplendent Lord of boundless wisdom, may you enrich us with unlimited prosperity,—physical, mental and spiritual. 7

May we, desirous of wealth and wisdom, offer homage, and fill with devotions, the heart of the resplendent God, the embodiment of selfless actions just as the farmers dig a well and fill their fields with water. 1

May our sublime and pure devotions flow in hundreds and thousands of streams to the resplendent God like the river rushing down to join the ocean. 2

All the prayers, which are poured forth to please the resplendent God, are treasured in the heart of God like water in the vast ocean. 3

This devotional prayer is offered to you. Please accept it as a pigeon, eagerly awaiting his pregnant mate. 4

O valiant resplendent God, Lord of affluence, acceptor of prayers, may genuine prosperity be the reward of your faithful devotee. 5

Come to us, O embodiment of total selfless actions, for protection from our fears and help us to overpower them. May we establish communion with you for our guidance. 6

On every occasion, in every noble work, we invoke the resplendent God, the best amongst our friends, for our protection and happiness. 7

When He listens to our invocations, He assuredly comes to us with thousands of generous bounties and benedictions. 8

I too invoke you in right earnest, O resplendent God who creates the universe with eternal elements; our preceptors and ancestors have also been invoking the same. 9

O enjoyer of the essence of wisdom and happiness, friend of our lovely featured dame—the intellect, and the friend of others who also enjoy the same essence, may you bestow upon us abundance of cows with firm jaws. 11

O mighty God, acceptor of the divine essence, dispeller of all our miseries, we yearn for your friendship and beseech you to respond to our love. 12

May you share our spiritual joy, O resplendent God. May we have abundant nourishment, and may our intellect be bright and sharp, so that full of devotion and wealth, we may live in perfect bliss in union with you. 13

O Lord, the vanquisher, let your self-radiant divinity bestow promptly, when solicited, bounties upon your devotees, as the spokes of a wheel tend to the axle for speed and unity. 14

O resplendent God, embodiment of hundreds of selfless actions and infinitely wise, may you fulfil the noble aspirations of your dedicated devotees with that constancy with which the movements of the car are related to the axle. 15

Resplendent soul obtains strength through the aid of sense organs, who are like horses champing, neighing and snorting. It has been given a golden chariot of human body as a gift. 16

May the powerful mental and vital forces be with us and provide us plentiful nourishment as if brought on steeds. May these dispellers of poverty speedily come to us with brilliant intellect (gold) and happiness (cattle). 17

O God, destroyer of the wicked, your gift of body to us, is as if an imperishable chariot, (with the immortal soul residing within a cavity). It aspires to reach beyond this material world across space. 18

O the pair of vital and mental faculties, you have one wheel in the mortal material body, while the other of the spirit soars high in search of the immortal. Only you can take us to the desired destination. 19

O dawn, what mortal does enjoy you ? Who is pleased by praise ? Whom mighty one, O radiant, do you affect ? 20

O dawn, wonderfully brilliant, diffuse and tinted, we do not know (her limits) whether seen from nigh or far. 21

May the dawn (the intellect), who is like the daughter of the celestial region, approach us and give us nourishment and perpetuate our wealth. 22

O adorable God, you are the first and foremost essence of life; you are the revealer of the divine knowledge. You are the giver of bliss to the enlightened persons, and friend to your devotees, whose actions are guided by your eternal laws. In your supervision the righteous persons, activated through wisdom, become seers and virtuous. 1

O adorable God, you are the first and foremost essence of life; you enforce (as a supreme sage) the eternal laws. Under your care, all the vital forces,—sapient, manifold and intelligent,—and as if offspring of two mothers, (i. e. of spiritual and material), commenced their work, as a worship to you for the benefit of mankind. 2

O adorable Lord, presiding over the vital forces, you become manifested to a worshipper as a result of his devotion. The celestial and terrestrial regions tremble (at your command). O Lord of wealth, you preside over all the ceremonial performances of worship, which wise sages are assigned to perform. O Lord, through you the Nature's other bounties have attained perfection. 3

O adorable God, you have made the ethereal space as the sustainer of sound in the interests of mankind. When the sun is set free from the churning of the parents, (the celestial and terrestrial regions), then he is first taken to the east, and thence he moves to the west. 4

You fulfil all our noble aspirations, O adorable God; you bless your worshipper as he raises the ladle in the fire-ritual. We invcke you for elevating the devotee, who understands the deeper meaning of invocation and oblation. You are the provider of sustenance. You are the first to bestow light and give wisdom and strength to all our folk. 5

O all-wise and all-seeing God, direct the ignorant worshipper, who follows the wrong paths and help him to revert to the acts which will reclaim him. You always protect in times of conflicts those who are feeble, but on the path of truth, against those who are strong but on the wrong path. 6

O adorable God, you lift up the mortal man to superb immortality by providing sustenance. On the wise you bestow happiness and sustenance in both lives, the present one and the one to come. 7

The adorable God who is praised by us, makes our devotee illustrious so that he wins for us stores of riches; may we improve upon the fire-ritual with new innovations; may this earth and heaven, along with Nature's other bounties, provide us with protection. 8

O adorable God, irreproachable, ever vigilant, illuminator of justice, disseminator of knowledge, may we be illustrious among the enlightened, and devoted to our parents. Please protect us and give us wealth and wisdom and all that is worthy of possession. 9

O inviolable, all knowing adorable God, you are our father. We are your kinsmen. May you grant us new life endowed with knowledge and happiness. Let us also acquire wealth and wisdom in hundreds and thousands. You are the defender of the persons performing noble acts, and you also favour those who are good and virtuous. 10

O adorable God, through the earliest enlightened sages, you revealed the sacred teachings of the Vedas for mortal men; and the divine wisdom became herself the instructress of the son of man, the earliest father of my race. 11

O adorable God, preserve your devotees with your bounties; you are the defender of the cattle for the son of my son, who is ever assiduous in your worship. 12

O adorable God, you are charitable and selfless. You supervise with eyes in all the four directions without attachment and prejudice. You are the benevolent protector of all pious people and embodiment of selfless actions. May you protect all your pious devotees and make them illustrious. 13

O adorable God, may you grant the choicest gifts, spiritual as well as material, to your worshippers. You are called the well-intentioned protector. You protect them as father protects the son. You are all-wise and instruct your disciples about proper conduct. You define for them the points of the horizon (that is, you set the limits of their disciplines). 14

O adorable God, may you defend the man who liberally gives on every side, like a well-stitched armour. The person who keeps the choicest foods in his house, and with them entertains his guests, in fact, performs a sacrifice of life, which has the likeness of heaven. 15

O adorable God, forgive us this our negligence, this path in which we have gone astray. You are a friend and father of persons who are the performers of noble deeds. To such mortals you reveal your nature. 16

O adorable God, you go about helping every one; may you come to help such industrious persons as perform noble actions and inspire others also to do so; elevate them to a high stature, and offer them blessings. 17

O adorable God, we are offering you this prayer according to the best of our ability, according to the best of our knowledge. May you, therefore, lead us to abundance, and endow us with right understanding, and also sustenance. 18

[Vṛtra sometimes also occurs as Ahi. On physical side Vṛtra is nothing more than the accumulation of vapour condensed, shut up or obstructed by a cloud. Indra with his thunderbolt, (or electric discharge) causes condensation, and vent is given to the rain which then descends upon the earth.]

May I acclaim the valorous deeds of the resplendent soul (the lower self), which he has achieved; he has cloven the cloud of blind and dark impulses; and cast out the evil thoughts; he has broken a way for the torrents of wisdom through obstacles. 1

He has sent asunder the cloud of blind impulses seeking refuge in the obstacles. The supreme architect has conquered with his all-encompassing bolt of will-power. The clouds of passions have been broken; the water of animated evil thoughts has rapidly rushed to the heart, like cows hastening to the calves. 2

The powerful soul accumulated his strength in three virtuous directions,—physical, mental and spiritual. He sharpened his will-power and struck the first born of the evil impulses, the sexual one. 3

O powerful soul, since you have subdued the foremost impulse, which is the prime cause of delusions, and thereby since you generated the light of wisdom to shine on the horizon of human mind, you have not left a sinful impulse to disturb you. 4

With his great assailing will power the powerful soul again strikes the wounded evil-mind, which still lies there prostrate, like trunks of trees felled by the axe. 5

The wounded, but arrogant sinful mind, again defies the mighty soul, who scatters and weakens the dark and blind impulses; but the animated sinful impulses, again gather and break the barriers set by the soul. 6

Having done this damage, the evil mind, though without hand or foot, again assails the soul, who thereupon strikes the mind with his full force. Thereafter the evil-spirited mind and other mutilated baser instincts are rendered inactive, like one who pretends virility but has none to attack. 7

Thoughts that delight the soul, now flow over the mind, the prostrated and wounded, as the waters of a river, with her broken banks, flow over the fields. The mind, however, obstructs this flow. 8

The primary source of evil tendencies—the primary instincts—has been enveloping the mind like a cow covering its calf: the instincts rise above and the mind comes down underneath. The soul again strikes the source of these evil tendencies. 9

Then thoughts carry off the whirling mind, the body of the nameless, tossed into the midst of the never stopping, never-resting currents, the foe of the soul—the mind imbued with evil instincts, as if slept over for a long dark night. 10

Good impulses, beloveds of the soul, are obstructed by greed, like cows stolen by wicked people, and kept hidden. But by strangling the strength of the demoniac forces, the soul sets open the cave that had blocked the path of noble impulses to reach the sphere of the soul. 11

When you, O powerful, soul, unaided by any, return the blow, inflicted by the evil mind, you become furious like a horse's tail. You rescue good human impulses. O hero, you win our sweet devotion. You cause the spiritual elixir of seven oceans (love, truth, benevolence, austerity, contentment, generosity and knowledge) to flow freely. 12

Now, no lightning of the evil impulse, the thunder of sensuous thoughts, the rain of passions or any sort of bolt of temptation can harm the victorious soul. The triumph of the soul in the contest has been full and final over the wicked impulses. 13

O soul, while this internal battle has been in full swing, you have been ready to destroy the evil instincts of conscious and sub-conscious mind. You are hesitant for a moment, but you traverse all the adverse ninety-nine elements like a swift hawk. 14

Then O soul, the wielder of powerful spiritual power, you become the sovereign of all that is movable and immovable, of impulses and emotions, hornless (peaceful) or horned (aggressive). Now you are the monarch of men. All activities are centred within you as the circumference comprehends the spokes of a wheel. 15

Let us approach the soul for he can restore to us our lost wisdom, as he is infallible and unconquered. He bestows upon us his ever-increasing wisdom. Blessed by him, we will never fail to achieve prosperity and true knowledge. 1

We glorify Him with sacred hymns, who is invincible in any struggle. Invoked by selfless devotees, He bestows wealth and wisdom. I fly as a hawk flying to its cherished nest. 2

O mighty soul, ready to defend your believers, with your quiver bound on your back, bestowing upon us abundant wisdom, providing refuge to your worshippers,—be kind to us; take no advantage of our weakness like a wicked dealer. 3

O powerful soul, with your adamantine strength you have destroyed the cruel barbarian impulses. Perceiving the manifold destructiveness of your strength, the unbelievers and infidels have perished. 4

O fierce and unyielding soul, the infidels and those, who are enemies of selfless workers, are completely defeated. They disappear when you deny them the privilege of getting your favours here on earth or any place. 5

The followers of blind impulses encounter the band of devotees of the irreproachable soul, and those of virtuous instincts encourage them. Ultimately, the followers of blind instincts, conscious of their inferiority flee by precipitious paths, like emasculated people contending with brave men. 6

O victorious soul, you have destroyed these dark impulses, at every stage, hiding in the farthest verge of the mind, and sent them far away from the world. You have consumed the vicious instincts of all kinds—greed, anger and envy, and have received homage from virtuous men. 7

Many glamorous evil forces, decorated with gold and jewels, have been spreading over the face of the earth. But, mighty as they are, even then they triumph not over godly men. These dark forces are dispersed by the rising sun of wisdom. 8

O mighty soul, you control both good and bad. You sustain the whole living world with your magnitude. Let the unbelievers and proud usurpers be defeated through the prayers which are repeated on behalf of those who do not comprehend them. 9

When the powerful soul, the showerer of blessings, realizes that the waters of his wisdom do not cover fully the intellect of ignorant men, he firmly grasps his bolt of punitive justice and with his strength takes out the evil thoughts hiding under the cover of adverse impulses. 10

Even when virtues gather around and provide strength to the soul, whilst the evil forces raise their heads, then the soul renewed with strength and fatal powers destroys the forces of dark instincts. 11

The powerful soul sets free the flow of wisdom obstructed by the dark clouds of blind instincts, and destroys the malicious forces, who dry up the water of wisdom. He with equal swiftness and strength puts to an end the evils defying his supremacy. 12

The spiritualized soul conquers adversaries with his swift and forceful disintegrating power. He destroys their sources. He then reaches the central living place of these blind instincts, and destroys the resting place of these evil impulses, and thereupon rejoices in his victory. 13

O victorious soul, you have thus protected mankind, spreading your brilliance in all directions, as the sun protects the world by breaking the clouds with its rays. The dust of your swift movements ascends to heaven; through your favour, pure and virtuous tendencies will rise up to inspire men. 14

O powerful soul, you have given protection to excellent, pure and virtuous tendencies and have destroyed evil forces, though disguised as benefactors, for the benefit of faithful devotees. Punish and inflict pains on them who are of hostile minds, and who have long been obstructing our progress. 15

[In this set of hymns the words thrice, three-fold, three worlds, three ways, three wheels, etc. are used to connote different meanings in different contexts, denoting : God, soul and cosmos; physical, mental and spiritual; past, present and future; earth, sky and interspace; solid, fluid, and vaporous; knowledge, action and devotion; morning, mid-day and evening; sensory, ultra-sensory, and intuition; tranquillity, activity, and inertia.]

O powerful pair of vital and mental forces, be alert thrice a day (morning, mid-day and evening). Your chariot, the human body, has extensive powers, and is filled with divine gifts. Your union is as harmonious and delightful as that of illustrious day and dewy night. Shall you still suffer yourself to be restrained by divine laws and limitations ! 1

Three are the solid wheels of your splendid divine body. This is known to all spiritually realized. There are three regions above it for support, and in it you journey thrice by night, and thrice by day. 2

Thrice a day you forgive the faults of your devotees when worshipped. Thrice you shower your blessings. O the twins of mental and vital energies, bestow upon us knowledge and nourishment all the time. 3

May the supreme Lord of cosmic and individual self grace our sacred performances, and that of the other devotees. May He come to us at all the three levels of life, in three kinds of activity, and guide us and instruct in the three-fold knowledge. May He bestow three-fold blessings upon us, like rains from the sky. 4

May God grant us the three riches—physical, mental and spiritual. May He bless us thrice in our ceremonial rites. May He bless us with three-fold wisdom for all occasions. Thrice grant us prosperity, and thrice food. The daughter of the sun has ascended your three-wheeled car. 5

May God bless us thrice with all the cosmic healing powers of all the three regions—earth, sky and space. May He grant prosperity to our children. May the cherisher of herbs preserve our three systems—physical, mental and spiritual. 6

May the twin Lord of cosmic body and mind, being worshipped, thrice every day triply surround the earth. May the reality (non-untruth) seated on the car of time, repair from a distance to the three-fold, like the vital air to the living body. 7

O the twin Lord of cosmic world, thrice bless our seven mother-streams (five senses of cognizance together with mind and vital system); our all the three faculties, physical, mental and spiritual, are ready for triple activities, pervading through all the three centres of body; may you rising above the three worlds, bless the glorious sun of intellect to enlighten the path of life night and day. 8

O God, enlighten us on the location of three wheels —cardinal points, the sources of all our vital and mental energies in this three-fold divine chariot of the human body, and on the centres receiving and reflecting the light of the cosmic world, and when you will be harnessing your vehicle to come and grace the sacrifice. 9

Come to us O God, preserver of imperishable laws, to accept our devotions with love. May you relish it. The divine consciousness inspires us even before the dawn, even before our intellect is ready to grasp your deeper knowledge, and she sends her shining car of affection to bring you here. 10

May your three times eleven (33) never-failing divine sources of reality, lead us thrice to the path of consummate bliss. May God bless our offerings, prolong our life, efface our faults, restrain our evils, and be ever with us. 11

O supreme Lord, borne in your triple car (or in the car that traverses the three regions) bring to us affluence, material and spiritual, and award us progeny. I invoke you, O sovereign king of all the vital and mental forces, to protect us, and give us vigour to win over our weaknesses in our conflicts. 12

35

I invoke the foremost adorable God for well-being; I invoke Nature's other bounties such as the pair of lightning and clouds for protection. I invoke the night which brings rest to the world and I invoke the sun for prosperity. 1

The refulgent sun, springing through the obscure regions, arousing mortal and immortal, beholding the several worlds, comes as if mounted on a golden chariot. 2

The self-effulgent sun travels by an upward and by a downward path, deserving adoration. It journeys on two white horses (northern and southern solstices); it comes hither from a distance removing all darkness. 3

The many-rayed effulgent sun, having power to dispel darkness from the regions, comes mounted on a lofty, high-standing, well-decorated golden chariot, and furnished with golden yokes. 4

White beams,swift like the white-footed coursers, harnessed to the car with a golden yoke, have brought light to mankind. Men and all regions are ever in the close presence of this effulgent sun. 5

Three are the luminaries—two (terrestrial and celestial) are in the proximity of the effulgent sun, and the third one somewhere beyond the space for the liberated souls. These first two luminaries depend on the sun as a chariot upon the pin of its axle. Let him who knows (this truth) declare it (to others). 6

The solar ray illuminates the three regions (celestial, interspace and terrestrial), is deep-quivering, life-bestowing and is well-directed. Where now is the sun, the source of these radiations ? Who knows to what sphere his rays have extended ? 7

He (the sun) has lighted up the eight points of the horizon (east, north, west, south, and the four at corners), the three regions of the living beings, the seven galaxies. May the golden-eyed sun come hither. May he bestow worthy riches on the Nature's lover. 8

The gold-handed, all-beholding luminary travels between the two regions of heaven and earth, dispels diseases, and this, verily, is known as the sun, and it finally overspreads the sky, extending from the dark interspace to the celestial region. 9

May the golden-handed, life-bestowing, well-guiding, exhilarating, and affluent sun be present with us at the place of worship. The solar radiations drive away worms and germs, particularly in the evening, if duly utilized. 10

O sun, your paths are set from olden days; they are free from dust, and well-determined in space. May you travel along these paths, unobstructed and preserve us day-to-day. O effulgent, may you bless us. 11

We implore with sacred hymns the adorable God, whom the sages who desire to lead divine life, have been worshipping from time immemorial, for the fulfilment of noble desires. 1

Men with dedication have recourse to the adorable God, the augmenter of vigour. We offer homage with reverence to you. O God, the liberal giver of food, be well-disposed to us here this day, and be our protector. 2

We adopt you, O adorable, as the messenger, and as an invoker of Nature's bounties; you are endowed with knowledge. Your flames, which are eternal and mighty, spread wide around, and your splendour touches the celestial regions. 3

Nature's bounties as clouds, lightning and the sun kindle thee, O fire-divine, as their ancient messenger. The mortal man, who offers oblations to you, fire-divine, obtains from you universal wealth. 4

You, the fire-divine, are, the giver of delight, the invoker and messenger of Nature's bounties and our guardian in every home. The good and durable activities of Nature's bounties are all aggregated in you. 5

O youthful and auspicious fire (of the altar), whatever oblations are offered to you, may you, now or at any other time, carry them to the Nature's bounties (and disperse them thus on the surroundings far and wide). 6

All the earnest devotees, bright with your radiance, draw near you only, O the fire-divine. They with their devotional hymns enkindle you to win over the evil forces. 7

Under the command of the fire-within, the nature's bounties have destroyed the inner evil and made all regions, physical, mental and spiritual, worthy of stay of sublime ideas. May the fire-within, when invoked, be a benefactor to the intellect as the horse neighing in the midst of conflict for the recovery of cattle. 8

Come, O fire-within, be seated in the innermost chamber of our heart. O fire-within, let the smoke of ill-thoughts be dispersed, to enable us to see your spotless spiritual radiance. 9

O disperser of the essences of oblations, Nature's bounties have accepted your supremacy for the benefit of man. Your supremacy has also been accepted by the performer of ceremony, the intelligent, and wealth-giver, the host of the guests, and your supremacy has also been accepted by other persons, powerful and pious, present in this fire ceremony. 10

The rays of that fire-within, whom mind has kindled having taken it out of truth pre-eminently shine. Him do these our hymns extol and him do we extol. 11

Bless us for prosperity and treasures, O fire-within, as the favour of Nature's bounties is acquired only through your devotion. All the sources capable of providing well-known nourishment work under your command. May we obtain happiness, for you are great. 12

Be up to protect us, like the sun capable of healing; please rise: you are the giver of food and we invoke you with devotion and earnestness. 13

Be up and may your knowledge protect us from the wrath of sin; consume every malignant spirit; raise us aloft to spiritual heights, so that we may pass through the world, and that we may live to convey our wealth (of oblations) to Nature's bounties. 14

Youthful and most resplendent fire-within, protect us from evil forces, and from the miserly malevolence within; protect us from ferocious animal instincts and from them who seek to destroy us. 15

O inner fire, may we, with the aid of your spiritual flame, burn our vices and selfish motives as potters' ware with a hammer; let not a single vice, which is inimical to us, or a man who tries to malign our spiritual eminence with sharp weapons, prevail upon us. 16

The fire-within is solicited for conferring prosperity. May this fire enrich our wisdom. It has protected our fellow friends and also the host of the holy, who has recourse to him for riches and wisdom. 17

Along with the fire-within, we invoke from afar glory, diligence and fearlessness. Let the fire-within, also carry with it the progressiveness, leadership and vigour, to subdue the foe (the evil desires). 18

O fire-within, mind has detained you to give light to the entire sense organs and vital systems. Born out of the eternal law and satiated with the oblations, you have been kindled for the sake of enriching wisdom, revered by our people. .19

The flames of the fire-divine are luminous, powerful, and fearful, not to be approached. You ever assuredly and entirely consume the evil spirits and other destructive forces. 20

Sing forth, O intellectuals among men, the praises of the vital forces, sportive, separate from the senses, and shining in the chariot of the human body. 1

These vital forces, born together are by virtue of their nature self-luminous, and are speedy like spotted deers, and penetrating like spears, destructive like swords, and glittering like ornaments. 2

We hear the cracking of the whips in the hands of our internal vital forces. They are wonderfully brave and valorous in the fight which goes on in the human body. 3

Sing forth, O wise men, the sacred hymns in honour of your vital principles who are your strength, the destroyer of evils, the powerful and possessed of brilliant reputation. 4

Praise the sportive and restless might of the vital forces, who are born in the midst of the sense-organs, and whose strength is nourished by the milk of sentient desires. 5

Which of you, O brave vital forces, O agitators of the head and heart (heaven and earth), is the mightiest, since you disturb all around like the top of a tree ? 6

O vital forces, at your approach, man bends down to your fierce and effective power and takes shelter against some firm (buttress); even the strong rugged-jointed mountains yield before your might. 7

At whose forceful attack and persistence, even the earth gets badly shaken as a weak king gets frightened by the fierce attack of an enemy. 8

Stable is the birth-place of the vital forces. Vigour they get from their mother. Their strength is spread all over between the two regions—physical and mental. 9

These vital forces are the generators of speech and they spread out the waters of thoughts in their courses, so that the kine, the sense organs, may get into the knee-deep water to drink. 10

These illustrious vital powers drive before them in their course the long, vast and uninjurable rain-retaining clouds (of paralyzed sensations). 11

O vital powers, assuredly you possess mighty power; you can invigorate men; you can even animate rocks. 12

Wherever the vital powers operate, there is activity and clamour. Does any one hear them, when they speak ? 13

Come, O vital powers, with your swift and quick movements; intellectuals are ready to welcome you with their offerings; be pleased with them. 14

These offerings of noble deeds and thoughts are for your gratification. We are yours, that we may live our life in full. 15

38

O vital powers, fond of praise and always associated with our noble actions, when will you embrace us with both hands as a father his son? 1

Where indeed are you going and with what object? May you go up and high but not away from us. Which is the place where your glory is not sung? 2

O vital powers, may we know where are your newest favours shown? Where does your prosperity exist? Where are all your high felicities? 3

O vital powers, we know you are of divine origin (you are the sons of mother earth), but are now associated with mortals. May your admirers be immortal. 4

May your faithful devotee be never unwelcome to you, as a deer is never unwelcome in pasture, so that your devotee may not have fear of death. 5

Let not the most powerful and wicked evil impulses destroy us; let these malignant impulses die along with our evil desires. 6

Truly the bright, fierce and vigorous vital forces, cherished by the cosmic power, send down the rain on the inner realm like clouds raining without the aid of wind upon the desert. 7

The lightning in the inner realm reverbrates like a parent cow with full udder to feed her calf, and the rain of the inner realm is set free by the vital forces. 8

When they (vital powers) pour water, and inundate the earth of the inner realm, they spread forth gloom even in the day time, with water-laden clouds. 9

At the roar of vital forces, the lower impulses of man are shaken up; even the full set-up of the human complex trembles. 10

O vital powers, come with strong force and make the beautifully embanked rivers of life swift and speedy and unhindered. 11

May the fellies of your wheels (nerve-centres), may the car (body) and horses (sense-organs), and your fingers (your controls) be steady and disciplined. 12

May we glorify the adorable Lord, the supreme head of knowledge and who is affectionate to us like a praiseworthy friend, in complimentary terms, with the eternal, sacred hymns of the Vedas. 13

May you sing glory in your own voice, spread it out like a raining cloud; and chant through the sacred hymns of the Vedas. 14

Narrate the wonders of the glory of the vital forces that are bright, adorable and reverent. May they be exalted by our praises. 15

The cosmic vital powers come from afar, with the speed of light, awful vigour and shaking up everything. By whose endeavour? With whose blessings? To what place? For which purpose? 1

May your forces be strong and steady and firm for resisting and driving away the evils. May your might be admirable and beneficial and not destructive like that of a wicked one. 2

Powerful cosmic vital forces demolish what is stable, scatter what is ponderous, and make way through forests of earths and through the fissures of mountains. 3

You are the destroyer of foes; no adversary of yours is known either in the highest regions nor any on the earth. May your collected strength be quickly exerted, make your opponents weep and may you overcome your enemies O sons of the supreme Lord of vitality. 4

They make the mountains tremble, and shatter the forest-trees. Onward, O cosmic vital forces, proceed on with all your company, whither you will, and fight with evils as if intoxicated with vigour. 5

In order that your chariots may travel everywhere, you have harnessed in your wheels the fast revolving axle, as if it were a spotted-deer. Its resounding noise is heard on the earth, making every one tremble. 6

O cosmic vital powers, we implore you for help and protection for the good of our posterity. Come instantly to protect us and to enlighten our frustrated men of intellect, as you have always been coming and doing. 7

In case a wicked adversary, instigated by any person assails us, withhold, from him nourishment, strength, and your assistance. 8

O most adorable and vigorous vital powers, you are constant supporters of highest wisdom; come to us with your all protective forces as the lightning flashes in the dark raining clouds. 9

O vital forces, commanded by the supreme Lord, you are the bounteous givers; you enjoy unlimited vigour. You possess undiminished strength. May you loose your punishing vigour, like an arrow, upon the furious destructive evils working against the seers and devotees. 10

40

Rise up, O high preceptor; we, your devotees solicit your nearness to us. May the charitable vital forces come to our help. May our resplendent God be eager to accept our devotional offerings. 1

We mortals invoke you for abundant wealth and wisdom. May the vital powers grant affluence to earnest devotees and give them eminent vigour and valour. 2

May the high preceptor come to us. May brilliant divine virtues come to us. May Nature's bounties lead us to glory and drive away every adversary, and help us in the cause, beneficial to man, and measures leading to respectable prosperity. 3

He, who gives nice presents to learned persons, wins undecaying fame. For him we invoke divine wisdom, the embodiment of virtues, to give us unconquerable strength, capable of inflicting injury (to our adversaries), whilst receiving none (from their side). 4

Verily, the high preceptor proclaims the sacred prayer in which the resplendent Lord along with Nature's bounties as clouds, lightning, dawn, and the sun, all of them have a respectable reference. 5

Let us recite the felicitous and faultless prayers at our sacred performances with references to Nature's bounties. Assuredly this prayer spoken with earnest devotions will be accepted by God and will have a generous response. 6

Who (except the high preceptor) could lead the person of devotion on the right path; who, except him, could arrange for the ritualistic details as spreading of the sacred grass? The performer of the sacred acts has proceeded with his assistants to dwellings well stocked with all precious things. 7

May the high preceptor concentrate his strength, shine with his splendour, and with his strength destory all evils. None can subjugate this person of powerful will. Since he has no encourager, nor a discourager, he firmly holds his principles while surrounded by conflicting struggles of life, big or small. 8

Never is he suppressed whom the wise heads of the state, surveyor and law-giver offer protection. 1

The man gets prosperous whom such persons take in their own arms, and whom they defend from the malignant. He overcomes all obstructions. 2

These officials and head of the state destroy strongholds of the enemies, and drive them away, and provide people with shelter against their evils and injuries. 3

O learned teachers and seers, now your path becomes easy and thornless for your intellectual pursuits. No pitfalls would now come on your way. 4

O learneds and seers, any noble action, which you perform in honest and straighforward way, will never meet failure. 5

A virtuous man is never vanquished. He easily gains the best treasures of the world. He is also rewarded with an offspring like himself. 6

How, my friends, shall we express our gratitude in laudable terms for the assistance we have received from officials, heads of the state and law-givers? 7

Never would I retaliate against him who assails or reviles the person devoted to righteousness. I shall rather invoke God to bless him with right understanding, so that he may also prosper. 8

May we not speak in abusive language, and may we refrain from the person who opposes the person favoured by the four (wisdom, force, wealth and health). 9

O God, the nourisher, liberate us from our bondage, take us across the troubles and miseries, and be our leader to guide us. 1

O nourisher, drive away from our path the enemies who are sinful, cruel and the deceitful. 2

Keep away from our path the men who are robbers, cheats and exploiters, and punish them. 3

Let the persons of dubious character and pilferers be trampled down and crushed by your punishment. 4

O nourisher, sagacious and wise, we solicit from you that protection which you have been bestowing upon our noble ancestors. 5

O mighty God, bestower of universal prosperity, possessor of all shining riches, bestow upon us riches that may be liberally distributed. 6

Lead us past all obstructions; conduct us by pleasant path easy to tread, and O nourisher, you know best how you would. 7

Lead us where there is abundant nourishment. Let there be no extreme conflicts; O nourisher, you know best how you would. 8

Be gracious to us. Fill us with full; give us, invigorate and feed. O nourisher, you know best how you would. 9

No comments have we against our Lord, the nourisher. We magnify the nourisher with our songs of praises. We solicit the mighty good-looking one for prosperity. 10

When and what hymn shall we sing in devotion to the omniscient, liberal, powerful Lord of terror and destruction, dearest to our hearts ? 1

By which earth may be made to grant the gifts of the Lord to our cattle, our people, our cows, and our children. 2

By which lightning and clouds, assisted by the Lord of terror and destruction and the Nature's other bounties, being gratified, may shower favour. 3

We invoke the Lord of terror, the protector of sacred act, the encourager of hymns, and possessor of medicaments to confer joy of emancipation, and happiness. 4

He is refulgent as the sun, who is bright as gold and who presides over all the Nature's bounties, providing habitations. 5

He bestows happiness with ease upon our horses, our rams, our ewes, on men and women, and on the cows. 6

O gracious, God, grant us glory of a hundred men, and fame of mighty chiefs. 7

Let not the unbelievers in God, nor those, who are non-generous, harass us. O loving Lord, cherish us with strength. 8

O gracious God, occupying an excellent superb home, may you have kindest regards for your law-abiding immortal children, who hold you in their highest esteem, and may they prosper in their homes. 9

O adorable God, you have perfect knowledge of every thing manifested or obscure; may the intellect of your devotees get new light with the coming of every dawn in the morning; may you also bring to this place all the Nature's bounties, awaking with the morning dawn. 1

You are accepter of offerings and loved messenger of Nature's bounties and inspirer of noble performances. Associated with dawn and the pair of vigour and wisdom, grant us invigorating abundant food. 2

We invoke supreme God, the messenger of Nature's bounties and giver of life comforts. We love you, O Lord, with all our heart. You are the precursor of enlightenment, the light shedding. You preserve the sacred performances of your devotees all the time, be it dawn or dusk. 3

I glorify the all pervading God at every break of day, who is the best and youngest, adorable like a guest, and supreme master of the universe. He is friendly to the men dedicated to his service. Nothing is unknown to Him which happens in the world. I invoke him so that He brings to us Nature's other bounties. 4

O immortal God, adorable, sustainer of the universe, accepter of offerings, all pure, I will glorify you and you only. O immortal God, I worship you only, who is protector and preserver of sacrifice, ever young and beyond death or decay. 5

O most youthful, richly worshipped, honey-tongued God, be gracious to your prayful devotees. May you grant long life to the enlightened people, and honour to the most celebrated sages. 6

O omniscient God, feeder of the world, with our devotion and noble deeds we, your subjects, invoke you. Worshipped and invoked by many a wise one, may you bring hither all Nature's bounties with speed. 7

At the end of night, O adorable and ever-eternal Lord, bring to us Nature's bounties as sun, dawn, pair of heat and light, wealth and fire. Wise men and devotional worshippers kindle your affection and offer oblations. 8

You are the protector of beneficial activities, and are the messenger; bring hither today Nature's bounties, appearing in the celestial region at dawn, to participate in the divine glory of God. 9

O adorable God, resplendent and all-visible, we see your glory daily after many preceding dawns. You are the protector of the urban life and you are the conductor of all men in their dedicated noble performances. 10

We would, as a rational being, acknowledge you, O adorable, as the supreme in our rituals and noble acts. You are the inspirer in selfless acts; you are the leader, the invoker, the destroyer of obstacles, immortal and messenger of Nature's bounties. 11

O God, when loving as a friend, you preside over the noble performances and help in accomplishing the fire-ritual, then like the far resounding billows of the surging sea, your flames rise high with splendour. 12

Let the bright and vigorous vital powers, who abide by law and give bountifully, hear our devotional prayers. May venerable God, the sustainer of eternal law, accept our devotional praises, and dawn along with the pair of night and day participate in Nature's sparkling glory. 14

45

O adorable God, with your blessings may you inspire rich, valorous and learned teachers and other mortal men in the performance of their dedicated noble acts. 1

O adorable God, the learned teachers, full of wisdom, are givers of rewards to the performer of dedicated actions. O Lord of brilliant vigour, may your seekers know the secret knowledge of the thirty-three cosmic powers. 2

O adorable God, all-wise, you have been favouring all such persons as have been wisdom-loving, free from three attachments—(family, wealth and popularity), well-disciplined and men of vigour and vitality. O accomplisher of solemn acts, may you please listen to the invocations of highly enlightened persons. 3

Persons, highly learned and performers of great works, and offerers of dedicated services invoke you, O supreme Lord, shining amidst solemnities with pure resplendence. 4

O adorable God with splendours, loved by all and giver of wonderous wealth and sustenance, everyone in creation invokes you on all sides to obtain your blessings. 6

Highest regards during these performances have been shown by highly learned persons to you, O adorable God, the feeder of people, sustainer of eternal laws, and possessor of wealth and riches. 7

O adorable God, having extracted the essence of true knowledge, material as well as spiritual, wise men invoke you to communicate that divine knowledge to those seekers who were partakers in this joint truth-seeking endeavour. 8

O adorable God, you are the generator of all noble deeds, giver of rewards, provider of dwellings; may you call all Nature's morning bounties to participate in the sparkling glory of God. 9

O bounteous God, protect that man, who is possessed of divine virtues, and has just joined us. May you, Nature's bounties, participate in the sparkling glory of God, fresh as if born yesterday. 10

So, the unparalleled beloved dawn is here; likewise may you also O twins (a pair of cosmic vitality and cosmic consciousness), shine through us. 1

You (O twins), are the destroyer of miseries, born of the cosmic ocean; you are the willing distributor of wealth and prosperity and giver of dwellings to the performer of noble acts. 2

Since your cosmic chariot, like the swift birds, flying in the glorious heavens, reaches the ancient tops of spiritual peak, we proclaim your praises. 3

O twins, O guides! the sun, the evaporator of waters, the nourisher, the protector, also distributes to the Nature's bounties the essential constituents of fire-oblations. 4

May the imperishable divine powers, animators of mental faculties, destroyers of all evil, inspire us and participate with us in the sparkling glory of God. 5

May the twins dispel the darkness of our desires with their grant of invigorating nourishments. 6

O twins, take us across the turbulent ocean of life, and for this purpose harness your chariot. 7

The oars of your cosmic ship are as extensive as the sky and it stops on the cosmic seashore, and there awaits your cosmic chariot. The cosmic sparkling glory of God is also available here for your participation. 8

Enlightened men inquire (from twins) how the rays of divine light come from the source of all luminous regions; how does the dawn rise in the region of waters; where do you intend to reveal the secret of your own form and power ? 9

There is light to irradiate dawn; the sun rises like gold. The amber-coloured fire is kindled into flames. 10

The light divine surpasses even all boundaries of ignorance. With that divine knowledge the seer can see the radiance of spiritual heights. 11

The spiritualized devotee glorifies the boon he receives from the cosmic twins. Therefore he shares his spiritual joy with them. 12

O twins, givers of happiness, abiding close to the devotees, from the time the first man was born, come hither to participate in the spiritual joy and accept our praises. 13

May the dawn follow the lusture of your approach, O circumabient twins, and may you feel happy at the acceptance of the spiritual joy during this night. 14

O twins, may you both participate in the spiritual joy and may you both bestow everlasting peace upon us through your irreproachable protection. 15

Here are sweet devotional songs for you, O twins (pair of cosmic vitality and consciousness); may you enjoy the sparkling glory of God, fresh as if born yesterday. Accept the devotions and confer blessings upon the dedicated devotees. 1

Be with us O twins, in your triangular splendid chariot of the three-fold pole (moving in three dimensions and possessing three gyrations). The men of intellect are refering to your attributes; may you respond to them. 2

May you sprinkle the sweet spiritual elixir, O omniscient twins, on the cosmic sacrificial altar, spread along the three regions. The intelligent devotees have invoked you with their selfless dedicated worship. 4

With such generous aids with which you protect the highly intellectual devotees, O twins, protect and preserve us also. O encouragers of sacred acts, may you enjoy the sparkling glory of God. 5

O twins, destroyers of evils, carrying wealth of wisdom in your splendid chariot, you brought virtues from cosmic space and beyond. May you grant this wealth to us and affluence to those who are seated in your chariot. 6

Whether you are, O germ of life, far off at a distance or close at hand, come to us in your well-constructed, easy-rolling micro-vehicle along with the rays of the sun. 7

May the speedy solar radiations, (O germ of life), carry you with speed to the sacred place of rites. O twins, the guides of men, may you bestow food upon the pious and liberal donor, and bless us the creatures. 8

With hymn and devotional songs we beseech the twins for our protection. Have you not ever participated in the enjoyment of the sparkling glory of God in the company of intellectuals ? 10

O dawn (the dawn in the physical sense, as well as the first glow of spiritual consciousness), divine offspring of cosmos, bounteous and messenger of light, come to us with great glory, with plenteous affluence and with prosperity. 1

Other dawns, rich in vigour, rich in wisdom, boon givers of all wealth have often sped forth to enlighten us. O dawn, inspire me with words of joy and send wealth to the dedicated devotees. 2

Dawns have shone before; may she shine also now. The propellers of her vehicle — the rays of her aura of glory, which lie in her regions, vie with each other as ships on the sea. 3

O dawn, the learned and brave poets sing when at your approach they make up their mind to offer an oblation to you with their praise. They are the best of poets singing now at the same hour. 4

Here comes dawn like a good matron who is full of bliss rousing all life; she stirs all creatures that have feet and wakes up the birds to fly, that have wings. 5

The refreshing dawn sends forth each busy man to his pursuit; she knows no delay. O dawn, rich in opulence, when you come, birds that have flown forth, rest no longer. 6

The dawn receives her beams from beyond the rising place of the sun. Borne on a hundred aura of glory the auspicious dawn (physical and spiritual) advances on her way to men in different directions. 7

All living creatures bend to meet her glance, as this glorious dawn (particularly the glow of inner consciousness) manifests her light. This rich offspring of heaven shines and keeps foes and enemies away. 8

Come here dawn, daughter of heaven, and shine on us with delightful radiance bringing to us great store of high felicity, and beaming on our solemn ceremonies. 9

For in you lies each living creature's breath and life. Borne on your lofty aura of glory, O messenger of light (particularly spiritual), possessor of wondrous wealth, may you come at our invocation. 10

Give strength to those devotees who glorify you. O dawn, may you bring the bounteous forces of Nature to partake in our dedicated works and to the priests who sing your glory. 11

Bring from the celestial region all the forces of Nature to partake the sparkling glory of God; and then, O dawn, (physical and more so the spiritual) confer upon us wealth, full of cows and horses and excellent food and brave progeny. 12

This dawn whose transcendent and refreshing rays are seen all around us, grant us great riches, fair in form, and blissful wealth that is attained without much struggle. 13

O mighty dawn (particularly the first glow of inner consciousness), whom all ancient sages have been invoking for their protection and health, may you graciously respond to our songs of praise with bounty and with brilliant light. 14

O dawn, as you have this day opened the twin gates of happiness through your light, grant us a thornless and wide shelter free from foes. Grant us, O divine dawn, food accompanied by cows. 15

Confer upon us abundant wealth liberally of every form and plentiful refreshing nourishment. O mighty dawn, grant us such splendour (physical and spiritual) which may conquer all. May you, O possessor of enormous strength, confer strength upon us. 16

O self-radiant God, you are the supreme light that out-strips all in speed, and it is your spiritual radiance that awakens each one of us, and shines through the entire firmament. 4

O God, you rise above to vitalize the physical forces, and you go deep into the inner realm to shine through the hearts of mankind. You command all the regions of the celestial and spiritual world. 5

It is your divine light that purifies our soul, and keeps us away from evil thoughts and actions. 6

It is your divine light that discriminates between light and darkness for the benefit of all creatures that have birth. 7

O self-radiant, through your divine spectrum of seven harnessed to your chariot, you guide all men. 8

The self-radiant one operates through these harnessed sevens (five organs of senses and mind and intellect on the spiritual plane),—never failing and ever purifying, and thus safely draws the chariot of inner cosmos. 9

Beholding the uprising divine light beyond the mundane darkness, we by and by approach the spiritual one, the divine of divines. 10

O resplendent God, you have removed the hurdles placed before the vital breaths and have shown the way of freedom from the three (types of pains). You have granted wisdom and nourishment for happy living. To sages, enwrapped in a hundred of dark doubts, you wield your weapons of punitive justice for the benefit of those struggling to gain wisdom. 3

O resplendent God, you have dispersed the clouds of all evil that was obstructing the path of light rays. You arrested the progress of the malignant by taking possession of this treasure. Your radiant light, the source of all lights, then grows brighter and clearer in the absence of all dark forces. 4

At first by your supreme plans, you have been crushing all the fraudulent, hypocritical and selfish. By annihilating egoes, you defend the straightforward and righteous people. 5

You have been always defending generosity in man against all his pettiness; you have been always protecting tendencies of worship against those of disrespect; you crush the sinful who do harm to others; from the hoary past, you have existed to destroy all human tendencies of oppression. 6

In you, O resplendent God, is enshrined the supreme power; you always cherish beauty and piety. It lies in your hands to destroy all evils. May you, with your inexhaustible strength, wipe off all evil forces. 7

O God, you know very well what is good and what is evil; you alone know what is virtue and what is sin. O God, you always discriminate between the God-loving and the infidels. May you inspire the evil-minded men to perform useful and noble deeds. You, verily, encourage people in the performance of their selfless act. May your glory be proclaimed in all ceremonial celebrations. 8

The resplendent God humbles the non-believers and punishes those who turn away from noble deeds, whilst He encourages the virtuous. He makes the sinful weak whilst he rewards the righteous. The petty and evil desires of a man, even though engaged in a noble act, take away from him his accumulated fruits of good deeds. 9

May our sincere efforts go to strengthen the blessings from our resplendent Lord and lead us to the prosperity in this and the next world. O Lord, the friend of devotees, may you come fast as the wind and answer the prayer of of your devotees and accept their offerings made with determination. 10

When God is delighted with hymns, surcharged with devotional spirit, He hastens to come to His devotee and rescue him from wicked and crooked enemies. He cleaves asunder the dark clouds of ignorance and causes the thoughts to flow in torrents and overwhelms the citadels of petty-mindedness. 11

Whilst an adept devotee sits silently on his intent prayers, you, O resplendent Lord, mounted as if on a divine chariot, appear in his vision to accept his devotion, and are gratified by his feelings, lovingly pouring out of his heart, and this kindness of yours speaks of your imperishable glory in the divine world. 12

You, O resplendent Lord, have given fresh melody to the talented singer who is eager to express himself. May you give his speech, the daughter of his thoughts, strength enough to express herself fully. 13

The resplendent God comes to rescue the pious when in distress. His shelter is as stable and strong as the pillar of a doorway. He is the sovereign Lord of wealth, wisdom, vigour and all the treasures that He showers on His devotees, 14

This adoration is offered to the showerer of blessings, the one who is self-effulgent and truly strong and who is the mighty possessor of true vigour. May we, with our children, be brave and surrender ourselves to His care in this life full of struggles. 15

Glorify the divine soul, the bestower of heavenly bliss, whom hunderds of devotees invoke all at once with the singing of sacred hymns. I imlpore Him with excellent hymns to rush to me and grace the shrine of my sacred worship with His presence and protect me. 1

When the supreme soul is delighted to accept the devotional prayers and destroys the evil forces obstructing the stream of blessings, He is firm like a mountain in supporting His devotees. Endowed with a thousand means of protecting His worshippers, He increases in vigour. 2

He does not love the faithless. He pervades the vast expanse of the human form. He is the source of bliss. He cherishes our devotion. I invoke Him, with my deep reverence and sublime thoughts, for only He can fulfil my aspirations. 3

Seated on the sacred place of worship, the worshippers glorify Him with devotional prayers. The flow of the devotional elixir goes to Him as the rivers hasten to a vast ocean. Through such unobstructed vital powers as are the bestowers of happiness, the supreme God helps us in dispelling darkness from the minds of His earnest devotees. 4

The disciplined sense organs, ehxilarated by experience, precede the self, warring against the withholder of the happiness, as rivers rush down the declivities (of a mountain). The self (the soul), animated by the dedicated actions, breaks through the defences of passions and emerges out pure and refulgent through the threefold bondages. 5

O soul, by your powerful force you have smitten the formidable evils hidden deep in the human mind. Your glorious fame spread afar, and the strength of your divine power was acclaimed by all. 6

The sacred hymns that glorify you, reach you as rivulets flowing into a lake. The supreme architect has increased your vigour, enhanced your strength and made your power to destroy evil more effective. 7

O inner self, the performer of noble acts, when devotees, determined to help the senses, animate the vital organs to destroy the evil forces, you yourself wield the adamantine weapon of punitive justice, so that one may perceive the divine light in the innermost region. 8

Through fear of the evil forces, the devotees recite suitable magnanimous hymns which are self-illuminating, strength-bestowing and capable of taking the reciters to spiritual heights. In the state of ecstasy, the soul of the devotee, having subdued the passions with the help of the disciplined vital organs, assumes its purest form, and ascends to the final state. 9

When O inner self, exhilarated by spiritual joy, you remove off the dark shrouds and destroy the evil forces that torment the sublime emotions of pious man and obstruct the inner realms. 10

O inner self, your mighty majestic power is ten times more extensive than the earth and it multiplies day by day. May your glory be renowned here and may it increase in majesty and power in the celestial regions. 11

O resplendent God, you have framed the earth for our preservation; you are the personification of vigour; you have encompassed the firmament and the sky even beyond the universe known to us. 12

You are infinitely bigger than the vast expanse of earth; you are the Sovereign—the Lord of heaven—verily. With your renown and vigour, you fill every atom of the vast universe. There is none other as great as you. 13

You are of such magnitude that you are beyond the reach of all the forces of the ethereal regions. No one can conceive the limits of your virtuous deeds and your capacity to annihilate evil. You alone compose the universe according to the eternal laws, and keep it in order. 14

O mighty God, when you with your forces that are as sharp and angular as the thunderbolt, the weapon of your punitive justice, strike down the evil forces obstructing the path of virtues, the vital forces offer homage to you and obey your orders. 15

We, the devotees assembled in congregation, worship the mighty resplendent God with sacred hymns so that He may readily bestow wealth and wisdom on us—and may we receive it as easily as in a dream. May our praises be pious and sincere, for ill-expressed praise is not rewarded by the munificent God. 1

We offer our prayers to you, O resplendent God; you are the nourisher, the bestower of a vigorous body consisting of the sharp senses and a speedy mind; you are the Lord of the treasures, the preceptor of mankind, most generous, and you never disappoint your worshippers. You are a true friend to our friends and to those who approach you as a friend. 2

O the all-wise, all-powerful, most resplendent God, we know that all these shining treasures of wealth and wisdom belong to you. Come, O victor, with all your wisdom and power, and may you not disappoint the worshipper who hopefully reposes his trust in you. 3

Exalted by our earnest devotions and propitiated by our offerings, O resplendent Self, may you be with us to replace poverty with prosperity and darkness with divine wisdom. May all of us with your aid attain the strength to conquer our adversaries and enjoy abundance in life. 4

May we obtain wisdom and nourishment and be gifted with vigour that is bright and most pleasing. May we all be blessed with sharp intellects, brilliant vigour and spiritual strength. 5

When, O protector of the benign, you are pleased with our actions, libations and devotional prayers, you shower on us your blessings and help us in subduing ten thousand (i.e. innumerable) persistent obstacles, whilst we fight against evils. 6

O inner Self, destroyer of evils, you proceed from battle to battle to fight the vices. You vanquish cities after cities of demoniac forces with your powerful determination, and defeat such ever-clinging vices as distract men from truth. 7

O divinely blessed soul, unaided and alone you overpower the wicked and perverted thoughts with your sharp intellect and make way for reverential ones. You, by your subtle strength, discipline the hundreds of strongholds of the capricious instincts while surrounded by earnest and simple thoughts. 8

O resplendent Lord, you with the help of the not-to-be-overtaken chariot wheel overthrow the twenty (10×2) kings assisted with sixty thousand and ninety-nine (60,000+9+90) followers, and thus save the widely reputed sages from their disorders. 9

O immortal soul dwelling in the unconquerable divine chariot of the human body, you save the widely reputed leaders, and with your assistance, the valorous. You have made the generous, reverential and elders in age subject to the mighty youthful leaders of repute. 10

O supreme God, may we, protected by your divine powers, continue to be your most fortunate friends, and by your grace attain good children and a long and prosperous life. 11

Urge us not, O resplendent God, to painful conflicts. Unsurpassable is your strength. You have made the oceans and rivers roar. How is it possible that all the regions of universe should not tremble in terror of yours? 1

Offer homage to the most mighty Lord who purifies both the mind and body. Sing His glory for He cherishes listening to sacred hymns. With His irresistible might, He creates the universe. It is He who by His bounty gratifies our aspirations. 2

Offer praises to the great and illustrious Lord, of whom, undaunted, the divine will is concentrated in its own firmness. His fame is universal. He grants life. With His assistance, we are enabled to repel the vices of our senses; He is obeyed by the vital forces, and He is the showerer of bounties. Such a Lord is hastening hither. 3

O blessed soul, you reign supreme over the deluding senses and subdue their irreverence by your resolute strength. With adamant determination and the weapon of punitive justice, you overcome all assembled, deluding the devilish tendencies and destroying them by your inherent power. 4

Since you have calmed down and brought under control the conflicting forces of the mind, intellect and body with your unassailing strength, who can deter you from your firm and resolute determination, for you are eternally endowed with a resolute mind? 5

You have protected the genius amongst men, the glorious, the assiduous and the perservering ones, and the destroyers of evils, all belonging to one fellowship. You have protected their vehicles in all unavoidable operations and encounters; you have further demolished the ninety-nine (i. e. all) strongholds of the disrespectful. 6

That eminent person, the cherisher of the pious, promotes his own prosperity, who, whilst offering worship to the resplendent Lord, pronounces His praise and recites hymns of prayer with fervour. On him the bounteous resplendent Lord showers His blessings like rains from clouds. 7

O resplendent God, you are unequalled in might and unequalled in wisdom. May those who have tasted the essence of the spiritual bliss glorify your virtues and supremacy further and thereupon, by performing pious acts, become worthy of your company. 8

These copious essences of the spiritual bliss, extracted with the help of the stones of penance and dedication, are offered to you through the ladles of our heart. These essences are meant for the self (the soul), which should satiate its spiritual appetite with them. Thus then may you fix your mind upon the bestowed wealth. 9

The darkness of ignorance obstructs the water current of knowledge. Within the belly of clouds was submerged the darkness of doubts; the darkness was subdued, and the waters were precipitated out by the self. The knowledge thus condensed out, passed into the hollows of the cave of conscience, and the flow of wise thoughts then continued. 10

May your spiritual strength, O blessed soul, subdue all foes; and may we with your aid attain fame and vigour. May the wise be cherished and become affluent. May you bless us with wealth, excellent progress and abundant food. 11

Within our own body exists the interspace (the region of the vital breath and mind) and also the earth (the exposed physical body). The extense of the soul is vaster than the interspace, and this earth is insignificant in dimension when compared with that of the range of influence of the soul. The soul is formidable and most mighty, and thus it has been the afflicter of the enemies of those who adore it. This self destroys evils with its sharpness and penetrates into the depths of the vitals. 1

The soul, with its comprehensive faculties, rescues thoughts just as ocean receives the rivers. It eagerly hastens to taste the essence of the spiritual bliss. It is a warrior and is to be praised for its prowess. 2

O soul, you strike the powers of darkness not for your own enjoyment; you dominate even those who are superior to you in possessions. Your divinity surpasses all others in strength. The soul with its well-deserved pride is superior to the sense-organs on account of its inherent strength and accomplishments. 3

The splendid inner self is, verily, glorified by virtuous and spiritual sages living in the forests. When it cherishes in listening to its glorious deeds, it encourages those who desire to adore it, and grants protection to them who recite its praise. 4

The soul, the warrior, engages itself in many conflicts for the good of mankind, with overwhelming prowess; men have firm faith in the soul's splendid strength. 5

He is ambitious to attain fame, therefore, he wipes off the evil forces that obstruct his self-expression. He resides in those luminous regions which are above physical reach. He can demolish the walls which obstruct spiritual flows. 6

May you O soul, drinker of the essence of spiritual joy, fulfil our pious aspirations. May you speedily be with us in our noble performances; under your blessings may the charioteer, the mind, be able to control the horses, our senses, so that the demoniac powers of darkness may not prevail upon our virtues. 7

You bear irresistible strength in your body and have an inexhaustible treasure of wisdom. O illustrious soul, your treasures are always vested in you, as wells are surrounded by those who come to seek water. 8

When the sense organs, as performers of the sacrifice, hold the oblations of sense enjoyments with them, as if in the ladles, the self (or the soul) rushes eagerly towards them as a horse towards a mare. Thereupon, the self stays in the golden chariot of his body, yoked with the horses, the organs, and shares with them in the enjoyment. 1

His (i. e. of the lower self) admirers, the sense-organs, bearing the sense-enjoyments, are thronging round him like rivers round the ocean. (O sense-organs), rise up at once with a hymn of praise to the self, the protector of the solemn sacrifice, just as women climb a mountain (for picking up flowers) 2

He, the self, is mighty and quick in action; he is protected by the resolute will. His glory shines in conflict like the peak of a mountain with invincible power. He, exhilarated by spiritual joy, arrests and imprisons, and has wily petty-mindedness bound in ropes. 3

When the power of the soul (the lower self) is augmented by the noble work and the discipline of the sense-organs, he, with his divine light and resolute vigour, inflicts a severe blow on the evil forces as the sun on the dawn, causing much excitement and emotional disturbance in the human mind. 4

When, O soul, the destroyer of evil forces, you set open the gate of divine thoughts and distribute life-sustaining radiance to the different faculties of the mind and the body, then, exalted by assimilating spiritual exhilaration, you completely destroy the evils and make way for the endless divine thoughts to flow. 5

O mighty soul, you spread spiritual radiance on all the vital centres of the human system. Exhilarated by the spiritual joy, with your invincible strength you set open the dark powers of ignorance and, with solid determination, destroy evils once for all. 6

I glorify the most generous, the truly powerful and excellent self, whose irresistible impetuosity is like the rush of water down a precipice, and by whom widely diffused spiritual wealth is laid open to sustain our great deeds. 1

O soul, as if resting on a hill, you destroy the evil forces with your knowledge that shines sharp and is penetrating; all acclaim you as a protector and rush to offer homage to you and sing forth (to you) the devotional prayers. The flow of spiritual joy is as spontaneous as of water into a depth. 2

The dawn, the embodiment of divine light, offers homage to the formidable and victorious self whose life-sustaining, celebrated and characteristic radiance has impelled him on all sides to seek wisdom, as the speedy rays spread in all directions. 3

Much praised and most opulent soul, we, the sense-organs belong to you; we glorify you alone. Accept our offerings. None other than you is entitled to receive our devotion. May you love and cherish our prayers as the mother-earth cherishes its creatures. 4

Great is your strength, O soul; we are yours, and as such may you fulfil the aspirations of your worshippers. The vast heaven bows to your mighty vigour. This earth bows down to your magnanimity. 5

O soul, with your adamant determination, you have shattered the cloud of ignorance into fragments and have sent down the waters that were confined in it to flow. Verily, you alone possess all powers. 6

The inner-spiritual fire is verily the strength generated; it is also immortal, and it issues forth quickly; it is the messenger of the self-effulgent Lord. By suitable paths, it proceeds and illuminates our interior, and thus it participates in the spiritual sacrifice with oblations. 1

(Like the inner fire) is the undecaying physical fire, which combines its food with its flames, and quickly devours the wood, and ascends upon with a blazing flame; it spreads out like a steed all round and rises to the upper region with a noise, similar to the noise of clouds at great heights. 2

The immortal and resplendent God, the bearer of oblations is honoured by cosmic vital and wealthgiving forces, and presides over all sacred work and distribution of riches. Praised by His worshippers and admired among mankind, He accepts devotions which are successively offered. 3

He is like a blazing fire which, excited by the wind, roaring loudly penetrates easily with His flames among the wood. When this fiercely blazing fire rushes in the forest, His path is blackened by smoke. 4

He is like a forest fire, flame-weaponed and breeze-excited, destroying all the moisture (of the trees) with its heat. With voluminous flames, He rushes triumphant in full vigour against all undesirable elements, whether movable or stationary, and all are afraid of Him when He flies along. 5

O adorable God, it is for you that men perform sacrifices; you are the invoker (of Nature's forces); you alone are the supreme guest at sacrifices; and you are valued as an affectionate friend. The inspired men of wisdom have always cherished you as a precious treasure for the sake of divine birth. 6

I worship with oblations that adorable Lord whom the seven invoking priests (five sense-organs, mind and intellect) invite as the invoker at the sacrifice. The adorable God is most worthy of worship and He is the donor of all riches; I solicit His wealth. 7.

O universal benevolent God, you exceed the vast universe in dimension; you are the sovereign master of all the cultured. You protect your pious, devotees during encounters, and shower blessings on enlightened worshippers and make them recover their lost riches. 5

I extol the greatness of that powerful God whom all worship for the showering of rains and for breaking the clouds. The adorable Lord, the ordainer, releases water from the clouds and sends it down. 6

By his magnanimity, the universally benevolent God, is all-embracing and thus an integrated whole; He is to be worshipped as the diffuser of manifold light in offerings of nutritious viands. Asmā́ íd u prá taváse turā́ya práyo ná harmi stómam máhināya | ṛícīshamāyā́dhrigava óham índrāya bráhmāṇi rātátamā || 1 ||

Men, who are dedicated and love progress, both live under the guidance of God. The venerable, the distributor of desired benefits, and crowned king of creation, is always present in the hearts of devotees before the coming of dawn. 2

May our ever-fresh, reverential homage, offered with sincere love and respect, reach the adorable God, who is sweet-tongued and seated as a torch in our hearts. At the time of distress, the all-wise, experienced, wealthy and enlightened men invoke Him only. 3

He, the lovable, purifying Lord of wealth and wisdom, the giver of divine light, is enshrined in the innermost recess of man's heart. May He, the invincible, the protector, enrich the hearts of all men with His divine wealth. 4

We, the most intellectual, glorify you with excellent hymns, O adorable God, the lord of wisdom and wealth. May you grant us strength and bless our noble deeds and sublime thoughts. May you hasten to be with us every morning. 5

To the resplendent God alone I offer my homage with reverence to him who is the mightiest of the mighty, swift, praise-meriting, invincible, virtuous and inspiring. May our devotional songs, praising His bounties, be cherished with the eagerness as that for food. 1

To Him alone I offer homage, acceptable as food, and I sing His glory in proper words for the sake of success in discomfiting (my adversaries). The singers chant hymns to the glory of the resplendent God, the eternal Lord, with their heart, mind and spirit. 2

I myself with my own loud tune, and with pure and forceful words, offer homage to exalt Him who is unique in His magnitude and unparralleled in His greatness and wisdom. 3

To obtain wealth and wisdom, I compose prayerful verses, as a carpenter constructs a car. May we offer praises to Him who gladly listens to them, and my emotional songs to the wise resplendent God. 4

I combine melody with my words of praise as a man yokes horse to a vehicle, in order to celebrate valour, munificence, and food-giving generosity of the resplendent God, who easily destroys the strongholds of the unfaithful. 5

For Him verily, Nature's architects sharpen their sure-aimed, effective, well-trained weapons of thunder, with which the mighty victor finally strikes the clouds of all evils and destroys them. 6

The resplendent Lord rapidly consumes all the oblations offered to him three times daily at the sacred worship. He pervades the entire universe and is the vanquisher of foes, and inflicts on them His punitive justice. He further restores wealth from the infidels and pierces the clouds of evils in His encounters. 7

To the resplendent Lord, all the delicate motherly natural powers offer their reverential homage on the destruction of the serpentine darkness. He encompasses the extensive heaven and earth. They two (heaven and earth) do not surpass the resplendent God in vastness. 8

His magnitude verily surpasses that of heaven, earth and space. The resplendent God, manifesting His strength in all regions, is equal to every exploit. He engages Himself in fighting against all formidable foes and calls them to battle with skill. 9

The resplendent God, through His own strength, shatters the forces of evil and releases the stream of wisdom blocked by demoniac forces, like imprisoned cows, and recovers from thieves and cosistent with the wishes of the giver of the oblation grants his food. 10

Through His powers, only sublime thoughts flow in their destined courses, since He sets open the paths by His might, establishing His supremacy and granting recompense to the giver of oblations. He, the swift-moving, provides a safe abode for vigorous sages. 11

The resplendent God, who is ever-vigilant and has unlimited strength, inflicts punitive justice on dark evils and severs their joints, so that energy and thoughts may issue from Him and flow freely in the world. 12

Sing new hymns praising the blessings and achievements of that swift-moving resplendent Lord who inflicts His punitive justice in conflicts and destroys evil forces. 13

Through fear of Him, the firmly-set mountains and the whole heaven and earth tremble. May the dedicated worshippers, praising repeatedly the preserving power of that beloved Lord, be speedly blessed with vigour. 14

To Him, who rules alone over the vast universe, this praise has been offered. The resplendent Lord prefers to receive it from His sincere and true devotees. The Lord comes faster than the sun (light) to defend His worshipper. 15

The descendants of intellectual devotees offer their prayers to please you, O resplendent Lord, the inspirer of spiritual radiance; may you bestow upon them every sort of affluence. May he who has acquired prosperity by pious acts come here quickly at the rising of sun. 16

Just as our vital elements are devoted to us, so may we meditate on the all-powerful attributes of the resplendent Lord, with our noble actions free from evil and with loving words. May we repeat our prayers to the celebrated leader of all, adored by His worshippers. 1

May you offer adorations to that resplendent God and chant praises to Him who is exceedingly mighty. Through him our forefathers, adept in the science of vital elements and conscious of their high positions, could recover the deluded intellects, whilst worshipping Him. 2

When the soul proceeds on its search, with the vital elements, the internal organ secures nourishment for its children, the external senses; then the soul slays the evil desires, which were the devourers of the intellects, and rescues them. And, thereon, the sense-organs and the intellect, proclaim their joy aloud. 3

O powerful soul, desirous of protection, you, who are to be gratified with a laudatory and well-accented hymn by the seven vital elements of the two orders—one whose course lies in nine, and the other whose course lies in ten directions—have terrified by your efforts the divisible fructifying clouds of evil desires. 4

Destroyer of evils, praised by vital elements, you have scattered the darkness with the dawn and with the rays of the sun. You have smoothened the unevenness of the earth and have strengthened the foundations of the uppermost celestial region. 5

The deeds of that gracious soul are most admirable; its achievements are most glorious, in that it has replenished the four streams of sweet thoughts which flow full with waves over the surface of the earth. 6

He, the Self, is easily propitiated, not by violence, but by those who praise Him with sacred hymns. He parted the twofold, the eternal, and united (the celestial and terrestrial); and the Self cherishes both of them like the sun in august and the most excellent sky. 7

This pair of damsels, night and dawn, freshly born and ever-youthful, have traversed in their revolutions alternately from very ancient time, round heaven and earth, night with her dark limbs and dawn with limbs of splendour. 8

This source of strength, skilled in operation, diligent in pious acts, retains His eternal friendship; you, the Self, provide to the raw intellects, black or red, the mature and glossy milk or the essence. 9

From remote times, the contiguous, unshifting and unwearied fingers have been displaying their devotions in thousands of ways of their movements of ecstasy, and the protecting sisters, like the wives, worship Him without hesitation and reservation. 10

O charming Self, who is to be adored with sacred hymns, all pious persons, desirous of holy rites and anxious for riches, and those who are wise, repair to you with veneration. O powerful Self, their minds adhere to you, as affectionate wives to their husbands. 11

O splendid Lord, the spiritual riches which you have long possessed have neither diminished nor been wasted; you, O Self, are illustrious, resolute and full of wisdom. Strengthen us with might, O supreme Lord of strength. 12

The resplendent Lord, the sustainer of ever-new (creature), and the possessor of excellent wisdom, has revealed to us this hymn. He has harnessed this sun (as if to a car), and is a sure guide to us all. May we pray this morning to our Lord, as to be present with us to inspire us for material and spiritual wealth. 13

O resplendent God, you are great; with your well-known powers, you sustain heaven and earth at the time of distress; and then on your account, all firmly set mountains, and all their vast and solid things, no longer tremble like the (tremulous) rays of the sun. 1

O resplendent God, when you have harnessed your variously equipped horses (to the chariot of the sun), the one who praises you, places the thunderbolt of devotion in your hands, wherewith, O accomplisher of the desired acts, you assail the clouds of ignorance, the enemies, and, glorified by all, you destroy their numerous centres, the cities. 2

O resplendent God, you are the best of all; you are bold and strong, you are the lord of devotees, the friend of men, and the subduer of enemies; you always provide assistance to the illustrious person of discretion, and you destroy his doubts and misgivings in their deadly and close-fought attacks. 3

As a friend, you support the pious. O munificent hero, you crush evil forces and destroy their wickedness, and having conquered them, you drive them to remote places, and thence, bring happiness to mankind. 4

O you, resplendent God, who is unwilling to harm any resolute person, set open all the quarters to the horses of us who praise you, when (we are exposed) to the aversion of our enemies. O resplendent God, the wielder of punitive actions, you have always assisted men of discretion, in the overturn of the seven cities; you take away wealth from the wicked and provide it to the generous. 7

O resplendent God, provide for us food in abundance—plentiful as water; O hero Lord, may we have it in plenty, like water flowing on every side. 8

Praises have been offered to you, O resplendent God, by the most enlightened men; they have been addressed to you with reverence. May you grant us abundant riches procured through your earnest deliberations. May He who has acquired wealth and wisdom come hither again and again in the mornings. 9

These (vital principles) lofty and strong, life-giving, free from spot and stain and radiant as the sun's rays are the off-springs of the vital cosmic elements; awful in form like giants, they cherish the spiritual elixir and, for the good of humanity, send down rains to this earth. 2

These vital principles are young and are slayers and subduers of evil forces and are also very progressive. And being irresistible they make all beings tremble with their mighty strength. Even the very strong men, of both earth and heaven, feel shaky before them. 3

With various glittering clouds they adorn and exhibit their splendour; for glamour they bind golden chains on their breast. They wear lances on their shoulders. To punish the wicked, they reveal themselves in the celestial region with their inborn strength. 4

They are loud-roarers, bestowers of strength, devourers of adversaries. They cause the winds to flow, they cause the lightnings to flash with their powers. These restless shakers drain the udders of the heavenly cow, and ever-wandering round, fill the earth with milk. 5

These very effective bounteous powers come to shower blessings as plentiful as the sacred ones available in solemn rites. They guide the clouds as if they were the horses to be trained, and milk the thundering cloud so that it may ever rain without stopping. 6

Mighty, with wondrous power and marvellously bright, strong like mountains, you guide swiftly on your way. O mighty powers, like wild elephants you consume the forests when you assume your strength among the bright red flames. 7

Exceedingly vigilant, these vital principles roar like a lion, glamorous with glittering ornaments; and these all-knowing, valorous and glorious ones may combine amongst themselves like the spotted deer and attack evils with the fury of a serpent. 8

These vital principles march in a group, befriending and protecting men through strength and attacking with the fury of a serpent, bless the earth and heaven. The lightning appears to be seated on the aura of vitality consisting of these vital principles, with its glory seen from every side. 9

These vital principles, endowed with mighty vigour, dwelling in the prime source of wealth and wisdom, possess the treasure of all precious virtues. They are brave masters of infinite powers and promoters of all sweet melodies. Like archers, they have laid their arrows on their arms. 10

These divine vital principles with golden fellies augment the rain and drive the big clouds asunder as elephants. These are self-moving, brisk and unwearied and they overthrow even the firm hills; and they with bright lances make all things reel. 11

With prayers we invoke the group of cosmic vital principles, the brisk, the bright, the worshipful and always active. May we cleave to the strong band of vital principles for happiness, as these principles are vigorous, impetuous and offer exhilarating boons. 12

O vital principles, verily, the man whom you guard with your help surpasses all mankind in strength. Then he performs beneficial and glorious acts, and blessed with your power he thus attains wealth, renown and prosperity. 13

All wise holy worshippers together, with reverence, track you (fire-divine) like a thief lurking in a dark cave with a stolen cow. They establish communion with you and keep your company. 1

Submitting to the ways of holy law, the enlightened seekers try hard to find the true path. The earth became as blissful as heaven. The sacred acts enfold and feed that babe (fire-divine) born (discovered) nobly in the womb of the holy laws. 2

This newly-born babe (fire-divine) is attractive like food, vast as the earth, benevolent like the fruit-bearing hill and delightful as water; it is further swift like a galloping horse. It rushes like a fast-flowing stream or river. Who can check its course? 3

It (the fire-divine) is like a kind kinsman of the waters and like a brother to his sisters. It consumes wood as a king of the state consumes the enemy. Urged by the wind, it spreads in the forest and shears the hair (i.e. the trees) of the earth. 4

This fire-divine born of ever true laws, mighty and shining far and near, refresher like a spiritual elixir and awakener of all the people in the morning by its attributes, grows like young creatures and swims in the stormy floods of the world like a swan. 5

This fire-divine is splendid like varied wealth; it is again like a seer amongst the learned men; it is vigorous like the life-breath; it is again always dear like one's own son; it is like a cow who yields milk. It is pure and refulgent when it spreads in the forest. 1

It offers safety, bestows joy like one's own mansion. It is like ripened corn and the conqueror of men. Like a seer it inspires devotion. It has universal fame among all men. Like a steed it is friendly and bestows life and prosperity on all. 2

This fire-divine has flames unbearable to behold. It is active and like eternal might, comforting like a wife at home; when it shines it becomes brilliant like the sun. It roars like a gold-decked vehicle and helps to win the battle of life. 3

This fire-divine strikes like a dart shot forth and like an archer's arrow tipped with flame. It is master of all that are born, and those to be born. It is the lover of maidens and the Lord of mothers. 4

To this fire-divine, lead all our ways; moving or stationary, may we attain this kindled fire-divine as cows their home at eve. This fire drives flames, as floods their swell; the rays rise up to commingle with the radiance visible in the sky. 5

Victorious in the wood, friend among men, benign like a saint, benefactor like a pious deed, he (the inner fire-divine) claims obedience as a King. He himself is invoker and honours those who invoke. May this bearer of offerings be considerate to us. 1

He bearing in his hand all manly might, shuts himself up in deep hollows (of inner cavity of heart). But he delegates his strength to the true seekers. When these sage's pray with heartfelt devotion, they realize this divine-fire through deep meditation. 2

He himself, eternal and unborn, holds the broad earth up; and with his divine will sustains the sky. O fire-divine, may you preserve these spots, loved by all creatures. Verily, you are the life force of even the remotest corners hidden in deep caves. 3

Whosoever know him (the inner fire), hidden in far off places, who constantly submit to the holy law and who adore him, with sacred hymns, truly God blesses them with true guidance to attain wealth. 4

This fire-divine lives within herbs, and within each fruitful mother and each babe she bears. Wise sages worship this inner fire-divine, universally present in all actions and thoughts, as it were their own self. 5

The fire-divine, bearer of offerings, ascends to heaven and covers all that stands or moves on earth and unveils nights with his lustre. And thus he attains eminence and greatness among all other divinities. 1

The divine consciousness of God reveals itself as the divine-fire and is further manifested as the terrestrial fire, produced by the attrition of dried substances, and all men greet the fire as it comes out; O fire-divine, may we attain fame, truth and divinity by praising you and by singing hymns that reach you. 2

This fire is the inspirer and preserver of the eternal law. It imparts life to all and helps to perform sacred works. May you vouchsafe his wealth, whosoever brings oblation and gifts to you, and knows the proper use. 3

You have, O divine fire, abided with the first man and his later descendants as the invoker; you alone are the lord of all treasures. Men yearning for children to prolong their line look for their vigour in you, and they are not disappointed in their expectations. 4

Those who obey the command of this fire-divine attain their objective like those sons who obey their father. For them, who acted on his command, he being himself rich, opened the doors of his treasure. Also, he, the source of light, decked heaven's vault with stars. 5

He, the supreme fire, is bright and splendid like the sun, the lover of dawn. He has filled the two united worlds (earth and interspace) with His light. Soon after your discovery, O terrestrial fire, through your ability and strength and merits, you encompassed all the universe. You are the father of the enlightened ones and yet you are a son since you were discovered by them (fire on the earth is the earliest discovery of man). 1

You, the supreme fire, are the sage, the humble, and the one who discerns; and like the cow's udder, you are the giver of sweetness to food. When invoked, you grace the place of worship by your presence and diffuse happiness amongst people like a benevolent man. 2

You are dear in the home like a lovely son, first-born and like a strong beam, you take people across their miseries. Whenever men invoke it or him, may this fire gain all celestial powers. 3

Since you have been granting help to law-abiding people, no evil can break your holy laws. This is a matter of pride for you that, assisted by your followers, you always drive off and demolish the intruders. 4

O fire, you are radiant like the dawn's lover, the sun, spreading light, and you are well-known as being hued like the morn. May your flames, themselves bearing oblations, open the doors of sacred performances and ascend to the blissful heaven. 5

We invoke abundance of all sorts from the fire-divine, approachable by meditation, radiant, useful and lustrous. He regulates all our sacred acts. He is the observer of the cosmic laws and knows the secrets of the birth of mortal men. 1

He is the life-force of the waters, of the woods, of all things that move not and that move. He is present on the rocks and equally in the mansions. May this immortal fire be benevolent to mankind, like a king to his subjects. 2

Shining even in the nights, the fire-divine grants prosperity to the man who serves him readily with sacred songs. May this fire-divine, who is all-knowing, and who determines the secrets of birth of both men and gods, protect these beings on this earth with tender care. 3

Whom many dawns and nights of different hues give strength, and whom, invested with eternal law, all things movable and otherwise, augment, may this fire-divine be worshipped so that our sacred efforts become fruitful. 4

May the fire-divine confer excellence upon our valued cows. May all men bring us acceptable tribute; they have been serving you in many ways and have also been receiving from you the riches as if from their own father's wealth. 5

He is honoured like a perfect gentleman: He is brave like a skilled and bold soldier; He is fierce like an avenger. Therefore, He shines among all adversaries. 6

As wives love their husbands, just as the cows love to behold the dark and bright coloured dawn breaking forth, so may our contiguous fingers, like sisters living in one home, adore the bright-coloured reverential fire-divine. 1

When our sires, the fire-priests, burst open the firmly set mountain-like fortress of ignorance with the resounding voice of hymns, they make for us a way to reach heavenly bliss and obtain the divine in the form of the beams of the morning to restore the lost wisdom. 2

The sages, abiding in truth, secure the fire-divine and make its worship the source of wealth; and thence the opulent votaries preserve the fire and share it with them who are free from all desires and are assiduous in their worship. Such dedicated persons, sustaining people, learned and others, directly come into the contact of this fire-divine by their offerings. 3

When the far-diffused atmospheric air excites the fire, it grows brighter and manifests in every house. Then the illustrious sages prevail upon it to function as a messenger, just as an ambassador is commissioned by a friendly prince to his more powerful (conqueror). 4

When the worshipper offers the oblations of elixir to his mighty illustrious protector (that is the fire), none else could dare steal the offerings, since the fire, the archer, sends its blazing arrow from its dreadful bow. Having risen thus to the sun, they come back to us as the splendour of its own daughter (the morning dawn). 5

Whosoever kindles the fire at his own residence and daily offers the oblations with intense regards, may you, O fire, augmented in two ways (the middle and the peak points), increase his means of sustenance. May he, whom you send with his aura of glory to the battle, always return with wealth. 6

All sacred viands wait on this fire-divine as the seven mighty rivers seek the ocean. Our people are not getting sufficient food. May you guide them properly through their experts to explore the means of procuring nourishment for them. 7

When pure, radiant light emerges out of the supreme fire, then from the heaven descends the limpid moisture. The fire-divine urges strong, blameless and ever-young clouds to assist in the production of food. 8

The radiant sun traverses alone swiftly on his journey to heaven with the speed of thoughts and becomes Lord of all riches. May the radiant sun and the ocean with bounteous hands become guardian of the precious nectar of our cattle. 9

O fire-divine, sage as you are, endowed with deepest knowledge, may our ancestral friendship never break. Old age is like a gathering cloud; it impairs the body. May you come to destroy it before it destroys me. 10

Holding many gifts in His hands for devotees, He (fire-divine) accepts the immortal prayer of the sacred hymns. And even granting countless bounties, He is still the Lord of the treasures. 1

The infallible wise men went in search but could not find the dear babe (the fire-divine) who is still around us. Worn and weary, following its track, the devoted men reached the lovely highest home of the supreme fire. 2

O fire, the embodiment of purity, enlightened devotees served you with clarified butter for three autumns. Therefore, they earned remarkable fame for noble work, and thus having become newly-born, they purified their body and soul. 3

These holy ones, having known the secret of the spacious earth and heaven, reveal the powers of cosmic energy, then these mortal seers, discerning at a distance, find the fire-divine standing in the loftiest station. 4

They approach Him, single-minded, with their families kneeling before Him, and thus they reverentially adore Him. Then finding friendly and protective assurance in the twinkle of the eye of this divine, they sanctify their own body. 5

As soon as the pious and holy devotees discover the three-seven mystic things and still unrevealed within you, they with deep meditation preserve immortality. May you be pleased with them and protect the life of all their plants and cattle. 6

O fire-divine, aware of all things (or all actions) to be known, may you provide nourishment to every one for his life's subsistence. With all your knowledge of the intermediate path that leads to righteousness, may you become the diligent bearer of oblations. 7

The seven channels (two of eyes, two of ears, two of nose, and one of speech) full of wisdom, flow from the inner-most illuminated region. The wise persons have known the door of the inner cavity where the treasure of the divine knowledge is concealed. For you, the divine consciousness has discovered the milk of knowledge, furnished by the sense-organs (the kine) with which the mankind is ever nourished. 8

It is imperative on them, who aspire to traverse on the path of immortality, to perform noble deeds. The unfrag-mentable mother earth strove with her magnitude to up-hold (the world) along with her great sons for our sustenance. 9

When immortal powers of lustrous heaven made the two bright eyes (the sun and moon), they gave to it (the divine fire) the gift of beauteous sparkling glory, which flowed forth in all directions like rushing rivers,—O fire-divine, thus to reveal you. 10

The fire-divine is the giver of food like patrimonial riches, and further, it is our guide like instructions coming forth from a man of wisdom to lead us through; it is also loved like a guest who is received well in the house with respect. May it as a priest, bring prosperity to the house of the worshippers. 1

Like the sun, it (the fire-divine) is radiant, truth-incarnate and protector; with its powerful acts, it preserves its votaries in all encounters; like nature it is unchangeable; and like the self, it is the source of happiness; it is ever to be cherished. 2

It (the fire-divine) is radiant like the sun and dwells on this earth like a king surrounded by faithful friends. In its presence, men sit down as if they are the sons in their parent's. It is again like an irreproachable and loving wife. 3

O fire-divine, devotees always kindle you in secure permanent places in their homes. On you they lay abundant food. You are the source of life to all men, the bearer of abundant riches. 4

O fire-divine, may your rich worshippers win food, and may the learned persons, bringing oblations, gain a long life. May we acquire food from the wicked in battles, and distribute it to the virtuous 5

The cows with full udders have brought us healthy and bright milk for drinking purposes. Loudly lowing, they have come to the sacred place of worship Soliciting the favour of th[illegible] fire, the rivers, have come from a great distance flowing under the rocks. 6

O fire divine, [illegible] your favour (i.e. of Nature's forces), the cosmic sacrifices have gained glory in heaven. They have made night and dawn of different colours, and set the black and purple hues together 7

Aided by you, O fire-divine, may we conquer rays with rays, men with men, and heroes with heroes. Becoming lords of the wealth, bequeathed by our fathers, may our learned men live a hundred winters. 9

May these, our hymns of praise, O sapient fire-divine, be pleasant to you in your heart and spirit. May we be competent to hold control on your riches, to be shared with the learned, duly distributed and regulated. 10

While proceeding to the place of sacred worship let us sing hymns to the fire divine, who hears us even from afar; 1

Who, from time immemorial, has been preserving wealth for the worshipper, when malevolent men are assembled together to do harm. 2

Let men praise the fire-divine, as soon as generated,—the dispeller of ignorance and winner of wealth in every struggle of life. 3

You render his sacred worship acceptable in the house of the one where you love to be the messenger and whose offered gifts you convey for nourishment. 4

O fire-divine, the source of vitality, all men proclaim Him (fire of sacrifice) alone as fortunate, as the giver of offerings, the possessor of divine qualities and as the performer of sacred rites. 5

Whensoever you go on a mission of virtuous sages on a chariot (aura of glory) yoked with horses (beams), not a sound of movement is heard. 7

O fire-divine, the offerer protected by you becomes strong and possessor of food, and shakes off the former feeling of inferiority, and is raised to a superior status. 8

Verily, O divine fire, you grant brilliance, vigour and abundance to those who give offerings to the divines (Nature's forces). 9

O foremost fire-divine, attend to our most favourable and delightful hymn and accept the offerings with grace. 1

O dearest amongst the fire-priests, foremost fire-divine, now may we recite our gratifying and most agreeable prayers to you. 2

O foremost fire-divine, who is your kin amongst men ? Who is your worthy worshipper ? Who indeed are you ? And on whom do you depend ? 3

O foremost fire-divine, indeed you are alone your kin amongst men, you are their beloved friend, a friend whom friends may supplicate. 4

O foremost fire-divine, may we worship you as the source of light and source of bliss and other divine virtues and perform the sacred rites in your own house. 5

How may the mind draw near you to please you, O foremost divine ? What hymn of praise shall bring us greater blessings ? Who were the illustrious ones who gained your favour through worship ? How shall we pay you our reverent homage ? 1

Come hither, fire-divine; be with us as our guide and our ever-vigilant leader. May the all-pervading heaven and earth, love you. May you win favour for us from Nature's divines. 2

May you burn up all the obstructive forces, O fire-divine, and ward off evil powers from our sacred works. May you bring hither the Lord of divine bliss with his aura of glory. Let us welcome Him, the bounteous giver as our guest. 3

I invoke you, O consumer of sacred offerings for gaining progeny; stay among us along with other divinities. Yours is the task of a cleanser and a presenter. May you awaken us, O depository and generator of wealth. 4

O fire-divine, at the sacrifice performed by the ancients, you, as if a sage amongst sages, carried over the essence of ablations to all Nature's divines. So again, may you today, O invoker of Nature's forces, disperse these oblations poured with an exhilarating ladle. 5

How shall we pay homage to the foremost divine ? What hymn, should we recite to Him, who is, God-loved, refulgent, deathless and true to law ? He, being the guide and performer of sacred rites, whilst present among men, conveys oblations to the cosmic powers. 1

Bring Him with reverence here. He is most propitious in sacred performances, true to law, and eager in conveying worshippers. For the foremost divine, when He seeks other cosmic powers for mortals, knows them fully well and honours them with reverence. 2

He is an embodiment of action, and He is destroyer and reviver, and, like a friend, He is a true guide who carries with Him wondrous benefits. The reverential devotees, aspiring to attain divinity, address Him first in holy fire rituals. 3

May this fire-divine, foremost leader amongst men and the destroyer of adversaries, accept with love our hymns and our devotion. And may those who are affluent and whose strength is strongest, and by whom the food has been produced, also participate in this devotional service. 4

Thus, the fire-divine, true to order, and, by whom all mysteries become known, has been praised by the possessors of excellent wisdom. May He augment in them splendour and vigour. Observant as He lists, He gathers more nutritional strength. 5

The fire-divine in mid-air's expanse is the agitator of the clouds. It has golden tresses: it is like a raging serpent, and the rushing tempest. It shines with a bright radiance. The dawns are not aware of this, like the honest dames, ever busy with their own affairs. 1

O fire-divine, your falling rays strike against the moving clouds. Thereon the black shedders of rain roar; after this the shower comes with delightful and smiling flashes of lightning; the rains then descend and finally the clouds thunder. 2

When this lightning-thunder comes down with the world-sustaining milk of rain, and carries it by the most direct ways to the channels of water, then the wind, the sun, the ocean, and all encompassing space contribute to refilling the womb of clouds with water. 3

O fire-divine, lord of food and cattle, source of strength, congnizant of all that exists, give us abundant sustenance. 4

He, the fire-divine, who is wise and who grants dwellings, must be exalted by our hymns. O fire, glowing with many flames, shine radiantly on us for providing food and wealth. 5

O shining fire-divine, may you drive off at night and at dawn the pollutants with your sharp flames. 6

Adorable in all our rites, favour us, O fire-divine, with your aid, when the great hymn gayatri is chanted forth. (One of the popular metres, with syllables 8+8+8; the word literally means "the one who protects the chanter"). 7

O fire-divine, grant us the choicest riches that dispel poverty and cannot be taken away from us in any of our adverse circumstances. 8

O fire-divine, give us through your grace wealth that supports and gives happiness all through our life. 9

O most enlightened seekers of wealth, offer your sincere prayers and praises to the sharp flaming fire-divine (the cosmic and the inner fire). 10

O divine-fire, may the person who annoys us,— be he nigh or afar—be won over. May you be with us for our advancement and prosperity. 11

O lower self, great in strength and adamant in determination, when the learned preceptor, with his sweet exhilarating expressions encourages you, you would succeed in expelling darkness from your inner region, manifesting your own sovereignty. 1

O one with adamant determination, the well-expressed sweetness brought by vital breath has exhilarated you, and in your vigour you have struck against the innermost ignorance, manifesting your own sovereignty. 2

May you, O lower self, hasten, assail and subdue. Your adamant determination cannot fail. O resplendent self, your manliness is your strength; may you destroy the evil ignorance with a control over your actions, manifesting your own sovereignty. 3

You have struck the devil of ignorance from off the earth (the exterior) and the heaven (the interior). May you release the vital elements, the sustainers of life and promoters of virtuous actions, manifesting your own sovereignty. 4

The resplendent lower self, aroused with indignation and aspiring for victory, has struck the bolt of determination against the jaw of the trembling devil of ignorance, stimulating the current of virtuous actions (to flow), manifesting his own sovereignty. 5

May the resplendent lower self strike the devil of ignorance on the temple with his hundred edged-bolt of determination, and, exalting with devotion, may he provide means of sustenance for his sense-organs, manifesting his own sovereignty. 6

O resplendent self, seated on the lofty hill, possessor of firm determination, verily, your prowess is undisputed since you, with your skill, have slain that deceptive beast of ignorance, manifesting your own sovereignty. 7

The bolts of determination are scattered over the ninety nine (i. e. numberless) channels. Great, indeed, is your prowess, O self, your strength is deposited in your arms, manifesting your own sovereignty. 8

May the thousand mortal elements of our body-complex worship together the glory of the resplendent self. The twenty (10 organs of cognition and work and 10 vital elements) have honoured (his praise);a hundred (numerous) threads of the spinal cord repeatedly glorify him. These laudatory expressions are for you, O resplendent self, manifesting your own sovereignty. 9

The lower self, the resplendent, has smitten down the power of the devil of ignorance,—might with stronger might; great is his manhood, wherewith having destroyed the ignorance, he released the channels of wisdom, manifesting his own sovereignty. 10

Yea, even this great pair of worlds—the exterior and inner realm—tremble in terror at your wrath. When assisted by the vital principles, you are able to slay the devil of ignorance with your prowess, manifesting your own sovereignty. 11

But the demon of ignorance and darkness did not scare the resplendent self with his quaking and clamour, for the self was firm in determination, as if furnished with iron bolts to strike against ignorance, manifesting his own sovereignty. 12

When you, O resplendent self, encounter with the devil of ignorance, the bolt of determination falls upon him, manifesting your own sovereignty. 13

At your shout, O wielder of bolt of determination, all things, moveable and immoveable, start trembling; even mind, the architect, of evil designs, trembles at your wrath, and quakes with fear because of you, manifesting, O self, your own sovereignty. 14

There is not one, to our knowledge, who surpasses the self in his strength. In him alone all sense-organs repose their manliness, insight, power, and might, manifesting his own sovereignty. 15

In like manner, as of old, in whatever act of worship, the stead-fast persons, the wise elders, and the persons of austerity are engaged—they become one in accepting the virtues of the resplendent self, manifesting his own sovereignty. 16

For bliss and strength, men glorify the resplendent self, destroyer of evil and ignorance. Verily, we invoke Him in conflicts, whether great or small, so that He may come to our aid and defence in noble deeds. 1

O brave resplendent self, you are warrior and giver of abundant benefits. You are the exalter of even the humble. You help the devotee, and are the supplier of ample wealth. 2

When struggles are on foot, benefits from you accrue to those alone who are bold. May you yoke in the sun your wildly-galloping horses. Some you would subdue, and others you would enrich. May you, resplendent self, make us rich. 3

Mighty in brave actions, and terrible in discipline, He, the resplendent self, has raised His strength through nourishments. He is the lord of strong vital powers. Yoked with bright horses to the chariot of the inner realm, He has a firm grasp in both of His hands over the bolt of determination whilst He works for prosperity. 4

He fills the earthly atmosphere (the exterior of the body) and places lights in heaven (the inner realm). There is none like you; none like you has ever been born, O resplendent self, none will be born like you. You have sustained the entire universe. 5

The resplendent Lord gives to us proper food fit to be consumed .by human beings, and distributes abundant wealth so that we may also obtain our due s are. 6

He, the upright performer, gives us prosperity and wisdom at each time of rapture. May you gather for us in both your hands treasures of many hundred sorts. May you make us alert and bring us wealth. 7

Refresh you, O brave, with our blissful devotional prayers outpoured from our hearts for bounty and for strength. We know you, O Lord of ample stores. To you we direct our hearts' desires; may you be, therefore, our protector. 8

These living beings enhance the choicest treaṣure. May you take over, O Lord, the wealth from undeserving hoarders and distribute it amongst the honest workers. 9

Listen to our praises, O bounteous self. Treat us as your own. Since you have inspired us with true speech, you are addressed with the same. So quickly yoke your horses (restrain sense-organs). 1

The sense-organs had their sufficient enjoyment through the pleasure you have given to them. And under the thrill of joy, they have glorified you with commendatory thoughts. So, now, O resplendent self (the lower self), it is high time that you put restraint on them. 2

O bountiful self, we praise you, since you look benignly on all. Thus praised by us, and fully equipped, may you ride on your chariot (human body). May you proceed on righteous path, and put your senses in control. 3

O resplendent self, in the chariot of the body, you have been fully provided with both nourishment and enjoyment through the sense-organs. May the mind ascend that chariot which has a container full of enjoyment and proper nourishment for the yoked horses. Therefore, now, O resplendent self, may you put your horses under control. 4

O performer of totally selfless acts, let your horses be harnessed on the right and on the left, and therewith in rapture of the spiritual elixir, drive your chariot to your beloved (the supreme Self); now put the reins of your senses under control. 5

O wielder of intellect gifted with holy prayers, I yoke your long-maned horses. Now may you depart and take the reins in your hands. The stirring draughts of spiritual juice have been poured out to gladden you. May you rejoice with your beloved in complete union. (supreme Self, the spouse of the lower self). 6

O resplendent Self, the mortal mind, which is well-guarded by your effort and which dwells in the mansion where there are horses (sense-organs), is the first to go to enjoyments (cows). May you grant this mind ample prosperity, and enrich it with abundant riches as the rivers unawares flow in all directions and fill the ocean. 1

As the waters flow to the priestly bowl, as the diffusive rays descend from mid-air, in the same manner the divines conduct the pious man to the sacred performance and are impatient to enjoy it, as the bridegrooms long for their brides. 2

You have laid praiseworthy blessings upon the couple (man and woman) like a pair of uplifted ladles in the sacred ritual ; you have accepted both of them with the devotional chants. They safely live and prosper under your law. You grant strength to the benevolent worshippers. 3

The persons, with vitality and vigour acquired during the first stage of life, procure the fires and kindle them through good deeds and sacrifice ; they regain the smuggled wealth consisting of food, cows, horses. and cattle from the greedy and unlawful hoarders. 4

The steady-minded person first laid down the paths of virtue through the sacred rituals, and thereafter the bright sun, the cherisher of noble acts, was born, Thereupon, the steady-minded person reclaims the lost cattle of wisdom and wealth. In this restoration, the young brilliant youths are also associated. Let us with offerings honour the immortal (resplendent Self) who was born to restrain disorder. 5

Resplendent God is delighted to accept offerings from the homes in which the grass is cut for the sacred rituals, and where the sacred hymns are recited at sunrise, and the voice of prayerful hymns resounds in the sky, and where the pressing stone at sacred rituals rings as it were a singer skilled in song. 6

Come, O strong and courageous resplendent Self, spiritual elixir has been pressed out for you. May you be filled with spiritual vigour as the sun fills the sky with its rays. 1

May speedy coursers (mind and sense-organs) bring resplendent Self of unresisted might here to the place of praises and worship conducted by seers and common folk. 2

O destroyer of the devil of ignorance, ascend your chariot, for your horses have been yoked to it by prayer. May the sound of pressing stone (of mind and vital elements) draw your attention towards us. 3

O resplendent Self, accept these immortal, exhilarating sweet devotional expressions. The streams of this stimulating elixir have been flowing for you here at the sacred place of holy worship. 4

May we sing glory without delay to the resplendent Self, and recite hymns in His praise. Let the bubbling drops of spiritual elixir exhilarate Him ; may you pay reverence to His supreme strength. 5

O resplendent Self, may you yoke your steeds (sense-organs). There is no better charioteer (a guide) than you. None surpasses you in your strength, none with horses howsoever good and trained. 6

Assuredly you alone, O resplendent Self, are the undisputed sovereign and bestower of the wealth of activity to those who offer you oblations. O Love ! 7

Like a weed trampled by foot, when would He crush the greedy and miser who does not offer oblations to the loving resplendent Self. O Love ! 8

He, who with sweet devotional melodies, honours the resplendent Self, verily he gains tremendous strength. O Love ! 9

The pure intellects, associated with mighty resplendent Self for the sake of splendour, taste the sweet diffused spiritual elixir and rejoice in their own sovereignty. 10

Craving for his nearness, various intellectuals mingle the spiritual elixir with their own knowledge. May the milch-kine, dear to the resplendent Self, direct his firm, over-powering determination against the adversaries and rejoice in his sovereignty. 11

These knowledge-giving intellects, at the very outset, honour His victorious might with veneration, and closely follow His laws to win their due pre-eminence, and rejoice in His own sovereignty. 12

The resplendent Self destroys ninety times nine (innumer-able) evils with the help of the rock-like firmness of devotees. 13

Searching for the source of vigour hidden among the mountains, He finds it among true seekers. 14

Then, verily, he recognizes the essential form of the Creators's radiance in the mansion of the mind (moving moon). 15

Who yokes today unto the pole of eternal law the vigorous and radiant horses (sense-organs), whose fury is unbear-able and in whose mouths are heart-piercing and bliss-bestowing arrows ? Long shall he live who honours their services, and feeds them well. 16

When one feels that the lower resplendent self is near the Supreme one, then who flees forth ? Who suffers ? Who is afraid ? Who is aware that the resplendent Self is near ? Who is that one, so close and near ? Who would importune the supreme Self for securing progeny, elephants, property, physical health and a large family ? 17

O my Love, O mighty resplendent Self, may you be with us and be favourable to the mortals. There is none else to give us felicity. For you alone I recite my praises. 19

Let not your bounteous gifts, and let not your protective powers fail us, O supreme Self, any time. O lover of mankind, please bring to us all sorts of riches. 20

The vital principles, offsprings of cosmic vital powers, are performers of mighty deeds and swift in movements. When they go forth they decorate themselves like females. They are gliders through the space within body. They are brave and promote the welfare of heaven and earth and take delight in accomplishing noble deeds. 1

The cosmic vital principles have attained majesty in the upper part of body. Through dedication these vital elements in the body have generated consciousness in the sense-organs. These offsprings of the firmament have put on glory, and having functioned specifically in their respective regions have attained their exalted importance. 2

When they, the children of the sky, shine in bright attire, and on their fair limbs lie their golden ornaments, they are saved from every adversary. All the prosperity flows down to them like waters following their traces. 3

The vital principles, the participators in the sacrifice within the body, glitter with their firm determination and overthrow with their strength even that which is never overthrown. Their colourful desires are very much like the spotted deer yoked to a chariot. They are swift as mind; their object is the showering of blessings. 4

When the vital principles harness their body chariots with the deer-like spotted desires, the torrents of rain from the dark-red clouds rush forth and drench the earth like a hide with water. 5

May your swift-gliding waves bear you here towards the place of sacred performance, and may you come here swiftly with your arms. May you sit on the lawn where a wide seat is made for you. May you delight yourselves with the delicious offerings. 6

Strong in their inherent strength to greatness have these vital principles grown, and having stepped to the firmament have made it their dwelling. The all-pervading God has provided protection to this sacred ritual which is the bestower of all desires and which confers delight. May you, the vital principles, come, quickly as birds, and sit down upon the pleasant lawn. 7

Like brave heroes, desirous of fight, vital principles rush about, and like fame-seeking combatants, they strive in war. Although every creature is afraid of them, they are fearless and terrible to behold. 8

The supreme architect, deft of hand, devises the golden, thousand-edged, and skilfully fashioned weapon of resolute determination. The resplendent Self receives it to perform heroic deeds. He by this destroys the devil of ignorance and forces out of the weapon the stream of virtuous actions. 9

They with their vigorous strength pursue dark deep forces upon high, and, cleave asunder the mountain of ignorance that obstructs the path; the munificent architects, the vital principles, blow upon their pipes in the wild joy of victory of their glorious deeds. 10

Just as the expert engineer constructs canals of water through the winding channels to the place where water is scarce, similarly, the vital principles bring rejuvenation to the thirsty sense-organs. The variously radiant vital principles thus gratify the desires of the sense-organs with life-sustaining waters. 11

Whatever three-fold blessings there are, O vital principles, provide them all to the person who offers homage to you and who is the donor of oblations. Extend the same boons unto us, O vital principles, bestowers of all good, and give us wealth with noble offspring. 12

The person in whose abode the vital elements, descending from the inner resplendent region, have been well-received, is entitled to have graces from the best protector. 1

Honoured with worship, O vital breaths, the bearers of sacrificial performances, listen to the invocations of the sage and the wise, even without offerings. 2

The devotee, whom you vouchsafe to be a noble sage, is assuredly blessed with sense organs rich in wisdom, as a pasture rich in kine. 3

During the sacred performances of this pious devotee, sweet devotional blessings through hymns are showered in the daily rites—to add to his joy. 4

May strong vital breaths, victorious over all persons, listen and may this worshipper obtain food. 5

For, O vital breaths, through your loving and swift help, we have been offering oblations in many an autumn. 6

Fortunate is that mortal, O most adorable vital breaths, whose offerings you receive. 7

O truly strong brave vital breaths, you know the toil of him who sings your praise, and the hearty desire of him who loves you. 8

O source of true strength, may you manifest your greatness and with your lustre strike the wicked. 9

Dispel horrid darkness, drive off exploiters from us, and enkindle the light we long for. 10

O annihilators of enemies, strong-limbed, loud singing, never yielding, never trembling, receivers of elixir, the best-loved, the foremost leaders, may you display yourselves with glittering ornaments, conspicuous like stars in heaven. 1

When, O vital principles, you pile the moving clouds on and close to the hilly slopes; you are like birds flying in several directions. Everywhere clouds shed forth the rain, stored in your cars. May you drop sweetness, honey-hued, around you, for him who sings your praise. 2

When on their way vital principles yoke their aura of waves for victory, earth trembles as a weakling, and works like a deserted wife. They are sportive, progressive, armed with glittering spears, and pounce on all. They themselves announce their own mightiness. 3

The troops of vital principles are wave-borne, ever young, with vigour and are the Lord of this earth. They are truthful liberators from debt, blameless shedders of rain, and are protectors of our sacred rites. 4

We the devotees have learnt from the ancestral traditions that the vital principles are very much associated with the procurement of the elixir of life. These vital principles also help the resplendent Self in the conflict against evils. And, therefore, we sing the attributes of these vital principles with so many glorious names during these sacred performances. 5

These vital principles, having gained splendour through the rays of the sun, join to shed rain and make all happy. They, armed with their spears, decorated as if with bright rings, are fearless and swift-moving. Thus they obtain their highest glory among divine powers. 6

Come hither, O vital principles, on your lightning-laden aura of vitality vibrant with sweet songs, armed with sharp weapons and winged with divine waves. Fly to us with noblest riches like birds, O mighty powers. 1

With their red-hued divine waves and aura of vitality they come for the benediction of their devotees. They are brilliant like gold, destroyers of foes, inflicters of punitive justice and they with their terrific brilliance of vitality and speed frighten all the inhabitants of earth. 2

For the subjugation of desires, you decorate your persons with effective weapons. You inspire intellect to heights like tall trees. O well-born vital breaths, for you the extremely enlightened worshippers procure offerings from even inaccessible quarters. 3

O men of intellect, desirous of water, the days of fortune have come to you. For those who are thirsty, the means of procuring water have been invoked. The very wise men with their invocations have constructed the reservoir to supply spiritual water. 4

When the gifted poet sees the clouds, he feels as if there has appeared before him a brave youth carrying weapons of golden wheels and iron tusks. Thus inspired the poet sings a song the like of which is never sung before. 5

To every one of you, O vital principles, this freshening draught of spiritual elixir rushes like the voice of one who prays. It rushes freely forth from our hearts as these devotions flow towards you. 6

May such auspicious, never-failing, and, elevating works, as are done without any compulsion, be achieved by us in all directions of activity. May the divines grant us protection day after day without any obstruction in our progress. 1

May the benevolent wisdom of the straightforward sages be ours. May the generosity of godly men and their friendship descend on us. May they grant long life that we may enjoy fully. 2

Then we invoke with traditional compliments prosperous men, well-wishers, preceptors, custodians, judges, aesthetes, physicians, surgeons, and educationists. May they be auspicious and givers of happiness to us. 3

May the air be the healing cure for us, and so be the mother earth, and the father sun. May the medicinal juices exracted with the pressing stones be conducive to health. May you the expert physicians and surgeons listen to our prayers. 4

We invoke that sovereign Lord of all that stands or moves, and the inspirer of wisdom for our protection. As a nourisher, He has ever been the defender and promoter of our prosperity. May He continue to be an abiding guardian for our well-being. 5

May the vital principles, resembling soldiers riding spotted horses, offsprings of the variegated mother, resplendent, frequenters of the place of sacred worship, fire-tongued and rediant as the sun, come hither for our protection. 7

O learned people, may we with our ears listen to what is beneficial. O persons, worthy of sacred deeds, may we see with our eyes that is beneficial. May we, engaged in your praises, enjoy with firm limbs and sound bodies, a full term of life dedicated to God. 8

Hundred autumns are assigned to us by God in the midst of our passing existence subject to old age and decay. Those who are sons today shall be fathers tomorrow, and therefore, may we have no afflictions or infirmities in the midst of our life-span. 9

You, blissful Lord, are known pre-eminently for wisdom. You lead us on the straight path under your guidance. O giver of happiness, our forefathers attained wisdom from the enlightened ones. 1

You, blissful Lord, are the achiever of merit through righteous acts. By your insight you are most wise and all-knowing. You are mighty by your power and greatness. You are glorious by your glories and guide all mortals. 2

In your acts you are royally virtuous, O blissful Lord. Your glory is great and profound. You are the purifier of all and you are the beloved benefactor. You are the cherisher of all and the law-giver. 3

Endowed with all your glories on heaven and earth, on mountains, in plants and in waters, O illustrious blissful Lord, may you be considerate, benign, and may you accept our homage. 4

O blissful Lord, you are an embodiment of protection and sovereignty. The destroyer of evil thoughts, you are also the well-wisher; you are sanctity personified. 5

O gracious and praise-loving Lord, you are the lord of medicinal plants; you are our life-cure. May you so bless us that we live without fearing death. 6

O blissful Lord, guard us from all sides from those who threaten us. Never let your friend, a devotee like me, be harmed. 8

O blissful Lord, give such eternal bliss to your worshipper that he for ever feels protected, and happy in your divine shelter. 9

O blissful Lord, cherish our noble sacrificial acts, accept our devotions and be nigh to make us prosperous. 10

We praise your glory in well-versed hymns and sing in divine melody. O blissful Lord, come and abide with us. 11

O blissful Lord, the enricher, the eradicator of disease, the possessor of all wealth, and the augmenter of nutriment, may you be a good friend to us. 12

O blissful Lord, may you rejoice, abiding in our hearts as milch kine in the grassy meeds, like a young man in his own house. 13

O blissful Lord, may the sage embrace in his fold that mortal man who delights in your friendship. 14

O blissful Lord, save us from slander, protect us from distress, and be unto us a gracious friend. 15

O blissful Lord, may you be approachable from all sides. May our vigour be directed towards you. May our knowledge, also be, concentrated in you. 16

O blissful Lord, may all sweet waters be treasured with you, and may powers, energies, and vanquishing vigour be united in you. For our immortality, may you provide us with heavenly spiritual nourishment. 18

O blissful Lord, may all the centres from which food offerings are made, be distributed around the sacrificial place. O giver of wealth and wisdom, and saviour of the brave, O Lord of valour, may you be with us in our noble deeds. 19

To him who worships you, O blissful Lord, you give a milch-cow, a swift horse, and a son who is worthy of noble deeds—eminent in society and an honour to his father. He is assiduous in worship and valorous in action. 20

We extol, O blissful Lord, the invincible, triumphant, granter of bliss, Lord of rain and sunshine, preserver through luminous regions. 21

O blissful Lord, you have generated herbs, waters, and milch-kine; you dispelled darkness with light; you have sustained and expanded the mid-regions. 22

These radiant mother dawns have raised their banners. They have spread their light in the eastern part of the firmament and have brightened all things. Like warriors flashing their weapons, they regularly come and go. 1

Readily have the purple beams of light shot up. They have harnessed red-rays, easy to be yoked. Dawns have been inspiring for work as before and red-hued, they have attained their effulgent brilliance. 2

They sing their songs like women busy in their work. With a common approach and common objective, they illumine with their inherent radiance the remotest parts of space, bringing nourishment to the liberal devotee, the bountiful worshipper, who presents to them songs of homage. 3

She, like a dancer, puts her broidered garments on. Like a cow yielding her udder, she bares her bosom. Shedding light upon all the world, she dissipates the darkness as cattle hasten to the pastures. 4

We have beheld the brilliant light first seen in the east ; it spreads itself and disperses thick darkness. She, the heaven's offspring, anoints her wonderous splendour, as the priest anoints the sacrificial offering. 5

We have crossed the limits of darkness, and the dawn breaking forth has awakened the consciousness of living beings, and has given clear perception. She smiles in the light of glory and has swallowed darkness for our joy. 6

The wise men have praised the radiant daughter of the skies, the inspirer of pleasant melodies. Grant us and our dependents nourishment, horses and cattle. 7

O auspicious divine light, shining in full glory, confer upon us, fame, prosperity, attendants, and craftsmen. 8

The dawn looks on the world with bright eyes, spreading light westward, awakening every living creature. She understands the plea of each and every one. 10

The ancient dawn, born again and again, diminishes the days of mortal life, one by one, like a wolf cutting the birds in pieces.

She has been seen illuminating the horizons at far distances, and she diminishes the days of man's life-span. She continues to shine in all her splendour. She shines with light, like the bride of the sun. 11

The dawn shines forth extending her rays, like a cow-herd driving cattle to pasture, or like the waters rolling their waves, never transgressing the divine commandments. She is beheld visible with the sun-beams. 12

O glamorous dawn, enriched with ample wealth, may you bestow upon us such gifts as may sustain our sons and their sons. 13

O dawn, an embodiment of sweet speech, vigour, and wisdom, may your beauty inspire us this day in such noble performances as may lead us to wealth. 14

O luminous dawn, may you appear in horizon today, verily, as having yoked your purple steeds, and bring unto us all felicity. 15

O twin-divines, destroyers of evils, direct your aura of vitality towards our abode which contains gold and cattle. 16

O twin-divines, creators of day and night, who have brought dawn from heaven to man, glittering with divine light, may you endow us with spiritual energy. 17

In order to cherish our emotional prayers, may Nature's sparkling beauties, awakened at dawn, bring hither the twin-divines, the creators of day and night, the givers of happiness, the destroyers of adversaries, seated in a chariot of the splendour of glory. 18

O preceptors and peace-lovers, may you both bless the man who offers homage, and dedicates himself to you. May he with his children enjoy vigour throughout his long life. 3

O preceptors and peace-lovers, your prowess, wherewith you rescue the senses from the temptations of evils, is manifested when you obtain divine light for all of them. 4

O you both, preceptors and peace-lovers, acting graciously have set up the light of true knowledge in the universe; you both have liberated the flow of virtues and pure thoughts, that were bound in fetters of ignorance. 5

O knowledge and peace, the former one of you has been brought by intellect from an enlightened region, and the latter by an eagle from the hills. Seated on the innermost summit, glorified by prayers, you enhance the scope of sacred acts. 6

To Him who is reverent and all knowing, we offer our devotional prayers; we thoughtfully construct our hymns as an artisan does his chariot. In his association, may our intellect become noble. In your friendship, O adorable Lord, let us never suffer injury. 1

The one whom you bless, succeeds, lives without enmity, and gains heroic strength. He is strong, and never in distress. In your friendship, O adorable Lord, let us never suffer injury. 2

May we have the ability to arouse your love and kindness, for it is through you that the cosmic power partakes of our offerings. May the enlightened one bless us and be with us. In your friendship, O adorable Lord, let us never suffer injury. 3

We channelize our intellectual energies; we offer seasonal oblations in accordance with circumstances. Give us wisdom that prolongs our lives. In your friendship, O adorable Lord, let us never suffer injury. 4

His genial flames preserve mankind and enliven quadrupeds and bipeds with their rays. Shining with various lustre, and illuminating the world, you are superior to the dawn. In your friendship, O adorable Lord, let us never suffer injury. 5

Of this celestial universe, you are the supreme presenter, the invoker, the chief director, purifier and the perfect sage. Conversant with the priestly functions, You perform the rites perfectly. In your friendship, O adorable Lord, let us never suffer injury. 6

You are of graceful form, looking alike from all sides. Though remote, you shine brightly as if close at hand; you penetrate the darkness of night and perceive all. In your friendship, O adorable Lord, let us never suffer injury. 7

May the enlightened sages, who spread spiritual joy, be in the forefront to lead and guide us. Let our denunciation overwhelm the wicked. May you add strength to our eloquence. In your friendship, O adorable Lord, let us never suffer injury. 8

With your punitive powers, may you vanquish those of evil speech and thought, the wicked and the satanic forces whether distant or near. Thus make easy the path for the righteous devotees. In your friendship, O adorable God let us never suffer injury. 9

The bright red rays, as if yoked to your aura of glory, spread through the universe like swift winds, and enwrap the forest trees, as if with smoke-banners. In your friendship, O adorable Lord, let us never suffer injury. 10

At your roaring, even the birds are terrified, as your flames, consuming grass, spread in all directions. Then the path is clear of all obstacles. In your friendship, O adorable Lord, let us never suffer injury. 11

You are known, by your friendly support to the most virtuous and dedicated. Strange is the wrath that guards. May it be gracious to us. In your friendship, O Lord-adorable, let us never suffer injury. 12

O illustrious adorable God, you are a friend of virtuous men. You are graceful sacrificer, and are the bestower of all riches. May we find shelter in your vast, benign, and loving kindness. In your friendship, O adorable Lord, let us never suffer injury. 13

Kindled in your heavenly abode, invoked by devotion, you gracefully, are the most benign; propitiated by praises, you rejoice us. You shower wisdom and prosperity upon your earnest devotees. In your friendship, O adorable Lord, let us never suffer injury. 14

Fortunate are the devotees, to whom you, the possessor of riches, give freedom from every sin with utter completeness, and on whom you shower vigour, prosperity, and children. May we become rich in your riches, O eternal being. 15

O divine adorable God, the showerer of good fortune, lengthen the days of existence of those engrossed in selflessly dedicated deeds. May the pleasing, venerable, almighty God, and the natural forces of oceans, earth and celestial regions preserve and protect us. 16

Two, opposed in their nature, are seen here—working towards their respective goals. Both of them have one child each. One has golden sun, the self-sustained. The other has the brilliant and shining. (Day is the child of the sun, and night the child of the moon). 1

These ten, ever-youthful and vigilant, produce fire, the embryo of architect. They bear around him, long flames which are sharp-pointed, universally renowned, and effulgent amongst mankind. 2

They honour three places of his birth, the mid-air, the heaven, and the waters. Dividing the seasons of the year for the benefit of the earthly creatures, he formed in succession the eastern and western quarters. 3

Which of you know this secret fire ? The infant by his own nature begets his mothers. The source of many waters, he issues from the ocean, mighty and wise, the receiver of oblations. 4

Visible and fair, he grows in brightness, uplifted in the lap of waving waters, spreading his own renown. When he was born, both worlds were alarmed, and taking him for a lion, they pay homage to him. 5

Both the auspicious ones—day and night—wait upon him like two women or like lowing cows (following their calves). They seek him by the paths he has gone. He is the Lord of might amongst the mightiest, whom the priests propitiate with their oblations. 6

Like the sun, he stretches forth his arms with might. Awe-inspiring, he strives to clasp the two borders of the world with his brightness. He forces out from all a brilliant vesture, and clothes the earth with new garments from his mother's realms. 7

He makes for himself a most noble form of splendour, decking himself in his home with milk and waters. The sage adorns the depths of air possessed of great wisdom. This is the meeting place where divine learned are honoured. 8

The vast and victorious radiance of yours, O mighty one, pervades the firmament. O fire-divine, kindled by us, may you preserve us with all your self-bright, undiminished glories. 9

In dry spots, he causes the waters to flow in torrent and enundates the earth with floods that glisten. He gathers all articles within his maw, and moves among the new fresh sprouting grasses. 10

Fed with our fuel-purifying fire, may you blaze for the sake of securing food for us. May the pleasing, venerable, indivisible almighty God, and the natural forces of oceans, earth, and celestial regions, preserve and protect us. 11

Praise Him, O enlightened devotees, as chief accomplisher of noble deeds, acceptor of devotional prayers, and ever-exerting lord. He is the sustainer of all men, source of all strength and giver of continual gifts. The enlightened devotees cherish the company of God, the giver of wealth. 3

May the adorable God, the dweller of the celestial region, the nourisher, the supreme sage, the bestower of heavenly bliss, the guard of mankind, the progenitor of heaven and earth, find a pathway for His off-springs. The enlightened devotees cherish the company of God, the giver of wealth. 4

Night and dawn, influencing each other's radiance, both together, nourish a child--a special fire—who is bright and radiant, and shines between heaven and earth. The enlightened devotees cherish the company of God, the giver of wealth. 5

The adorable God is the source of all wealth, and riches, and is the bestower of property. He is the banner of all noble selfless acts, and accomplishes all benevolent desires. Preserving their immortality, the enlightened devotees cherish the company of God, the giver of wealth. 6

Now and previously too, He has been the abode of riches. He provides habitation for all that exists and all that will come into existence The enlightened devotees cherish the company of God, the giver of wealth. 7

May the supreme wealth-giver grant us the prosperity of movables and may the same wealth-giver grant us immovable objects, too. May He grant us vigour-providing food and may the bestower of wealth give us long life. 8

Fed with our fuel, O purifying fire, blaze for the sake of food. May the loving, venerable, indivisible, almighty God and natural forces of oceans, earth and heaven grant us our prayers. 9

His unparalleled speed is like the rays of the sun. He is destroyer of the devil of ignorance in every conflict. With his swiftmoving friends, He is the most bounteous. May this resplendent Lord, associated with vital principles, be our protection. 2

He emits radiance as sunshine, showers blessings, the heaven's moisture. With His vital strength He is always victorious over adversaries, and triumphs by His manly vigour. May the resplendent God, associated with vital principles, be our protection. 3

He is the fastest among all the fast runners, most bountiful among the bountiful, the mightiest among the mighty, a friend among friends, venerable among those who claim veneration, pre-eminent amongst the eminent. May this resplendent God, associated with vital principles, be our protection. 4

He, associated with vital principles—offsprings of the cosmic vital powers—is furious and has been able to conquer his foes and adversaries. Prompted by cosmic forces He releases waters from clouds and produces food. May this resplendent God, associated with vital principles, be our protection. 5

He is the subduer of sinners, the director of operations. He is the protector of the good. He alone has been invoked by all of us. His glory in the sun has been a blessing to our people up to this day. May this resplendent God, associated with vital principles, be our protection. 6

His protections bring about success in conflicts, and He is pleased by the success. He along with His vital principles presides over every act of worship. May this resplendent God, associated with vital principles, be our protection. 7

In the hours of distress mighty brave men depend on His leadership.for protection and wealth. In the midst of dim darkness of frustration, He is the source of light and encouragement. May this resplendent God, associated with vital principles, be our protection. 8

With His left hand He subdues the malignant and with His right hand He accepts the proffered selfless deeds. Pleased with invocations, He becomes the giver of riches to His worshippers. May this resplendent God, associated with vital principles, be our protection. 9

He alone with His accompaniments is the benefactor. He is immediately recognized by all enlightened persons through the movements of His aura of glory. By His enduring energy He is victor over the unruly elements. May this resplendent Lord, associated with vital principles be our protection. 10

Invoked by His own kinsmen, He proceeds quickly to fight for those who trust Him and those devoted friends who are engaged in conflicts. He helps brave soldiers and their families. May this resplendent Lord, associated with vital principles, be our protection. 11

He is the inflicter of punitive justice on robbers. For them He is fearful and fierce. He is cognizant of all things. He is mighty and praised by all. He is like spiritual elixir, exhilarates all the five classes of beings with his concentrated vigour. May this resplendent God, associated with vital principles, be our protection. 12

His punitive justice is very effective. He is as brilliant as the luminary of heaven, and is the source of all benefits. He is the promoter of beneficent acts. He is the Lord of all treasures. May He, associated with vital principles, be our protection. 13

The black and red beams, yoked to the cosmic chariot of the sun are self-radiant, full of the spectrum of colours, and celestial in appearance. This is fixed on a mighty axle for the attainment of bliss, as if these well-directed beams move on season-forming paths. They move with a speed for the benefit of mankind. 16

O resplendent sun, when you move on with the aura of glory directed with season-forming beams along with the constellations, you give rise to the five seasons: rain, summer, autumn, winter and spring. For this you are complimented with appropriate praises. 17

The much-invoked resplendent sun, along with vital principles, uprooted the mischief caused by parasites and aggressive infections after encounter and laid them low with his enduring action. He, then, with his white brilliant rays acted on the fields and, thereon the solar energy operated in conjunction with water. 18

May the resplendent Lord be our guide day by day and may we surrender totally to Him, and enjoy food. May the loving, venerable, indivisible, mighty God and the natural bounties of ocean, earth and heaven grant us favours. 19

Adore Him with offerings, and devotional songs,—Him, who is blissful, who straightaway destroys the strongholds of evil hidden in dark caves of ignorance. Desirous of protection, we invoke Him to become our friend,—Him, who is showerer of benefits, and who, associated with vital principles, holds punitive justice in his right hand. 1

We invoke for friendship, the resplendent God, who aided by cosmic, vital principles, and with triumphant wrath, subjugates the irresponsible, disrespectful, and the unrighteous ego and also destroys ignoble men. 2

We invoke for friendship, the resplendent God, who aided by cosmic, vital principles, manifests His great creative power in heaven and earth. The sun and oceans obey His eternal laws and the rivers follow His direction, flowing along their assigned courses. 3

We invoke for friendship, the resplendent God, who aided by cosmic, vital principles, is lord and master of wisdom and strength; who controls everyone, who is constantly present in every sacred act, who is widely cherished, and who is destroyer of obstinate abstainers from worshipful acts and those who do not offer oblations. 4

We invoke for friendship, the resplendent God, who aided by cosmic, vital principles, is the Lord of all that moves or breathes, who for the first time restored knowledge to seekers, and who annihilates and humbles low-minded offenders. 5

We invoke for friendship the resplendent God, who aided by cosmic vital principles is remebered by the timid as well as the brave, by the vanquished as well as the victorious, and to whom in times of distress all men turn for support. 6

O resplendent God, associated with vital cosmic principles, whether you are pleased to reside in the loftiest mansion or lowly dwellings, come to the place of our work and worship. O Lord, of imperishable wealth, we dedicate our love and devotion to you. 8

O mighty resplendent God, for you we sing our devotional prayers. Desiring communion with you, we chant devotional hymns and offer reverential homage. May you, associated with vital principles, come to our sacred place of worship and rejoice. 9

O resplendent God, may you be delighted with the effects of your vigorous accomplishments and speak to us. Let your jaws of justice be effective; may your words of blessings be conveyed to us. O God, with splendid crown, may your speedy benevolence bring you to us. O gracious God, accept our loving devotion. 10

May we, while being protected by you, O destroyer of evil, make a common objective with vital principles and sing your glory. May we receive sustenance from the resplendent Lord and may this loving, venerable, indivisible, mighty God and natural bounties of ocean, earth, heaven grant our prayers. 11

For you, O mighty resplendent Lord, I compose and offer my excellent hymns ; may I become worthy of your compassion through my sincere devotion to you. The enlightened devotess exhilarate the victorious Lord through the strength of their prayers to obtain riches and prosperity. 1

The seven oceans bear His glory far and wide. The heaven, sky and earth display His charming form. The sun and moon alternatingly revolve along in their assigned courses so that we may behold the supreme Lord and have faith in Him. 2

O bounteous resplendent Lord, we praise you heartily. May you grant us that same aura of glory, the victory chariot for our victory as the one in which you move, fighting against the evil forces. O bounteous Lord, grant us shelter as we love you intensely. 3

O resplendent Lord, may we, with your aid win all our adversaries. Encourage us in every fight and protect us. Make us worthy of obtaining riches in an easy way and grant us strength so that we may weaken the vigour of our enemy. 4

Possessor of large treasures, O resplendent Lord, those who invoke you for their protection are of diverse groups. Come with your aura of glory to bring us all the benefits. You have intensely resolute mind for victory. 5

His arms may win treasures. His power is boundless. He is best in every action. His protective powers are endless. He inspires us to struggle against evils. None may rival the resplendent Lord in mighty strength. Therefore, the devotees desiring prosperity call on Him on all occasions. 6

O bounteous Lord, your glory exceeds a hundred, more than a hundred, more than a thousand, amid all divinities. You are boundless. Our praises reveal your endless glory. May you destroy the evil forces, O the destroyer of strongholds of evils. 7

O resplendent Lord, the protector of men, with your threefold elements you are governing the three earths and three realms of light. From eternity you are without a rival. [Three elements—tranquility, activity and inertia; three earths—bhuh, bhuvah, and svah ; three lights—tapas, ṛta and satya. 8

We invoke you first among all other divine powers ; assuredly you can subdue all evil forces. May you, O resplendent Lord, infuse your divine spirit in the hearts of your devotees and may you come with your invincible and formidable aura of glory to establish supremacy over evils. 9

You always conquer and do not keep the benefits with you. O bounteous mighty Lord, we invoke you to help and protect us in all our conflicts, be they small or big. May you inspire us to continue fighting evil forces. 10

May resplendent Lord be always on our side to protect us, and may we unimperilled obtain riches in all contests. May loving, venerable, indivisible, and sustainer of earth, heaven and ocean grant our prayers. 11

Prudent sages have formerly been possessed of your supreme light, which they still continue to possess. One light of this shines upon the earth, the other in heaven, and both are in combination with each other like a flag in battle. 1

He upholds the earth and spreads it widely. He having struck the devil of ignorance with His adamantine determination, invigorates the spirit of enlightenment. He destroys the serpentine darkness, puts an end to the fierce demon and through his prowess, annihilates the vices, as they appear in repulsive forms. 2

Armed with adamant determination and confidence in His prowess, He, the all-wise, resplendent Lord moves on— shattering the strongholds of law-breakers. May He, accepting our praises, impose His punitive justice against undisciplined law-breakers and increase the strength and glory of virtuous men. 3

He, the bounteous God, possessing glorious fame, instructs those human races which deserve it. He, the thunderer goes close to the law-breakers to destroy them, and thus obtains the title, "renowned for victorious prowess". 4

Behold the abundant wealth of the resplendent Lord and have confidence in His prowess. He recovers the lost cattle of wisdom, the horses of vigour and the plants, forests, and waters. 5

To Him, who is the performer of all deeds, the possessor and giver of strength, the truly powerful Lord, we offer devotional prayers. He a highwayman, snatches wealth from the godless exploiters and gives it to honest devotees. 6

O resplendent Lord, performer of glorious deeds, when you unsheath dark shrouds to destroy them with your adamantine determination, the vital divine powers greet you, and all other virtues extol you. 7

O resplendent Lord, as you destroy low-mindedness, ego, devilish ignorance, and demolish the strongholds of disrespectful tendencies, so may you, associated with vital principles, be our protection. 8

104

O resplendent Lord, the altar of the innermost core of our heart has been made for you, as if, to sit upon it. May you hasten to appear during our morning and evening worship. May you be as eager as a horse, slackening his reins as he returns to his stable. 1

These persons have come to the resplendent Lord, to solicit His protection. May the Lord guide them along the right path. May the divines repress the fury of demons, and may they bring the venerable Lord to us for the success of sacred deeds. 2

Knowing the secret of possessing wealth, the demon of vagrancy earns riches and carries it off to himself. Let both his wives—greed and lethargy—bathe in the deep sea. O resplendent Lord, may he with his wives—greed and lethargy—be drowned in the depth of that river of luxury. 3

The abiding-place of the vagrant remains hidden in the midst of waters of luxury. The vagrancy of the person is further enhanced by channel-waters of attachment, malice and passion which please and sustain him in the first instance. 4

As the track that leads to the dwelling place of law-breakers is discovered by us, and also, in the same way as a cow knows the way to her stall, O bounteous Lord, may you defend us from repeated violence of unruly persons. Do not cast us away, like a libertine casting away treasure. 5

O resplendent God, may you excite in us reverence for the sun, for the waters and for those living beings which are exempt from sin and as such are worthy of praise. May you not injure our offspring, while yet in the womb, for our trust is in your mighty power. 6

O resplendent Lord, may I have complete trust in you, for you are adored by all. I meditate on you with reverence. May you lead us on to great riches, and consign us not to the house of the destitutes. You grant us food and drink, when hungry. 7

Harm us not, O resplendent God. Abandon us not. Deprive us not of the enjoyments that delight us. O bounteous and supreme Lord, may our unborn offsprings meet with no injury, and may our kids also be spared who are just crawling along. 8

O resplendent Lord, favour us with your presence, as you are famous for loving acceptance of devotional offerings. They are here for us. May you accept them liberally, just as a person, with distending stomach, when offered a favourite drink,enjoys it to the full and consumes in plenty. May you, when invoked, hear us as a father listening to the words of his son. 9

The graceful moon moves with speed in the interspace, while the sun with beauteous wings rides above in the celestial region. The lightning with its golden flash is not aware of your extensive realm. Why this, may I know, O earth and heaven? 1

Those who are worthy of wealth do obtain it. A wife clings to her husband, and the two intertwine in embrace give and receive the bliss of love. And from their union progeny is born, Why this, may I know, O earth and heaven? 2

Never may that light, O cosmic powers, fall from its station in the sky. May we never live in a place, which is without spiritual joy. Why this, may I know, O earth and heaven? 3

I am enquiring from the cosmic prowess around me. As envoy, may it tell me, where the ancient benevolent law-giver is and who the new dispenser is. Why this, may I know, O earth and heaven? 4

O divine powers, you are present in the three-dimensional space of universe, glowing with splendour. Where is your eternal law and where does it fall? Where is my ancient devotional offering to you ? May I know, O earth and heaven? 5

Where is your adherence to eternal truth? Where is the attentive eye of the Lord of justice? Which is the path of the glorious law-maker, by following which we over-come the malevolent? May I know why this, O earth and heaven? 6

I am the same person who in olden days recited many sacred hymns, and yet worries and sorrows consume me as a wolf devours the thirsty deer. May I know why this, O earth and heaven? 7

O embodiment of total selfless actions, my ribs are paining me like the rival co-wives from all sides, or like the rats gnawing at the weaver's thread. May I know why this, O earth and heaven? 8

My centre of gravity is there, where those seven rays are emerging from. This is known to the sun, the creator of the triple concept of time,—of past, present and future, and the offspring of waters. Is that why they pray to the divine sun with affectionate feeling? May I know why this, O earth and heaven? 9

May the five givers of benefits who abide in the centre of the vast heavens, having heard my sacred prayers return to me simultaneously—fire on earth, wind in interspace, sun in heaven, moon among constellations and lightning in clouds. May I know why this, O earth and heaven? 10

High in the mid-ascent of heaven, those birds of beauteous pinions sit—the rays of sun. They drive the wolf of darkness from the path as the sun crosses the restless floods. May I know why this, O earth and heaven? 11

O divine powers, this new hymn is worth chanting, and is for you. "The waters would flow, is the divine law. The light of the sun would extend, is the divine truth." May I know why this, O earth and heaven? 12

O cosmic fire, your commendable relationship is with the divine powers. May you, O all-knowing Lord, bring those powers to benevolent deeds of men. May I know why this, O earth and heaven? 13

The cosmic ocean becomes our preserver. We depend on him for our welfare. He fills our heart with joy. New life is born out of it. Let my sacred worship generate new virtues in my heart. May I know why this, O earth and heaven? 15

The divine sun assuredly charts out that path in celestial regions which is not to be transgressed even by cosmic powers, not to speak of you, O mortals, who cannot even see it. May I know why this, O earth and heaven? 16

Bound at three places—knowledge, action, faith—and entrapped in dark ignorance, the helpless man has been praying to the divine powers for protection. Ultimately the great Lord would hear his voice and indicate to him the path of liberation. May I know why this, O earth and heaven? 17

So often, while I am on my way, the wolf of temptations happens to see me. He tries to lift me up as a carpenter does with an aching backbone. May you know why this, O earth and heaven? 18

Through this hymn, may we aided by the resplendent Lord, and all our brave brethern, conquer in our struggles. May the venerable, friendly, and sustainer God and the Lord of eternal earth, heaven, and ocean grant our prayers. 19

We invoke for our preservation the head of state, the people in charge of social welfare, justice, militia and the preceptors. May these bountiful people save us from all distress just a chariot is rescued from a difficult ravine. 1

O preceptors, come to our sacred works and help us to remove poverty and provide us peace and hapiness, and save us from distress just as a chariot is rescued from a difficult ravine. 2

May our praiseworthy elders and also the daughters of the learned men and ladies, the preservers of old traditional virtues, protect us just as a chariot is rescued from a difficult ravine. 3

At this sacred rite we solicit Him who is the purifier and preserver of brave men. We praise them who give us nourishment. May the brave leaders, with a reputation, save us from distress just as a chariot is rescued from a difficult ravine. 4

O head of the state, make our paths easy. We solicit you for the gift of the twin faculties (one of providing comforts and the other of obviating perils) which are fully beneficial to men. May you protect us from distress just as a chariot is rescued from a difficult ravine. 5

The poor individual is sunk in the well of ignorance. He has been repeatedly praying for deliverance. May the supreme God save him from distress just a chariot is rescued from a difficult ravine. 6

May the goddess of knowledge, along with other teachers and the learned, be vigilant for our protection. May the gracious, venerable, and eternal sustainer of all grant our prayers. 7

O resplendent self and mind, both of you have made your names blessed in having slain the demon of ignorance. Both of you continue to be allies. May both of you sit together and enjoy the elixir of worldly pleasures and make yourself strong. 3

O resplendent self and mind, the fires are kindled for the sacred rituals ; the clarified butter is being poured with the raised ladle. The grassmats have been spread for you. May you come now for more enjoyment having accepted furhter stimulated elixir of pleasures. 4

O resplendent self and the mind-supreme, whatever heroic exploits you have achieved, whatever forms you have adopted, whatever benefits you have provided and whatever friendship you have contacted, come with them all for the sake of enjoying the elixir of worldly pleasures. 5

Both of you come and witness the truthful sincerity and enjoy the elixir of worldly pleasures. I affirm that this elixir of pleasure is extracted by the sense-organs solely to be dedicated to you. 6

O resplendent self and mind, if you have ever been delighted with the offerings in your own dwelling or in that of a learned devotee, or in that of a king, come here from wherever you may be and cherish the elixir in your own true form and nowhere else. 7

O resplendent self and mind, whether you are among the non-violent or the violent, aliens or allies, and also fully-contented, O showerers of blessings, come here from wherever you may be and cherish the elixir in your true form and nowhere else. 8

O resplendent self and mind, whether you are in the lower or middle or upper regions of the inner world, O showerers of blessings, come here from wherever you may be and cherish the elixir in your own true form and nowhere else. 9

O resplendent self and mind, whether you are in the upper, middle, or lower regions of the inner world, O showerers of benefits, come here from wherever you may be and cherish the elixir in your own true form and nowhere else. 10

O respendent self and mind, whether you are in heaven or upon earth, in the mountains, in the herbs, or in the waters, you, showerers of benefits, come here from wherever you may be and cherish the elixir in your true form and nowhere else. 11

O resplendent self and mind, on the rising of the sun and also in the midst of the sky, you may be exhilarated by your own splendour, yet may you come here from wherever you may be, and cherish the elixir in your own true form and nowhere else. 12

Thus, O resplendent self and mind, having cherished the spiritual joy, may you now be the possessor of all kinds of wealth and wisdom. May the friendly, venerable and indivisible Lord and His bounteous creation, including the ocean, the earth and the celestial regions, grant us our wishes. 13

O resplendent self and mind, for wealth and wisdom, I look upon you as my own kinsmen and relations. No other providence but you alone are with me. So I am glorifying you through these devotional verses. 1

O resplendent self and mind, I have heard that you are much more affectionate and loving than a son-in-law or a brother-in-law. I offer to both of you the spiritual elixir of my devotion and address you with a newly composed tune. 2

Those who pray—"Never may we break the link of posterity", and who wish—"May the descendants be endowed with the vigour of their forefathers" attain happiness by the grace of the resplendent self and mind and may these two, destroyers of evil, be nearby to hear this adoration. 3

For the delight of both of you, O resplendent self and mind, the spiritual elixir has been preserved. O vital twins (the in-breath and out-breath), you have handsome arms to give and graceful hands to receive ; may both of you come speedily and mix the sweetness of the elixir with our noble actions. 4

O resplendent self and mind, we have heard at the merit allotments that both of you are most vigorous in the destruction of the demon of ignorance ; come therefore, and be seated in our hearts and enjoy the exciting spiritual experiences. 5

O resplendent self and mind, when the call for the battle against evil is given, both of you surpass all men. And you are vaster than the earth, the sky, the rivers, and the mountains ; and you exceed all other existing regions. 6

O resplendent self and mind, with adamant arms, may both of you grant us wealth, instruct us and protect us with your wisdom. May those rays of wisdom, by which, our ancestors attained together heavenly bliss, shine upon us. 7

O resplendent self and mind, destroyers of the strongholds of evil, instruct us and protect us in our struggles with adamant hands. May the friendly, venerable and indivisible Lord and His bounteous creation, including the ocean, the earth and the celestial regions grant us our wishes. 8

O wise men, the selfless deeds I have performed; I shall perform again and again. The melodious hymns are chanted to celebrate the divine powers. The ocean of the spiritual joy of our devotion is ready for all divines. May they cherish this to their entire satisfaction when offered with the syllables "svaha" (a conventional exclamation uttered at the time of offering an oblation). 1

O wise men, you have been worthy of reverence amongst my ancestors, but you are still immature; you are desirous of enjoying the fruits of actions and, therefore, you have come out (for austerity). O the sons of spiritual archers, please follow the high code of conduct and move to the abode of the bounteous creator. 2

When you, with firm faith which could not be concealed, proclaim your devotion, the divine creator bestows immortality upon you. The ladle for the food of the vital breaths (the revealed knowledge) is one, yet the creator has filled it with the fourfold (has divided in the four sections), — Ṛk (poems), Yajuh (prose), Saman songs) and Atharva (codes). 3

They, though mortals, by constantly performing sacred work and worship, acquired immortality. The wise men, sons of spiritual archers, bright as the sun, acquired in a year's time all types of devotional melodies. 4

The wise men, applauded by the associates, anxious for renown amongst the immortals and desirous of acquiring exemplary glory, started with self-evaluations, as a surveyor measures a field with a rod, or the contents are measured with the help of a vessel repeatedly filled up. 5

As clarified butter in ladles, we through our knowledge would dedicate our hymns to the spiritual architects of the inner realm. These wise men, due to their promptness, have, as it were, come nearer to the sun, the sustainer of the universe, and have ascended to great heights. 6

The most excellent realized seer, rejuvenated with strength, is our protection like our resplendent head. May he, possessed of vigour and wealth, bestow prosperity on us. O God, may we, the one under your care, on a happy day, overcome the hosts of the faithless ones. 7

O realized seers, you provide an attractive skin (i.e. poetry) to the cow of knowledge, and you bring back the son (i.e. virtue) to the mother (i.e. knowledge) and O spiritual archers, you give fresh youth to the old and traditional. 8

O the realized resplendent self, provide us with food and nourishment in our struggles, and bestow upon us wonderful riches. May the friendly, venerable and indivisible Lord and His bounteous creation, including the ocean, the earth and the celestial regions, grant us our wishes. 9

The realized architects of the inner realm, possessed of skill, construct a well-designed chariot, and also build the horse-engines, worthy to be attached to the spiritual chariot of the resplendent self, and they provide the elders with youthful age and also give to the calf its attachment to its mother. 1

Bestow on us for our selfless noble actions the life of the realized resplendent self, and for the performance of noble actions and for our strength such food and nourishment as may provide us with good progeny. May we live long along with our vigorous descendants. May we have all strength in our sense-organs for our prosperity. 2

O realized architects of the inner realm, bestow sustenance upon us, upon our body chariot, upon our horse-like senses. Let everyone daily acknowledge our victorious wealth and may we triumph in our battle of life, over our foes, whether strangers or kinsmen. 3

I invoke for protection the inner self, with its perpetual companion, the architect of the inner realm, the mighty realized soul. I invite wisdom, vigour, vitality, cosmic light, cosmic plasma and the twin faculties to share my spiritual joy. May they direct us to wealth, wisdom and victory. 4

May the realized seer furnish us with ample wisdom to conquer all evils. May the enlightened and victorious self bring us victory in our struggle. May the friendly, the venerable and indivisible Lord, along with His bounties including the oceans, the earth and the celestial regions, grant us our wishes. 5

During the early hours, for preliminary meditation, I adore heaven and earth, fire and pleasant sunshine. O twin divines, may you come willingly with those aids which inspire men to conquer in the battle of life. 1

By which bounteous and virtuous actions, O showerers of blessings, you provide shelter to a banished and eyes to a blind, ears to a deaf and limbs to a lame, and by which you set free a quail bird seized by a wolf — with those aids, O twin-divines, may you come willingly here. 8

By which you cause sweet rivers to flow ; by which you, who are exempt from decay, and gratify the most celebrated, by which you protect a generous, well-versed in the Vedic lore, and best amongst leaders —with those aids, O twin-divines, may you come willingly here. 9

By which you enable an opulent stationary army,—even when it is unable, —to march in battles where thousands of benefits are to be gained and by which you protect vigorous, inspiring and charming youths — with those aids, O twin-divines, may you come willingly here. 10

O bounteous donors, by which clouds shed sweet rain water for the sake of a rich merchant, and by which you protect an industrious devotee—with those aids, O twin-divines, may you come willingly here. 11

By which, you fill a dry river-bed with forcefully flowing water, by which you drive a chariot to victory without exertion to horses and by which persons involved in all the three types of anxiety are recovered—with those aids, O twin-divines, may you come hither. 12

By which you encompass the sun, when far off (to extricate him from total eclipse) ; by which you defend an aeronautical architect in the discharge of his essential duties, and by which you protect a farsighted who is in charge of food stores—with those aids, O twin-divines, may you come willingly here. 13

This most excellent light amid all lights has arrived ; the wonderful, the far-extending, the manifest has been born. As the night is born for the sun's uprising, so she has yielded a birthplace for the dawn. 1

The white shining dawn, the parent of the bright sun, has arrived ; to her the dark one (night) has resigned her dwelling. Both of them, the night and dawn, friendly to each other, immortal, following each other, and mutually effacing each other's complexion, traverse the heaven. 2

The path of these sisters is common and unending. Guided by the radiant sun, they travel alternately,—though different in hues, yet one-minded. Night and dawn, giving birth to all things, clash not, neither do they stand still. 3

Bright guide of benevolent actions, she is seen by us. This tinted dawn, having illuminated the world, has unfolded the portals of our door and makes our riches manifest. She swallows as it were all the regions to be given back again.

The magnificent dawn awakens persons who have been sleeping—some to enjoyment, others devotion, and some others to wealth. She enables those who are almost lightless to see distinctly. The dawn has swallowed as it were all the regions to be given back again. 5

She awakens some to acquire wealth, others to earn food, and a few to achieve greatness ; she prompts some to sacrifices; some to pursue their own professions, and others to activities—and thus inspires all men to their various means of maintaining life. The dawn swallows as it were all regions to be given back again. 6

The young maid, white-robed, the daughter of the celestial regions, the maiden with all earthly treasures, is beheld coming forward, dissipating the darkness, May you, auspicious dawn, shine upon us here and now. 7

Following the path of the mornings that have departed, she is the first of endless mornings to come hereafter. At her rising, she urges forth the living beings and awakens them from slumber, even them who lay like dead. 8

O divine light, inasmuch as you have caused the sacred fire to be kindled, inasmuch as you have awakened men to perform selfless deeds, you have performed the benevolent acts and have done good service to the enlightened ones. 9

For how long a period is it that they should be together—dawns that have shone in the past, and dawns to shine hereafter ? For how long a period would dawns continue to stay ? And for how long a period would they rise, still desirous to bring us light ? The dawns pursue the functions of their predecessors and go forth shining gloriously with the other dawns. 10

Gone are the men, who in the days before us have been looking on the rising of earlier dawns. We, the living, now behold her brightness, and they are coming who shall see her hereafter. 11

May the beings, hostile to acts of devotion, withdraw : for the dawn is the protectress of sacred rites, the guardian of law, the giver of bliss, the awakener of pleasant voices, auspicious, inspiring, the bearer of homage for the divines. May the bright dawn shine on us here and now. 12

The divine dawn, the source of aesthetic wealth has been shining from days eternal. She still shows her light today. So will the immortal dawn shine and move on and on. Exempt from decay or death she goes on as ever in her splendour. 13

The divine dawn on the horizon shines in splendour: She throws off her veil of darkness and, awakening the world, comes at it were, on her well-harnessed chariot with purple horses. 14

Bringing with her life-sustaining blessings, and giving life to the lifeless, she imparts her brilliant lustre to the world. The dawn of today has appeared as the last one of the countless mornings that have gone by, but she is the first among the brilliant dawns that are to come. 15

Arise; inspiring life is revived again; darkness has passed away; the brilliant light is approaching. Dawn has opened a path for the sun to travel ; we arrive at a stage where we start a fresh life. 16

The divine poet, singing the praises of the refulgent mornings, repeats the well-knit words of the sacred lore. So shine today, O dawn, the possessor of affluence, on him who adores; confer on us the gift of life and offspring. 17

May not only the mortal men, but also horses, cattle and progeny prosper in the light shed by dawns. May those persons who offer libations of herbal extracts and recite hymns of praises become like the wind, worthy of favour of dawns. 18

O mother of divine powers, the life-force of the earth, and the ensign of sacrificial works, may you shine forth exalted. May you rise up, bestowing reward on our devotion. O, the universally respected maid, make us eminent among the people. 19

Whatever splendid wealth the dawns bring with them, may it be a blessing to the man who offers praise and worship. May friend, venerable and indivisible Lord with His bounties, including oceans, the earth, and celestial regions, grant us our wishes. 20

We offer these praises to the divine healer, with braided splendours and protector of brave heroes, in order that health and strength may be enjoyed and the bipeds and quadrupeds and all beings around us are nourished and become exempt from disease. 1

O divine healer, may you be gracious to us. Grant us happiness and freedom from disease; we offer our salutations to you, O ruler of valiant men. Come to our families, bringing them bliss, and may we obtain that sound health and peace which our ancestors bestow upon us, having obtained them from you. 2

O bounteous divine healer, bestower of happiness and protector of heroes, may we, through your worship, obtain your splendid wisdon. May you favour us with your kindness by making our posterity happy. May our invincible brave men be always safe. May we perform selfless deeds to gratify you. 3

We invoke for our preservation the inspirer, the wise and impetuous divine healer; may he remove far from us, the antipathies of natural powers; verily, we aspire for His favours. 4

We invoke Him (the divine healer) from heaven with reverence; Him who is stout as a cloud, as if with braided purple splendours. He is radiant and dazzling. May He be possessed of disease-preventing medicaments, and may He grant us health, protection and a secure home. 5

Thus praise, sweeter than the sweets and congratulatory, is addressed to the divine healer, the father of healing elements. May you grant us; O divine healer, the nourishment sufficient for mortals. May you be gracious to me and my children. 6

O divine healer, may you not injure those amongst us who are old or young; harm not the one who is growing or who is fully-grown. Kill not father or mother, not afflict our personal bodies to which we are so dearly attached. 7

O divine healer, may you not inflict injury on our offspring, or other males, nor on our cows, nor on our horses. Inflamed with anger, may you not kill our valiant men. We invoke you and pay you our homage of oblations for granting these favours. 8

O the father of the healing elements, like a herdsman we offer you praises. May you bestow happiness upon us; we adore you. Your auspicious benevolence is the source of successive delights to us, so verily do we solicit your saving help. 9

O Lord of heroes, may the cow-killing or man-slaying divine weapons of destruction be kept far away from us. May the felicity granted by you be ours; may you, the owner of mighty two realms (mundane and spiritual), be gracious to us in granting prosperity. 10

Desirous of protection, we say, reverence be to Him; may the mighty divine healer and the healing elements accept our invocations; may friendly, venerable, and indivisible Lord, with His bounties including oceans, the earth and celestial regions, grant us our wishes. 11

Yonder has arisen with wonderful divine effulgence the eye of our light, life and energy. He has filled the celestial regions, the earth and the interspace with his glory. This sun is the soul of all that moves or is immovable. 1

The sun follows the divine and brilliant dawns, in the same way, as a young man follows a maiden. For the sake of good rewards, pious persons, aspiring to be divine, perform ceremonies according to seasonal times. 2

The sun ascends the summit of the sky, as if driven by the well-limbed swift horses yoked to it, traversing along a road in the interspace, and circumambulates earth and heaven. Our reverence to the blissful glory of the rays. 3

Such is the divinity, such is the majesty of the radiant sun that, when he sets, he withdraws into himself the diffused light (which has been shed upon the unfinished task). When he withdraws the beams from his aura of glory, as if unyoking the coursers from the chariot, the night extends the veiling darkness over all. 4

In the middle of the heavens, the radiant sun displays his form to enable us to see properly the light and life. His rays extend brilliant power on the one hand and, on the other, bring on the darkness of the night. 5

This day, O divine forces, with the rising of the sun, deliver us from heinous crimes and dishonour. May friendly, venerable and indivisible Lord with His bounties, including oceans, the earth and calestial regions, grant us our wishes. 6

116

Just as the wind drives on the clouds, so do I recite these sacred hymns of praises, addressed to the determined fighters against lawlessness. We welcome them to our sacrificial rituals by trimming the sacred grass in their honour. They have been able to provide the ever-cheerful young person with a bride, having freed her from the clutches of molesting rivals. 1

These determined fighters against lawlessness, moving on rapid vehicles and encouraged by the wise men of society, have overcome thousands of miscreants of society in the maintenance of law and order introduced by the state. 2

O twin-divines, save us from the wicked and send the benevolent helping band of people forming a corps to the sea as a dying man parts with his riches. Whereas this helping corps is involved in difficulties, while fighting against pirates, you help us in rescuing them in your floating boats over the ocean and thus you help them in keeping out of waters. 3

These fighters against lawlessness may take three nights and three days to reclaim the rescuing corps. In this reconnoitre, revolving cars having hundreds of wheels, drawn by three (i.e. several) pairs of motors, and the big boats may be involved. This triple operation involves the efforts made in the ocean and in sailing across waters and in driving on to the dry land. Finally they succeed in bringing back the corps out of water. 4

O twin-divines, thus by your valour you achieve success where apparently there is nothing to support, nothing to rest upon and nothing to cling to. And here, with the help of a hundred old ships, you are able to help the rescuing corps, and deliver it back to its own headquarters (as if brought back to the father's house). 5

O twin-divines, the armoured car, as if drawn by a motor resembling a white horse, which you have given to the infantry, whose armed vehicles (horses) are indestructible, may ever lead him to success. This precious gift of yours is always to be celebrated. This automobile of the infantry, the scatterer of the enemy, is always to be invoked. 6

O leaders, twin-divines, you gave to the field marshal, belonging to the stout and strong race, the skill of protection. You filled from the casks, designed after the hoofs of horse, hundreds of the containers of a nourishing drink. 7

O twin-divines, may you apply the fire-quenching cold devices to the blazing flames that encompass the civil population. May you supply to the civil area the food-supported strength. May you extricate the area, O twin-divines, from the darkness into which it has been thrown headlong and restore it to every kind of welfare. 8

O fighters, against lawlessness, may you raise up wells and other water sources and may you make the base which has been turned upward as to give an appearance of a curved mouth, and thus revive the entire water system which has suffered a lot during war operations; may water be made available as a fine drink for the thirsty innocent civilians. 9

O twin-divines, destroyers of enemies, you have provided new youth and prosperity to the old famished nation, and thereby you have given longevity to the down-trodden country; and thereafter you have made the country lord of several bounteous prosperities. 10

O leaders of the virtuous, and fighters against lawlessness, glorious is that celebrated group of yours, worthy of adoration and to be invoked by us, through the help of which you always rescue the dedicated worshipper from difficulties like a concealed treasure from a place, visible from outside. 11

O leaders, twin-divines, I proclaim with a vehemence that an inflicter of punitive justice and the spiritual leader devoted to non-violence, becomes a preceptor of the mysteries of military science (figuratively meaning 'assuming the head of horse') to meet the emergency for the sake of happiness. 12

O twin-divines, fighters against lawlessness, accomplishers of desires and protectors of men, whenever an intelligent lady invokes you with a deep-felt request, her prayer is granted like a request made by a student to the teacher; you two divines, give to the lady the golden hand of assitance. 13

O the leaders, fighters against lawlessness, you liberate the helpless girl from the clutches of the kidnapper, as if the quail from the mouth of a dog that has seized her. You, who are the benefactors of all, have given protection to the intellectuals and those who are engaged in the persuit of knowledge. 14

The foot of an army commander is likely to be cut off like a wing of the bird in an encounter during the night. In such a case, may you provide an iron leg to the commander, so that his army may march under his command to attack the guarded treasure. 15

The innocent straightforward state employee gives hundreds of undue privileges to a party of the vested interests (as if giving a hundred sheep to the butcher to be cut to pieces); the protector of the state passes an order for rendering him blind. The state physicians and surgeons are called to give him back the eyes that were rendered sightless so that he might see again. 16

The daughter of the sun (dawn) ascends your car like a runner to a goal when you win the race with your swift horse. All the divine powers, supported you with eager eyes. This was victory for the truth. 17

O twin-divines, when, on invitation, you go to the dwellings of the devotees, dedicated to learning, and give them ample valuable presents, then your helping chariot contains food and treasure in abundance. Yoked to your chariot are valour and discretion. 18

O defenders of the truth, bearing strength and wealth with posterity, go to the loyal people to give them vigour-sustaining food and other three types of sustenance—clothes, medicines and equipment useful for domestic work. 19

Irresistible fighters against lawlessness, you march by night in your foe-overwhelming car, and march to the unfortified cities, surrounded by enemies through approachable roads, and at times you also march to inaccessible fortresses for victory. 20

O fighters, you preserve, brilliant leader so that he may obtain in a single day thousands of acceptable gifts. You are the showerer of the benefits and associated with the head of the state. You destroy the malignant and protect the granaries from the attack of enemies. 21

O fighters against lawlessness, you have been able to raise water from the lower level of the valley to the top for the thirsty sons of the loyal citizen, and by your powers you also give protection to the barren cows and enable them to yield plentiful milk for the exhausted and famished people. 22

O twin-divines, fighters against lawlessness, by your acts to the public you restore such children of the charming parents as are soliciting your protection, and as have been adoring you and are lovers of rectitude; you also give true guidance to the unruly younger elements of society. 23

Just as the extract of medicinal herbs is raised in the ladle for the fire oblation, similarly you raise a realized sage in distress from the deep well of ignorance, where he has been lying, bound with the strings of bondage for numberless nights and days, quite unattended and suffering in agony as if wounded and injured. 24

O twin-divines, I have very well described your achievements. May I become the master of my house, having abundant cattle and numerous progeny; may I retain my physical and intellectual vision and with that may I be enjoying a long life. And may I enter into an old age, as if, one entering into his own house. 25

O twin-divines, may you be entertained by sweet drinks. We the loyal subjects adore you. And in that honour the former ritual of pouring the offering on the sacred grass is accomplished, and the hymn is ready for your laudation. Come, O fighters of truth, for the maintenance of law and order. 1

With that vehicle, O twin-divines, which moves with the speed of the mind, and which is drawn by good horses, and with which you proceed to the house of the virtuous, may you come to our house also. 2

O twin-divines, the leaders and showerers of benefits, you are able to rescue the eminent citizens consisting of seers, virtuous people and those very well respected by the five classes, and the foreigners, from the prison of the wicked with other co-prisoners. You destroy the enemies and baffle the devices of the malignant. 3

O leaders, showerers of benefits, you restore the realized sages, tortured by unassailable enemies, as if thrown into the water and wounded. You arrange for the healing of their wounds like curing a horse. One can never forget your previous achievements which never become old. 4

O twin-divines, the destroyer of enemies, you extricate a worshipper cast into the well of ignorance in the same manner as one extricates from the depth of the earth a handsome and splendid ornament designed for embellishment, or like the sun who disappears in darkness but reappears again from there. 5

O leaders, fighters against lawlessness, your accomplishments are to be celebrated by the field marshal belonging to the race of the stout and the strong with the drinks filled in containers designed after the hoofs of the horses. 6

O you leaders, twin divines, you restore true guides and representatives of the public and charming youths. You bestow husbands to such talented unmarried maids with sweet voices as grow old and tarry in their father's dwelling. 7

O twin-divines, you give lovely brides to learned young men; you also give sight to an intellectual who is unable to see his way through darkness. O showerers of benefits, this graceful action of yours is also to be glorified by which you give hearing to the young group of leaders. 8

O twin-divines, assuming many forms, you give swift horses to the infantry, through which it could win thousands of treasures; the infantry which is powerful, irresistible, the destroyer of foes, an object of praise and one who carries across the dangers. 9

O twin-divines, the liberal givers, these achievements of yours are to be celebrated, and the resounding prayer propitiates you, while abiding in heaven and earth. When the learned friends invite you, may you come with food and grant strength to us. 10

O twin-divines, fighters for truth, glorified by the young and steady-minded persons, and the givers of food to the sages, you restore the town administration. 11

O twin-divines, the blessed sons of the heaven, showerers of benefits, is it not that, whenever you go to the residence of a poet to listen to the composition, you raise up on your way the needy sages from the poverty as if a buried vessel full of gold has been unearthed ? 12

O twin-divines, physicians, you render the old composer of songs young by your knowledge of medicine. The daughter of the sun, the dawn, O fighters for truth, invests your chariot with beauty. 13

O redeemers (the twin-divines), the saviours from the wicked speak highly of you, always as ever. You again earn laurels, whenever you bring the benevolent helping corps from the tossing ocean—ships, equipped with rapid-driving propellers. 14

O twin-divines, showerers of benefits, a helping corps belonging to saviours glorifies you, when after rescue, it could cross the ocean and reach the place of safety, and when you provide a swift car, well-harnessed, to bring it to a safe place. 15

A helpless girl glorifies you when saved from the clutches of kidnappers, as if a quail is rescued from wolf. You carry the devotional prayer to the top of mountain in your triumphant chariot and slay crooked mischief-mongers with deadly poisonous weapons. 16

You restore eyes of a straightforward employee who gives hundreds of privileges to a party of vested interests (as if presenting sheep to a butcher to be cut to pieces). The indignant father of a state passes an order for rendering him blind. You give light to the blind so that he might see all things clearly again. 17

The vested interests appeal that the sense of blinds be restored, so that they may enjoy themselves and say : O twin-divines, showerers of benefits, leaders of the sacrifice, this straightforward employee, as a youthful gallant, has given me a hundred and one privileges for personal use. 18

O twin-divines, worthy of laudation and showerers of blessings, your powerful guidance is a source of happiness. You cure maimed and invalids. For this reason songstress calls upon you. May you come here for help. 19

O destroyer of enemies, you fill the milkless, barren and emaciated cows, and exhausted people with milk. By your powers you bring the daughter of a friend of people to become the wife of a cheerful young man. 20

O twin-divines, after the ploughing, you cause barley to be sown (in fields) for the welfare of mankind. You milk the cows, having destroyed the aliens with a thunder bolt. You bestow great satisfaction upon cultivators. 21

O twin-divines, you inspire a leader dedicated to the principle of non-violence to become a teacher of the mysteries of military science. True to his promise (figuratively meaning putting the head of a horse on a man's body) he also reveals the science (of surgery), learned from his preceptor, and this knowledge becomes supplementary to you, as if a girdle of your waist. 22

O sapient twin-divines, and fighters for truth, I invoke you for the attainment of benevolent wisdom. May you protect all our mental faculties and grant abundant and excellent wealth along with offspring. 23

O liberal, bounteous twin-divines, you give the golden hand of assistance to an intelligent lady. You restore to life a virtuous person, seriously-wounded at several places (physically in head, body and legs or spiritually in the mental complex). 24

O twin-divines, showerers of blessings, your accomplishments have been celebrated by our forefathers and we also offer you our adoration. May we always repeat your glory along with other associates in this synod. 25

O twin-divines, showerers of benefits, may your automatic, elegant and triply-chained rich chariot, swift as a hawk, quick as the mind of a man, rapid as the wind, come hither towards us. 1

O twin-divines, come to us with your triply chained, triply covered chariot, with triple wheels and well-constructed. Replenish our cows with milk, give spirit to our horses and augment our young posterity. 2

O twin-divines, destroyers of our foes, may you be here with your quick and well-designed movement. May you hear this praise from one who reveres you. Is it not so, that the ancient sages have been saying that you come to avert poverty with swiftness ? 3

O twin-divines, and the fighters of truth, may your quick-moving prancing steeds, rapid as falcon, yoked to your chariot bear you hither. These horses are shining like the sun and like eagles move swiftly through space to convey you to the place of operation. 4

O leaders of the battle, youthful victory is seated along with both of you in your car as if the youthful daughter of the sun between you two. May your strong-bodied prancing fleet and shining horses bring you to the battle-field. 5

May you, the destroyer of foes and showerer of benefits, elevate the devotee by your skill and endeavour and raise the realized sage with your strength. You save the benevolent and rescue the intelligent across the sea and you also give new youth to an exhausted seer. 6

You, solicitous of worthy praise, give relief to the civil population surrounded by the forces of the enemy and protect them from scorching heat and feed with food. And you give vision to a blind intellectual. 7

O twin-divines, you provide the cows belonging to old peaceful persons with milk, when they implore you for help. You also liberate innocent kidnapped girls from the clutches of kidnappers (as if a quail from the mouth of wolf) and you also give, as it were a new leg to a chief town administrator. 8

O twin-divines, you both give to our infantry brilliant, foe-trampling, foe-defying, loudly roaring, high-spirited, strong-bodied vigorous vehicles, capable of acquiring a thousand treasures in exploits. 9

O twin-divines, nobly born, leaders, we solicit your help and call you for our protection. May you come here in response to our prayers on your treasure-laden chariot for our well-being. 10

Come to us, auspicious fighters for truth; come with the fresh swift vigour of a hawk. Bearing an oblation, I invoke you, O twin-divines, at the first break of ever-constant dawn. 11

119

With the desiie of procuring food and the object of protecting my life, I invoke O twin-divines, your wonderful chariot, swift as mind, drawn by swift horses, worthy of veneration, equipped with thousands of banners, bearers of rain containing hundreds of types of wealth and conferring delight and riches. 1

O twin-divines, whilst the chariot moves, our minds are elevated in praise, and then our hymns sweeten the oblation; the assistance comes from all directions and victory is assured as if the brilliant dawn ascends the car. 2

O twin-divines, when devout and unnumbered soldiers, victorious in battles and mutually contending for wealth, come together, your chariot is perceived on your downward course, in which you bear excellent wealth for the learned. 3

O showerers of benefits, you bring him back to his parents, the one who, borne by his own steeds, is about to perish, but who has been rescued with your self-harnessed horses and sent back to his distant dwelling. This is a great service which you render to people dedicated to learning. 4

O twin-divines, your admirable horses bear the chariot which you harness for the sake of honour, and the damsel (victory personified), who is the prize, comes through affection to you as if surrendering with such words, "I have accepted both of you as my Lord". 5

Both of you give protection to the group of realized sages from the violence around them. You counteracted the miseries of the civil population, as if quenching the scorching heat with snow. You produce milk in the cows belonging to peaceful persons (i.e. give them prosperity). 6

Ká rādhad dhótrāṣvinā vām kó vām jósha ubháyoḥ | kathā́ vidhāty ápracetāḥ || 1 ||

O tactful destroyers of enemies, you restore health to worshippers, debilitated by old age, as if repairing a worn-out car, and you bring forth the genius from his very inception (as if blessed from very embryonic stage). May the achievements of both of you be exemplary for those who offer you homage at this place. 7

You always reward him who stands in support of you in the nation's service, and has been abandoned by his own father for serving the nation and joining you from afar. The prompt defence planning of both of you have been wonderfully applauded on account of its brilliance. 8

The honey-seeking bee also murmers your praise. The poets invoke you in the rapturous joy of devotional prayers. You inspire the mind of the leader, dedicated to the principle of non-violence, to become a teacher of military science and (as if with the head of horses) he reveals the science of warfare to you. 9

O twin-divines, you give to the infantry the white horses (automobiles) desired by many, the breaker-through of combatants, shining, invincible as lightning and not to be won over by our enemies in battles or wars, and fit for work in all eventualities. 10

O twin-divines, what praise would be acceptable to you? And what, indeed, would be pleasing to you both? How may an unintelligent person pay befitting homage to you? 1

O learned twin-divines, the persons devoid of knowledge, and also those who are unintelligent, frequently inquire about the means of invoking the all-wise, for everyone other than the twin-divines, is unknowing, —none of the mortals has any answer. 2

We invoke you who know all things; may you, who are omniscient, declare to us today the praise that is acceptable. With an eagerness to be in your company, I praise you with reverence through these offerings. 3

I am not inviting those learned people who are still immature, but you, O redeemer, come and accept the wonderful and strength-giving elixir, along with the cooked offerings, and make us vigorous. 4

This hymn is being repeated by one belonging to the line of musicians and by mature devotees and by those adept in fire-rituals. May the person of creativity, needing nourishment, obtain it in abundance. 5

May you hear the song of a stumbling ignorant and, verily, O twin-divines, I glorify you, since it is only through you that the blindness of ignorance is removed. You are the protector of those who are honest and sincere. 6

You have been the giver of great riches, which again by your grace have been taken away by us. May you, the donors of dwellings, become our preserver and may you protect us from the felonous wicked. 7

O twin-divines, may you not hand us over to our adversaries. May our cows who nourish us with their udders never get stray from our houses and be separated from their calves. 8

Those who adore you obtain riches for the support of their needy friends. May you direct us to opulence with a plentiful supply of food ; may you direct us to food along with the wealth of kine. 9

I have obtained the self-driven car (self-propelled car without a horse) (the human body) of the food-bestowing twin-divines, and with the help of this I expect to procure wealth in abundance. 10

May this wealth-bearing car increase my prosperity and may this delightful car carry luxurious sweet drinks. 11

I am sorry for those who remain asleep and who do not share their wealth with others. For both of them quickly perish. 12

When will the resplendent divine and the granter of riches listen to the praises thus offered by the priests conversant with the fire-ritual, devoted to the divine forces ? When He perceives the priest engaged in the dedicated service, He expresses His satisfaction and pleasure. 1

He verily upholds the heaven; He is the brilliant leader of the group. He pours forth the flowing water across our fields for food. The mighty resplendent self manifests Himself for His own daughter, the dawn ; and He has been able to evolve from the horse's (from the sun's) mate (the earth), the heifer (the moon) (Here the earth is the mother of moon). 2

May He illuminating the purple dawn, listen to the invocation, and bestow daily the wealth upon priests conversant with fire-rituals. May He sharpen His fatal shaft. He supports heaven for the good of men, quadrupeds and bipeds. 3

Pleased with these devotional prayers, may you restore the celebrated herd of cattle carried away by wicked people to an unknown place. And when the keeper of the three worlds takes part in the struggle, He breaks open the doors of the enemies for restoration;— 4

—when the parents, quick in act, the protectors of the world (heaven and earth) bring nutritious and invigorating oblation to you, and when they offer you the precious milk of the milch-cow. 5

Now the resplendent Lord is manifested ; may He be the subduer of our foes and grant us happiness. He shines brightly like the sun of this dawn. May we all enjoy the excellent sweet drink, sprinkled upon the space of sacrifice with ladle. 6

While the array of clouds, shining along the rays of the sun, is on the verge of pouring rains, the resplendent sun, for the cosmic sacrificial act, removes the shroud of clouds. O resplendent sun, when you shine upon the days that are appropriated to the sacred rites, then success comes to the person in the cart, the driver of the cattle and the active shepherd. 7

The vigorous rays of yours are spreading all over the vast illuminating region and they are carrying away moisture from the shining water reservoir, with the help of the swift moving wind in the same manner as the sweet, invigorating and delightful songs are tuned by devotees. 8

When invoked, you, the swift destroyer of foes, send down your red-hot rays with speed, as if you are hurling your punitive justice upon the quick-moving darkness. 9

When the sun emerges out from its struggle against darkness, O the wielder of the iron missile, you break the cloud causing constant annoyance ; and you sunder the well-fastened covering over which the pollution spreads on a large area. 10

Then the vast powerful and immovable earth and heaven animate you, O resplendent sun, to glorious deeds. And with your mighty iron missiles, you hurl down into the waters the destructive dark clouds spreading everywhere. 11

O splendid, radiant and resplendent sun, the friend of men, mount the horses whom you cherish, who are fleet as the wind, who are eaisly yoked and who bear the burdens well. May your rays be sufficiently activated for the destruction of the clouds, darkness and pollution in the same way as an iron missile is sharpened. 12

O glorious resplendent sun, may you stop your yellow horses, which drag the wheel of your chariot in the opposite direction,—the one of back-gear,—drive them away to the opposite bank of navigable rivers where the non-worshippers, the infidels, reside. 13

O resplendent Lord, with adamantine determination, may you preserve us from this affliction that is so difficult to be destroyed, and from misfortune in conflicts; grant us riches and plentiful chariots and speedy horses for the sake of food, fame and happiness. 14

NOTES ON BOOK 1

Hymn-1

For verses 1, 2 and 9, see Nir. VII. 15; VII. 16, and III. 21 respectively.

Agni, Adorable Lord—From agra, (अग्र) first, and √ni (नी), to lead; one who is invoked first; the foremost leader; one of the attributes or names of the Supreme Lord (Ṛv. I. 164. 46; Yv. XXXII. I); the same as Brahman (SBr. I.4.2.11); the same as Atman (SBr. 1.2.3.2); the Vratapati (Lord of observances or pledges), of learned men (SBr. I.1.1.2.5); Agni is the foremost leader; he is led foremost in sacrifices; he makes everything, to which it inclines, a part of himself: he is a drying agent; it does not make wet; it does not moisten (स्थौलाष्ठीवि); according to Sakapuni (शाकपूणि), it is derived from three verbs, from going (takes a from √इ to go), from shining (अञ्ज्), or burning (√दह्) and from leading (√नी) (Nir. VII. 14.15). Dayananda derives Agni as अच्यते प्राप्यते सत्क्रियते वा, वेदादिभि: शास्त्रैर्विद्वद्भिश्चेत्यग्नि: परमेश्वर: i.e., that Supreme Lord is Agni who is venerable, adorable, is available everywhere, and respected by learned and glorified by divine texts and sacred lore.

In the realm of mental complex, Agni is one of the most brilliant and powerful master of the intelligent mind, whilst Chandra (चन्द्र) is at the back of smṛti (स्मृति) or Prajna (प्रज्ञा). Surya (सूर्य) inspires satyam (सत्यम्), Indra is invoked for understanding and manas; Vayu is the divine faculty regulating suksma prana; Mitra, Varuna, Aryaman and Bhaga are four masters of emotional mind or character; Bṛahaspati of the sahaituka cit (सहेतुक चित्); Brahman of the sahaituka sat; (सहेतुक सत्) Agni of the sahaituka tapas (सहेतुक तपस्).

Agni in the material realm is the master of tejas (one of the five material principles). Tejas itself is of seven kinds; chaya (छाया) or negative luminosity, pertaining to the anna kosa (अन्न कोष); twilight or dosa (दोष), the basis of the prana kosa (प्राण-कोष) being tejas, modified by chaya; tejas proper, or simply clarity and effulgence, dry light, pertaining to the manah kosa (मन: कोष); jyotis or solar light. pertaining to the brilliance of the vijnana kosa (विज्ञान कोष); agni or fiery light, pertaining to the cit kosh; vidyut or electrical illumination, which is basis of the ananda kosa (आनन्द कोष); and prakasa, the basis of the sat kosa (सत् कोष). (Aurobindo, Hymns to the Mystic Fire, P. 445) Aurobindo translates Agni as God-will.

Ile, worship—From √il, (इळ) or √il (ईळ) to adore, to love, to embrace, to praise, and even to desire or yearn for.

Purohitam, the high priest.—It is a compound word from Purah (पुरः), originally the genetive of pur, used adverbially, meaning in front of or prior to, and hitam, which may be regarded as the participial adjective from the √hi (हि) to cast down, throw down, plant, place, and hence purohitam may mean set or planted before. The Supreme Lord is purohita, because he has been sustaining the universe from the earliest times through the cosmic laws of gravitation, attraction, coalescence, separation etc. (Daya.).

Yajnasya, of cosmic activities.—Yajna (यज्ञ), lit., organized activity of benevolence, is a well-known act of worship, according to etymologists; or it is an act of supplication (to gods); or it is sprinkled with the Yajus formulas. It has a large number of skins of black antelopes (Aupamanyava, in the Nirukta III. 19). Dayananda regards yajna as all the public acts of service and dedication, including education, charity, science and technology, the performance of the agnihotra and asvamedha, etc. It is a supreme act of selfless service. Yajna is synonymous with Visnu, the omnipresent Lord; it is again synonymous with dharma or duty and yoga. The word is derived from the √yaj (यज्). Yajna also refers to the cosmic creation, which is the supreme selfless act of our Lord, the Creator.

Devam, the divine.—The Nirukta (VII. 15) derives the word from √da (दा), to give gifts, from √dip (दिप्) to shine, and from √द्युत्, to radiate; and hence deva is so called from making gifts, from being brilliant, from being radiant, and it means our Supreme Lord, because His sphere is heaven. Deva is also known as devata. (Nir. VII. 15). The word also stands for the shining celestial bodies, for learned persons and in respect, it is used for elders too.

According to Aurobindo, we have so often secondary and primary roots. He derives the word yajna from the primary √ya (या), which means to go quietly or persistently, etc. and from this root is derived the secondary √yaj (यज्), in which the force of the consonant i (इ) determines the meaning. Its essential nature is swiftness, decisiveness, rapid brilliance, and restlessness. It has, therefore, a frequentative and intensive force. It means to love habitually, and fervently, so to worship, to adore. It means to give freely, wholly or continuously; from these shades comes the meaning of sacrifice. It means to master thoroughly, habitually, with a continual repetition of the act of mastery. It means therefore, to rule, govern, order or possess.

That is why, yajna is Visnu, with sense of the Almighty Ruler, the Master of man's action, body, thought, the Supreme Lord, ruling from the higher faculty in man, the parardha (परार्ध) or Saccidananda.

Aurobindo derives devam from the secondary √div (दिव्), to flash, gleam, vibrate, play. On the basis of the consonant d we get √da (दा), to cut; √di (दि) to vibrate, √du (दु), to trouble, and from √di (दी), we get √dyu (द्यु) and √div (दिव्) or √div (दीव्) to vibrate shiningly, gleamy, scintillate or play. The Devas are those who play in light; their proper home is in vijnanam, maharloka, karana jagat, where matter is jyotirmaya and all things luminous.

Ṛtvijam, the one working through eternal laws. The word may be variously derived; ṛtu+ij, (ऋतु+इज्) meaning one who sacrifices seasonably: it may be derived from ṛt (truth)+vij (ecstasy or ecstatic). Thus it means one who has the ecstasy of the truth. According to Dayananda, the Supreme Lord is known as ṛtvijam, since He in every creation, in all seasons, gives life to the universe, and also since He is adorable in all the seasons. In the ritualistic period, the word came to mean a ministering priest, the one who may also act as hotṛ (होतृ) and thus present the oblations.

Hotaram, the one who feeds. According to Dayananda, the term means a giver and acceptor both. The Nirukta derives it from the √hu (हु) to sacrifice (according to Aurnavabha), and hence it means the sacrificer. According to Aurobindo, in the original Vedic sense, the word hota (होता) did not mean a sacrificial priest, nor havih (हविः) an offering. He derives the word from the primary consonant h, the essential gunas of which are aggression, violent action, impetuosity, loud breathing, and so challenge, summons etc. Hotaram, therefore, means the warrior, the destroyer of the daityas, a synonym for Agni Jatavedas; havis (हविष्) and hava (हव) mean battle or strength in violent action.

Ratnadhatamam, the one who sustains all that is divine and luminous.—The Nirukta translates it as the "best giver of gifts". Ratnadha means the possesser of the most valuable articles; for our creator, the supreme jewels are the planets, stars and similar celestial bodies; metals, precious stones and gems are ratna in the material sense for the human society. The ending tamam (तमम्) indicates the superlative degree. Aurobindo derives the word ratnadha (रत्नधा), from the primary √ra (र), to vibrate, shake, quiver abroad, the vowel a conveying essentially absoluteness, wideness etc. The ratnadha, in the context of agni means joy-giving, the source of ecstasy.

2. Ṛsibhih, by seers.—Ṛsi is a seeker after truth, the knower, the attainer. He is a seer, with penetrating insight into the mysteries of the revealed Vedic texts; and in his field of specialization, he is an inspired being. "In this manner and with various intentions, ṛsis or seers have visions of the mantras (ऋषीणां मंत्रदृष्टयो भवन्ति, Nir. VII. 3); further, "Seers had direct insight in duty", (साक्षात् कृतधर्माण ऋषयो बभूवुः, Nir. I. 20). A ṛsi devotes himself for the propagation of the Vedic knowledge. (Daya.)*

Purvebhih ṛsibhih, by the seers of the past, those who are already seers.—The preceptors who have already qualified for the supreme academic post. Nutanaih, the new, the present ones, the potential ones; the disciples of the preceptors who are still carrying on their studies under the directions of the preceptors: they are the seers in making; they have the potentiality of being future seers;—in this sense, "the ancient sages and the new" and not in the historical sense as interpreted by ritualistic scholiasts.

3. Rayim, affluence.—It is a synonym of treasure or wealth, wealth of any realm—material, mental or spiritual; it may thus mean knowledge also.

4. Adhvaram, cosmic sacrifice of creation.—Any noble act or public service free from violence and other associated evils, Nir. I. 8; a+dhvara, synonym of sacrifice, a (not) + dhvara from √dhvar, (ध्वर) to kill, i.e. negation of killing or violence of any sort.

5. Hota, giver and acceptor.

Kavikratu, source of knowledge.—Kavi is the inspired person; a wise man; kavi is so called because his presence is desired (from √kam (कम्) to desire), or the word is derived from the root √kav (कव्) to praise (कविः क्रान्तदर्शनो भवति, Nir. XII. 13; a synonymn for the Omniscient Lord). Kratu is knowledge or work (from √kṛ (कृ) or √kra (क्र) to divide, to do, to make, shape, work).

Satyah, truth personified.—True in his being; true in knowledge; true in fruit.

Devah devebhih, unparalleled divine.— Divine with powers divine; devebhih—with shining, divine or learned characteristics. (Daya.)

*यतः साक्षात्कृतधर्माणो धार्मिका प्राप्ता यैः सर्वा विद्या यथावद् विदिता येऽवरेभ्यो ह्यसाक्षात्कृतवेदेभ्यो मनुष्येभ्य उपदेशेन वेदमन्त्रान् मन्त्रार्थश्च संप्रादुः प्रकाशितवन्तस्तस्मात् ते ऋषयो जाताः। (दयानन्द)

Citra-sravastamah, the inspiring; the source of inspiration.—With richest variety of inspired knowledge; whose popularity of fame is most supreme.

6. Anga—O friend of all.

Angirah, living and energetic, vital, pranas or the vital breath is angirah (SBr. VI. 3.7.3). Fire is also so called, since it is born on live coals; live coals are also angiras because they have a mark, or they are bright (Nir. III. 17). The Omnipresent Lord is present as a life-sap in every organ of this creation, and hence He is also angira.

7. Dosavastah, day and night.—Dosa means night (Nigh. I. 7), and in this context, vastah means day.

8. Gopam, sustainer or protector of cosmos.—From go (earth etc., organs of sensation) + pa (to protect).

Dame, creation, in the supreme abode; in the state of the supreme bliss, (also the chamber in which fire worship is performed). Damah—house or home.

Ṛtasya, of the true eternal knowledge; of the primary subtile cause of the gross creation.

9. Supayanah, easy of access.

Pita iva sunave, as a father unto his son.

Svastaye, for our sake, for our good; for the sake of pleasure or well-being; svasti represents a blessing, prosperity, success,benediction.

Hymn-2

For verse 1, see Nir. X. 2.

1. Vayu, here Lord of cosmic vitality. The term stands for a number of connotations; it is the fluid in the mid-region, synonymous with air and wind (Nir. II.8); like fire, solar rays, the sun and Indra, it is a purifier (Nir. V.6); the blessings and enjoyments on the earth are due to clouds, air, and the sun (VII.5); vayu is also known as matarisvan, since it breathes in the atmosphere, or moves quickly in that region (Nir. VII. 26). Vayu may be synonymous with ayu (Nir. IX. 3).

Vayu, is the foremost deity of the middle region; the word is derived from the √va, (वा) to blow or it may be derived from the √vi (वी) to move. According th Sthaulasthivi, it is derived from the √i (इ) to go and the letter v is then meaningless (Nir. X. 1). Vayu is the protector of Soma (Ṛv. X. 85.5). Vayu is one of the epithets of our Lord, since He is infinite strength, is all pervading, and all-sustaining (Daya.). When the the term does not stand for God, the personification in invocations is only poetical (Wilson).

Dayananda derives vayu as यो वाति जानाति धारयत्यनन्तबलत्वात् सर्वं जगत् स वायुः, i.e. that Lord is so called because He knows and sustains everything, the entire creation by His infinite potency.

2. Soma, sweet emotional yearnings.—It is the conceptual term, standing for divine happiness, highest joy, or ecstasy, of which the source is the Lord Himself; it represents beauty and youth; it is a synonym of moon, and sometimes of the sun also. It is the final blessing for which the lower-self, the soul longs for, and the Supreme Self alone has the privilege of possessing it in infinite measures. Soma also stands for emotional worship and loving dedication of the highest order. In ritualistic offering, the term stands for a conceptual creeper noted for its exhilarating extracts, which are obtained by crushing the creeper, its pressing with the help of two stones, or even with pestle and mortar, and then final filtration and storing in cans. The ritualistic ceremony of loading the Soma plant in carts, bringing to the ceremonial place, crushing, pressing, extracting and filtering is merely a metaphor for the careful practices to be performed by subduing the vices of senses, refinement of thoughts, offering devotional prayers, and finally, enjoying the exhilarations derived out of the direct contact with the Supreme Self. It is thus, finally, the Soma of the Innermost Realm that is to be sought for.

The word Soma in the Vedas and the Brahmanas also represents a fresh graduate (snataka) of an educational academy, and the Soma-yaga is a ceremony connected with his reception.

Agnisoma (अग्नीषोम)—Agni+Soma; according to the Satapatha Brahmana, whatever is suska or dry (purely academic and intellectual) is agneya, or pertaining to Agni, and whatever is ardra or wet (or emotional or aesthetic), is saumya, or pertaining to Soma; agnisoma represents purodasa (पुरोडाश), (ground cereal made pasty with water), since it is dry and wet both (SBr. I. 6.2.23).

The terms suta-somah (the poured out or extracted Soma juice) (1.2.2), soma-pitaye (for drinking the Soma-juices) (1.2.3.), indavah

(the drops of Soma juice) (1.2.4.) (जलानि क्रियामयाः यज्ञाः, प्राप्तव्या भोगाश्च—Daya., meaning the fruitful enjoyments, derived from the noble actions), (I. 2.4.), and similar other combinations with Soma have to be understood.

4-6. Indra-Vayu, (इन्द्र-वायू), Lord-resplendent and the source of cosmic vitality.—The term indra stands for the Highest Resplendent Self, for the lower self, for various celestial luminosities, as sun, thunder or lightning, and other effulgences. When the term indra comes along with another term vayu in dual number, it means God, having resplendent and all-pervading attributes both. On the material plane, the combination stands for the sun and wind (Daya). Dayananda also takes vayu as the omnipresent and inner-penetrating God (अनन्त बलसर्वप्राणाऽन्तर्यामिन्नीश्वरः), whilst, the term indrah stands for the sunlight or wind of the middle region. (I.2.6). In our human body, indra is the lower self and vayu is the vital or breathing system (prana). According to Dayananda, the pair indra+vayu means the pairs; vidyut+prana, prana+surya, sun+air, vidyut+pavana, king+people, teacher+preacher, fire+air, and similar other pairs.

7. Mitra, the source of light.—The word is derived from various roots (i) Mitra is so called, because He preserves from destruction (मित्रः प्रमीतेस्त्रायते), or because He runs (द्रवति), measuring things together from √mi (मी), or the word is derived from the causal of the verb √mid (मिद्), to be fat, (सम्मिन्वानो द्रवतीति वा मेदयतेर्वा). In Ṛv. III. 59.1, mitra leads men forth, supports earth and heaven, ever-watchful. He beholds the tribes. (Nir. X. 22-23). Mitra is one of the names of the sun, or it is one of the many suns; it is one of the sons of the mother infinity, Aditi (I. 164.46); In Ṛv. III. 59.1 (मित्रो जनान्यातयति ब्रुवाणो मित्रो दाधार पृथिवीमुत द्याम्) the word mitrah stands for the sun (Daya.); according to Dayananda, mitra is the sun of the universe as well as of the inner realm of human complex (ब्रह्माण्डस्थ and शरीरस्थ).

The Adityas are: Mitra, Aryaman, Bhaga, Varuna, Daksa, Amsa (Ṛv. II. 27.1), Aditya (Surya), Martanda (Ṛv. X. 72.8). In a list, given in the Taittiriya Brahmana, the eight Adityas enumerated are Mitra, Varuna, Aryaman, Amsa, Bhaga, Dhatṛ, Indra and Vivasvat (IBr, I. 1.9.1). The number of Adityas swelled from eight to twelve during the time of the Satapatha Brahmana, where they have been identified with twelve months of a year; the Brahmana, however, does not give the list of twelve names. The Visnu Purana, however, gives a list as follows :—

Dhatṛ (धातृ)	Caitra (चैत्र)	Pusan (पूषन्)	Asvina (आश्विन)

Aryaman (अर्यमन्)	Vaisakha (वैशाख)	Parjanya (पर्जन्य)	Karttika (कार्त्तिक)
Mitra (मित्र)	Jyestha (ज्येष्ठ)	Amsa (अंश)	Margasirsa (मार्गशीर्ष)
Varuna (वरुण)	Asadh (आषाढ)	Bhaga (भग)	Pausa (पौष)
Indra (इन्द्र)	Sravana (श्रावण)	Tvastr̥ (त्वष्टृ)	Magha (माघ)
Vivasvan (विवस्वान्)	Bhadra (भाद्र)	Visnu (विष्णु)	Phalguna (फाल्गुन)

In the later Puranas, the twelve Adityas mentioned are Aditya, Savitr̥, Surya, Mihira, Arka, Prabhakara, Martanda, Bhaskara, Bhanu, Citrabhanu (R̥v. 1.3.4), Divakara and Ravi, where mihira is a non-Vedic name, dervied from Mitra (though the Amarakosa distinguished between the two).

Dayananda, in the Unadi Kosa derives the word mitram (मित्रं) from मिनोति मान्यं करोति (the one who respects or shows affection) and in that sense, it is a synonym of suhr̥d or a friend, and is invariably used in neuter gender, but the word 'mitrah' (मित्र) is also used, in masculine gender as in "sannomitrah" (R̥v. I. 90.9), where it means God or the Sun (Unadi, IV. 165).

Varuna, the source of bliss.—The word varuna is derived in the Unadi Kosa as 'वृणोति व्रीयते वाऽसौ वरुणः'; Varuna is the most venerable, the chosen one (श्रेष्ठतमः—Daya.). Varuna is described as the benevolent God into whose palate flew the seven rivers as into a hollow channel (R̥v. VIII. 69.12; Av. XX. 22.9; Nir. V. 27). It is one of the six names of Agni, the Sun or God (R̥v. I. 164.46) : Indra, Mitra, Varuna, Garutman, Yama and Matarisvan. Varuna is God, and is also wind (जगदीश्वरः वायुर्वा—Daya.).

The gods with whom Agni is jointly praised are Indra, Soma, Varuna, Parjanya, and the R̥tavas (the seasons) (Nir. VII. 8). The gods with whom Indra is jointly praised are Agni, Soma, Varuna, Pusan, Br̥haspati, Brahmanaspati, Parvata, Kutsa, Visnu and Vayu (Nir. VII. 10); Mitra is jointly praised with Varuna; Soma with Pusan, and Rudra; Pusan with Vayu and Parjanya with Vata (Nir. VII. 10).

Varuna is so called, because it covers (from √वृ), (Nir. X. 3). Varuna sends forth the cloud, opening downwards, and creates heaven, earth and the intermediate space With it the king of the entire universe moistens the earth, as rain the barley. (R̥v. V. 85.3).

Mitra-Varuna, (मित्रावरुण), the source of light and the Lord of bliss, the Lord of day and night.—The terms mitra and varuna may often come together and form a dyad: according to Sayana, mitra is the sun of the day, whilst varuna presides over night (and thereon some scholars suggest Varuna to be nocturnal sun of the polar regions).

The Satapatha Brahmana, on one occasion suggests mitra to be the prana, and varuna as apana, the two vital breaths, assimilating, (प्राण), and eliminating, (अपान). Mitra and varuna also represent the physico-mental and supra-mental realms of our human complex. (Mitra—the physico-mental of the annamaya, pranamaya and manomaya kosas, and varuna, the supra-mental of the vijnanamaya and anandamaya kosas).

2. Uktha—Holy praises, stotras, hymns of praise, lauds recited or spoken in opposition to the verses chanted or sung.

Aharvidah—The receiving enlightenment; knowing the season or the days (for rituals).

3. Dhena, the inspiring voice; approaching speech; penetrating stream, divine speech of the four Vedas (Daya.).

Dhiyam ghṛtacim sadhanta, the joint accomplisher of the act of bestowing happiness and wisdom; dhi, an act; ghṛtacim, water-shedding. As identified with the sun or Adityas, Mitra and Varuna are said to cause rain indirectly by producing evaporation; the vapours thus raised becoming condensed in the atmosphere descend again in showers.

8. Kavi, sages with penetrating vision; it is an epithet of the Mitra-Varuna dyad.

Apasam—Actions, noble or otherwise (Nigh. II. 1)

Ghṛtacim—Act (or efforts) to bestow water on the earth (ghṛta—water; and also clarified butter, Unadi III. 89; Nigh. I. 12).

Hymn-3

For verses 7, 8, 10 and 12, see Nir. XII. 40; V. 4; XI. 26; and XI, 27 respectively.

1. Asvinau, twin faculties, mental and vital.—Amongst the celestial deities, Asvins (in dual number) come first. They are so named because they two pervade (√as, अश्) everything, one with moisture and the other with light (Nir. VII. 1) According to Aurnavabha, Asvins are so called on account of their having horses (asva= horse). Which two are the celestial horse-riders or asvins ? According to some, they are heaven and earth; and according to others, they are day and night; on certain occasions, the same term is used for the pair of the sun and moon; whilst they may represent two virtuous kings. They appear in the sky after midnight, and as such, their appearance is an impediment to the appearance of light. The part in the dark is the atmosphere, and the part in the light is the sun. In this connection, the Nirukta quotes a Vedic verse which is now untraceable, and once, might have constituted a part of the Samhita.

The individuals of the pairs are mostly praised conjointly, and whose terms and functions are identical. One is called the son of night, and the other son of dawn. In Ṛv. I. 181.4, one is regarded as the victor and promoter of noble sacrifice, and the other, as the blessed son of heaven. The Asvins may be thus identified as the twilight; and in this sense they represent the pair of Indra and the sun (the lower self and the Supreme Self existing in hearts' cavity; Katha : ऋत पिबन्तौ सुकृतस्य लोके, गुहां प्रविष्टौ परमे परार्द्धे; The Asvins also represent the transition from darkness (ignorance) to light (divine enlightenment); the inseparable twilights before the dawn, half dark and half bright. Oldenberg believes that natural basis of the Asvins must be the morning star, that being the only morning light besides the fire, the dawn and the sun. Max-Muller regards Asvins as the morning and the evening; Bergaigne considers them as the fire of the heaven and that of the altar. The other probable pairs proposed are (i) morning and evening winds, (ii) rain-giving and dew-giving Nature's bounties, (iii) the sun and the moon, (iv) Alpha and Beta Arietes of the constellation of Asvini-Weber, which supports the three sides of the Chariot of Asvins, by joining the two points of the twin asvinau with one of the constellation of Bharani, (v) they are a pair of surgeons and physicians.

The asvins represent not only the cosmic celestial realm, they equally represent the mental and supramental realms too. They represent a pair of vital and mental faculties (vital forces or prana system represents the dark phase and the mental forces the bright phase).

Dayananda has suggested a number of pairs, representing the social plane too, besides the physical : (i) water and fire pair (Ṛv. I. 3.1), (ii) heaven and earth, dyava-pṛthivi (Ṛv. I. 22. 1; I. 34.5), (iii) teacher and taught, or preacher and the audience, (I 22.3), (iv) provided with two horses in reference to a carriage or two motors of an aeroplane, (I. 22.4), (v) pair of people some versed in pure and others in applied sciences; vidya-kriya-kusalau विद्याक्रियाकुशलौ (I. 30.17), शिल्पविद्याविदाध्यापकोपदेशकौ (III. 58.5), (vi) the two adhvaryus, the technicians or the accomplishers in technology, mobilizing fuel and water resources, (I. 34.3; also SBr. I. 1.2.17, for two adhvaryus).

There are certain features of the Asvins which should be taken note of. They are twins, mostly inseparable (in a few hymns they are described originally as separate also, V. 73.4 and I. 181.4). Their theophanic moment is morning, though they are invoked to come at the noon and the sunset also (V. 76.3; VIII, 22.14). Their relationship with sweetness or honey is often described (IV. 65.3-4; I. 117.6; I. 122.3; X. 106.10); they are described as drinking Soma too (VIII. 35.1-10; III. 58.6; 9); their association with horses is evident from their name even (V. 76.3; VIII. 22.14; I. 117.2; 4; I. 181.2). They come in a car which is sun-like (VIII. 8.2), golden (IV. 44.4; 5; I. 180. 1; I. 119.1; VIII. 8.11-14), having three wheels (I. 118.1, 2), three fellies and some other parts in triples. Their abode is in heavens and they are included in the list of celestial gods,—they are children of heaven (I. 182.1; 184.1; X. 161.4), the twin sons of Vivasvat and Saranyu—Tvastṛ's daughter (X. 17.2). They are connected with Surya who accompanies them on their car (IV. 43.6; I. 119.5; V. 73.5; VII. 69.4; VIII. 8.10; VIII. 22.5). During marriage ceremonies they are invoked to convey the bride home (X. 85.26); and are also connected with fertility (X. 184.2; I.112.3).

4. Indra, the self; here the lower self or the soul. It is one of the 32 pada-names in the Nighantu (V.4). The word stands for the resplendent Lord, the Supreme Self, and so often for the lower self also (the soul); it stands for the sun also, and for the head of a state or an organisation. Indra in the Nirukta (X. 8) is so called because he divides food (इरा+दृ) or he gives food (इरा+दा), or he bestows food (इरा+धा), or he sends food (इरा+दारय) or he holds food (इरा+धारय) or he runs for the sake of Soma (इन्दु+द्रु), or he takes delight in Soma (इन्दु+रम्), or he sets beings on fire (√इन्ध्). "It is known: that because they animated him with vital breaths, that is the characteristics of Indra" (an untraced quotation in the Nirukta). "He is so called from seeing everything (इदं+दृश्)", says Aupamanyava. Or the word is derived from the √ind, (इन्द्), meaning to be powerful, i.e. being powerful, he tears the enemies asunder, or puts them to flight. Or he honours the sacrificers. Indra uncovers the great clouds, emits the streams and smites down the giver of water (V. 82.1). He pierces the spring, creates channels, and rich in water sends them forth knocking against each other. Indra is associated with a thunderbolt, which he uses against adversaries, and with which smites down the demon vṛtra (the cloud of ignorance). Indra is fond of Soma, the devotional conceptual elixir, and this he enjoys either alone or sharing with others. Indra rules over the heaven, Indra over the earth (X. 89.10); the chanters praise very much Indra alone (I. 7.1); these Tṛtsus being active with Indra (VII. 13.15), chant the Sama-stanzas for the sake of Indra (VIII. 98.1); without Indra, no place whatsoever is pure (X. 69.6); every one proclaims the heroic exploits of Indra (I. 32.1); and our desires rest on Indra (This quotation is untraced) (Nir. VII. 2).

Citrabhanoh, full of wondrous effulgence or splendour.

Visve devasah, Nature's numerous bounties; literally all-gods; universal gods. Men of learning (Daya.).

Omasah—Protectors of the world by their knowledge and benign attribute.

10. Sarasvati, divine speech :—A synonym for vak or speech (Nigh. I. 11) along with Ila or Ida and Bharati. The word is derived from the word Sarah, root √sṛ, सृ, which means knowledge as well as water and hence it means Speech or Divine Knowledge and also a river (Unadi IV. 190); सरन्ति प्राप्नुवन्ति सर्वा विद्या येन तत् सरः। सरस प्रशंसिता ज्ञानादयो गुणा विद्यन्ते यस्यां सा सर्व विद्याप्रापिका वाक् (Sarasvati),—(Daya.), the one possessing knowledge and allied attributes is speech or Sarasvati. Ila, (इला), divine wisdom; Sarasvati (सरस्वती), divine speech; Bharati (भारती), divine culture.

Vaja, knowledge, sustenance, food, nourishment; all that is necessary for acquiring knowledge (Daya.).

Yajnam, organized benevolent or sacred acts.—The term stands for the noblest acts performed without attachment and expectation of rewards; any selfless act of public service; a fire-ritual as aṇ emblem of noble acts; public service by harnessing science and technology for the benefit of mankind (यज्ञो वै कर्म्म, SBr. I. 1.2.1; शिल्पविद्यामहिमान कर्म्म च ; Yajno vai mahima, यज्ञो वै महिमा—SBr. VI.2.3.18).

12. The Mantra has been discussed by the Nirukta also (XI. 27).

Ketuna, with her banner, i.e. with her activity. Sarasvati makes the great ocean manifest. i.e. causes it to be known, she presides over all these sacrifices. This is applied to the objects of speech; speech is, therefore, regarded as belonging to the sphere of the atmosphere.

Hymn-4

2. Somapah, the inherent source of bliss, drinker of the Soma juice; acceptor of devotional invocations; protector of pleasing and beneficial products (Daya.).

Savana, daily duties; also ceremonial rites of a day (morning, midday and evening); manifestation of grandeur (Daya.).

Somasya, of the devotional prayers; of the produced ones, the created ones, of the created world.

Godah—One who enables the sense organs to function (the giver of perceptions); also the gift of cattle.

8. Satakratu, an embodiment of total (cent per cent) selfless action; an epithet of Indra, the resplendent Lord, the one connected with hundred acts; it really means the one whose cent per cent acts are selfless; Lord alone is such who has no desire of His own to fulfil, and whose all acts are cent per cent selfless. Lit. performer of one hundred yajnas.

Vṛtranam, of evil forces; of the enemies: Vṛtra is one who covers light with darkness or evils, with clouds and with ignorance. Of the enemies of whom the demon Vṛtra, was the head.

Hymn-5

8. Stomah, hymns—The hymns or groups of verses taken from all the Vedas, the Ṛk, the Yajuh and the Saman including the Atharva, वेदस्तुतिसमूहः (Daya.). According to some, verses from the Saman only.

Uktha, chant of sacred hymns, spoken with preciseness; the Samaveda chants (Unadi II.7). The Vedic verses of praises.

Hymn-6

For verse 7, See Nir. IV. 12.

2. Hari, mental and vital faculties harnessed together —The horses of Indra are known by this name. Asya hari, means the sun's pair of horses which also represent the gravitational and electrical forces, also the centrifugal and centripetal forces, which balance the movement of the planets in the solar system.

Ratha, car of human body, a chariot; the word is derived from the root √ramh, √रंह् meaning to speed, or from sthira, by metathesis (viparita or आद्यन्त विपर्यय) : one sits in a chariot with joy, or from √रप् to chatter, (or from √रस् to make a sound). (Nir. IX. 11) (Sthira—thara—ratha).

5. Guha, places difficult of access—a secret place; the heart's cavity in which the lower self and the Supreme Self both reside. The inter-space, antariksa (Daya.).

Usriyah—Rays; solar rays; the rays of divine enlightenment.

Some of the scholars think that the verse refers to Indra's discovering the cows hidden in the cave with the help of Maruts (a legend connected with the demonic group of panis, (पणि), who had stolen away the cows of the gods or of the Angirasas, and hidden them in the cave where they were discovered by Indra with the help of the bitch Sarama; cf. the dialogue between Panis and Sarama, X. 108). In some passages, the cows are represented as having been forcibly recovered by Indra with the help of Maruts. We have discussed the subject in our introductory chapters.

Hymn-7

For verses 1, 6 and 7, see Nir. VII. 2; VI. 16, and VI. 18 respectively.

1. Arkebhih—With ṛks, with noble thoughts, with verses, with noble actions of public good (pertaining to technology etc.—Daya.). Arkah means God, so called because they worship Him. Arkah means a stanza, because it is by means of a stanza that they worship gods. Arkah also means food; a tree (Catotropis gigantes) (Nir. V.4).

Cathinah—Singers (may be of Samans or any other verses).

Arkinah—The reciters of the Ṛk; learned people in general (Daya.).

Vanih—The four Vedas taken up together; the divine revelation (Daya.). Sayana refers it to the Yajuh.

2. Vajri—Wielder of adamantine or punitive justice or of thunderbolt. One engaged in an adamantine action with firmness; according to the Satapatha, vajra is samvatsarah (III. 3.5.15).

9. Panca Ksitinam, of the five cognizant senses, also five classes of dwellers on the earth, the four governed by the law of varnas (the social classification) and the fifth, not covered by the regulation of varna: minor children, sannyasins, and foreigners. According to Dayananda, the five classes are the lowest, the middle ones, noble, nobler and the noblest.

Hymn-8

7. Kuksih, one with the capacity to draw; the belly of Indra; the extractor of the juices of all objects (Daya.); it refers to the sun.

Somapatamah—Protector and sustainer of all objects in the creation (by His radiance); also the one which quaffs Soma abundantly. The verse refers to the sun.

10. Soma-pitaye, for ecstatic devotion—for the one who is all-pervading by His omnipresence, or for the one who is enjoying all the objects in the creation. (सोमानाम्=सर्वेषां पदार्थानाम्, of all the objects,—Daya.).

Hymn-9

For verse 2, see Nir. I. 10.

Emenam srjata sute, (एमेनं सृजता सुते), devotional songs so composed; emitted it for pressing, i.e. he created it for pressing (the Soma juices)—the Nir. (I. 10).

Emenam=a+im+enam—Im is water or fire (Daya.). sute—In this created world (Daya.).

3. Susipra, the all-knowing; also with handsome chin (Wilson); fair of cheek (Griffith); with a good helmet; venerable Lord, full of enlightenment (Daya); sipra, two jaws or two nostrils (शिप्रे हनू नासिके वा । हनुर्हन्ते । नासिका नसते: ।) : (Nir. VI. 17); susipram, having beautiful lips (Grassmann).

4. Girah, divine hymns, The divine speech; word of the Veda.

Vṛsabham—The showerer of blessings (सर्वाभीष्टवर्षकम्—Daya.); the showerer of benefits.

10. Nyokase, a dweller beyond time and space; fixed or definite dwelling; oka is a dwelling.

Hymn-10

For verse 9, see Nir. VII. 6.

1. Brahmanah, learned persons, well-versed in the Vedic lore; priests of Yajuh prose.

Vamsamiva, of the family (elevation of the honour of; like a bamboo pole (Wilson); like family (Daya.).

2. Sanoh Sanum, rung by rung. From the tops or ridges of the mountain (Wilson); सानो: पर्वतस्य शिखरात्, संविभागात् कर्मण:, सिद्धेर्वा (of the mountain tops, of the divisions and of the accomplishments of actions; three interpretations).

4. Vasu, wealth,—Also the one in whom all living beings reside, the abodes, or the one who resides in all the beings (सर्वाणि भूतानि यस्मिन् वा वसति सर्वेषु भूतेषु यः—Daya.); it is also a synonym of Indra, and is the original donor or cause of habitations; from √vas, √वस् to dwell, निवास-कारणभूत. Vasu is one by which pains are relieved or covered (from √vas, (वस्), to cover; in this sense, wealth of physical, mental and supramental realms). The vasus, as deities, are eight in number, the five elementals, earth, fire, air, water and ether, and three, the sun, the moon and the stars. Ṛv. I. 45.2 refers to 33 deities, which have been described in the Satapatha Brahmana as 8 Vasus, 12 Adityas (the twelve months of the years), 11 Rudras (the eleven vital breaths, prana, apana, vyana, samana, udana, naga, kurma, kṛkala, devadatta, and dhananjaya and the lower self i.e. (the soul), Indra (lightning) and Prajapâti (or yajna).

5. Sakra, powerful God—From √शक् to be able; one with potency and capability, शक्नोति सर्वं व्यवहारं कर्तुं (powerful and hence God or the head of a state); also a synonymn of Indra.

Indrava—For the lower self (Daya.).

9. Asrut karna srudhi havam—Hear our call, O God that has listening ears (Nir. VII. 6).

11. Kausika, the preceptor, the son or a relation of Kusika; the word is derived from the root √Krus, (क्रुश्) meaning to cry, or from √krams, (क्रंश्) meaning to cause to shine; or he is a good expounder of meaning. (Nir. II. 25; Ṛv. III. 33.5; 6); in later mythology, Kusika is the name of a King, whose son Visvamitra was known as Kausika. Here in this verse, Kausika is an epithet of Indra. The Anukramanika in this context quotes a legend, which states that Kusika, the son of Isirathi, being desirous of a son equal to Indra, adopted a life of continence, in requital of which, Indra was born as the son of Gathi. This legend has nothing to do here; Kausika is qualifying Indra, and it means the one who imparts knowledge and enlightenment (Daya.); from √ Krams, (क्रंश्) to shine.

Hymn-11

5. Vala.—It is one of the synonyms of cloud (Nigh. I. 10).

Valasya bilam, bulk of water in a cloud. According to a legend, Vala was an asura, who stole the cows of the gods and hid them in a cave (bilam); Indra surrounded the cave with his army, and recovered the cattle. The legend is also cited in the Anukramanika, where we have a reference of Panis also as the cow-stealers; they are said to be the soldiers of Vala, and the actual thieves and concealers of the stolen cows in the cave. Vala (Ṛv. III. 30.10) is derived from √vṛ. (√वृ), to cover and hence it means cloud (Nir. VI. 2).

7. Susnam, tyrannous, the wicked creatures, who exploit the virtuous ones (Daya.), from √Sus, to exploit, to deprive (Unadi III. 12); one who dries up the sap like fire or the sun. In legendry, susna is described as an asura slain by Indra, but as Wilson says, this is evidently a metaphorical murder; the word means dryer up, exsiccator.

Mayinam, deceitful, one possessing crooked wisdom (Daya.); mayabhih, by clever strategy.

Hymn-12

For verse, 9, see Nir. XI. 23.

1. Dutam, messenger; one who carries things from one place to another; one who carries the royal errands (दवति गच्छति दुनोति उपतपति वा स इुत:, Unadi III. 90). In the legend, Usanas, the son of Kavi is regarded as the messenger of asuras.

2. Vispati, the lord of men; vis is people praja, or progeny, men in general.

Purupriaym, beloved of many; the source of innumerable delights. (Daya.).

6. Kavih, all-wise. the seer, one with penetrating insight, krantadarsanah क्रान्तदर्शन:; he is so called because his presence is desired (√ kam, कम्) or the word is derived from √ kav, कव् to praise (Nir. XIII. 13).

Gṛhapati, guardian, The head of a family (lit. guardian of the house); the yajamana or the main person in the yajna, or a sacred ritual.

9. Pavaka, one who purifies, God and fire too. (Nir. XII. 22-25); Also Ṛv. I. 50.6. where the word means pure, or the purifier.

Havisman avivasati, हविष्मां आविवासति, approaches with devotion; see Nir. XI. 23; the word vivasati is used in the sense of attending (paricarya, परिचर्या); rich in obligations (oblations), he attends upon (gods). Also Yv. VI. 23.

Hymn-13

This hymn has a variety of devatas (divinities or the titles of themes) to which the general name apri is applied, constituting 12: (i) idhma or samiddhognih, tanunapat, narasamsa, ida, barhi, devirdvara, usasanakta, daivya-hota-pracetas, three goddesses, ila, sarasvati and bharati, tvastṛ, vanaspati, and lastly svaha (Apri is derived from √ap, (आप), to obtain, or from √pri, (प्री), to please. Nir. VIII. 3).

1. Susamiddha, thoroughly enlightened, the well-lighted, well or completely kindled (su—well, sam—completely, iddha—kindled); 'idhma is sacrifice', says Katthakya; 'it is Agni', says Sakapuni (Nir. VIII. 5).

2. Tanunapat, the devourer of clarified butter (tanunapat); the protector of every part of body; preserver of medicinal principles. The Nirukta describes it as 'one's own son'; Katthakya regards it as clarified butter. The word napat is a synonym of offspring which does not immediately succeed a person (i.e. a grandson, cf. Bṛh. Dev. II. 27); it is very much propagated downwards. The cow is also called tanu, because delicious things are prepared (tatah) from her milk. Milk is produced from the cow, and the clarified butter from this milk. "It is Agni", says Sakapuni. Waters are also called tanu because they are spread in the atmosphere. Herbs and trees are produced from water and this fire is produced from herbs and trees (cf. Ṛv. X. 110.2). And thus fire is the grandson of water. See the Nirukta (VIII. 5).

3. Narasamsa, the one praised by all people, is sacrifice, so says Katthakya: "seated men (narah)praise (√sams, शंस्) gods in sacrifice" (Bṛh. Dev. II. 28; III. 2-3); "it is Agni", says Sakapuni; he is to be praised by men. (Nir. VIII. 6).

Madhujihvam, sweet-tongued, the one whose tongue or flame is sweet. Tongue is so called (jihva), because it calls out again and again (johuva). (Nir. V. 26). The seven flames of fire have been described as Kali (black), Karali (terrible), Manojava (thought-swift), Sulohita (blood-red), Sudhumravarna (smoke-hued), Sphulingini (scattering sparks), Visvarupi (all-beautiful), (Mundaka I. 2.4).

4. Ilitah, Iditah,—Ilah is derived from √id (ईड्) to praise, or to adore, or from √indh, (इन्ध्), to kindle (Ṛv. X. 110.8; Nir. VIII. 7).

5. Barhis, grassy seats, sacred grass; interspace (Daya.); grass is so called from growing rapidly. (Nir. VIII. 8); cf. Ṛv. X. 110.4).

6. Devir-dvara, divine doors, doors of divine knowledge; the word dvara is derived from √ju, (जु), to press forward, or from √dru, (द्रु), to move, or from the causal of √vṛ (वृ), to exclude (cf. X. 110.5; Nir. VIII. 9). It is the door of the house (Katthakya); it is Agni (Sakapuni) (Nir. VIII. 10).

7. Naktam Usas, night and dawn. (cf. X. 110.6); night and day (Daya.); usa is so called, because it shines (√vas, वस्); it is the time subsequent to night (Nir. II. 18). The word nakta is synonymous of night; it anoints beings with dew; or else it is called night because its colour is indistinct. (Nir. VIII. 10).

8. Hotara-daivya, divine poets, celestial or divine sacrificers (two); which means terrestrial fire and atmospheric fire (Nir. VIII. 11); the manifested and unmanifested fires (Daya.).

9. Tisrah devih, Ila (Ida), Sarasvati and Mahi, the three goddesses. Ila is synonymous with speech, and so are Mahi, Sarasvati and Bharati (Nigh. I. 11). Ila means praiseworthy, sarasvati is the source of various disciplines of knowledge, and mahi means great, highly venerable, polity or even pṛthivi or earth (Daya.). Mahi and Bharati are the same. The Nirukta (VII. 13) explains the three in the context of Ṛv. X. 110.8. The sun is called Bharata; its light, therefore, called Bharati; Ila is speech; may Sarasvati and three goddesses of noble deeds sit on this comfortable seat of grass. When used in combination, these three goddesses may be described as representing ile (wisdom), mahi (prosperity), or bharati (culture), and sarasvati (speech, learning or knowledge). They are also regarded as earth, speech, and eloquence.

10. Tvastṛ, supreme architect. Dayananda describes the term as the healer or destroyer of pain, and the cutter of numerous objects, and in this sense an artificer, or fabricator; he is the one who fabricates as if the vase or ladle for sacrifice, and other implements. He is one of the twelve Adityas; there is an old quotation which attributes to him the formation of the forms of animals in pairs; त्वष्टा वै पशूनां मिथुनानां रूपकृदिति श्रुतेः (Tai. Br. III. 8.11.2). Agni or fire is also known as tvastṛ. He is the distributor of wealth (Ṛv. VIII. 34.22) and releases water for our prosperity (Ṛv. I. 142.10).

Tvastṛ is so called because it pervades quickly, or it may be derived from √tvis, (त्विष्), to shine, or from √tvaks, (त्वक्ष्), to do. Tvastṛ made the two progenitors, heaven and earth, and all created beings beautiful (X. 110.9). According to some authorities, Tvastṛ is an atmospheric deity because he is enlisted among the atmospheric gods (Bṛh. Dev. III. 25), but he is Agni according to Sakapuni (Nir. VIII. 14).

11. Vanaspatih, herbs and plants, lord of herbs, or lord of woods or vegetation; he is also agni or fire, as if the fuel and the burning of it were identified. But who is the lord of herb ? "It is the sacrificial post", says Katthakya, but "it is Agni", says Sakapuni. (Nir. VIII. 17).

12. Svaha—Consecrations by saying SVAHA or "HAIL"; they are so called because the SVAHA is uttered in them; or speech herself said "Well, ho !"; or one addresses himself, or one offers oblation consecrated with SVAHA (Ṛv. X. 110.11; Nir. VIII. 20). Dayananda interprets SVAHA as a collection of noble actions; or sat-kriya (Ṛv. II. 36.1.).

The word Svaha is derived in a number of ways in the Nirukta (VIII. 20); स्वाहाकृतयः; स्वाहा इति एतत् सु+आहा इति वा; स्वा वाग् आहा इति वा; स्वं प्राह इति वा; सु+आहुतं हविर्जुहोति इति वा; i.e. they are so called because the word Svaha (hail) is uttered in them; or speech herself said, "Well ho !", or one addresses himself; or one offers oblation consecrated with Svaha (hail).

Similar to Svaha (स्वाहा), there is another exclamation Vasat (वषट्), as we have in the Niruka (VIII. 22). A person about to utter the sound vasat, should meditate on the particular deity to whom the oblation is offered. Also see Ṛv. II. 36.1, for svaha and vasat. Vasat is also an exclamation uttered by the Hotṛ priest at the end of the sacrificial verse (on hearing which the Adhvaryu priest casts the oblation offered to the deity into the fire; it is joined with a dative, e.g., Pusne vasat with √kṛ, (कृ), to utter the exclamation vasat, (वषट्).

Hymn-14

2. Kanva, the intellectuals—Men of wisdom (मेधाविनः) or officiating priests (ऋत्विक्).

3. Indra, Mitra, Pusan, and Bhaga are four of the twelve Adityas (see I. 2.7). Bṛhaspati is not an Aditya. For Agni, see I. 1. 1; for Vayu, see I. 2.2; for Indra, see I. 2.4; for Mitra I. 2.7. Indra (resplendent), Vayu (source of vitality), Bṛhaspati (supreme Lord), Mitra (surveyor), Agni (adorable), Pusan (nourisher), Bhaga (gracious), Adityas (light complex), Marutas (vital complex).

Pusan—One of the twelve names of the sun; it also stands for moon (Daya.), as the sustainer and strengthener of a group of herbs. It is goat-teamed; goats are his coursers (VI.55.6; Nir. IV. 25). He is a protector, and is invoked at the time of marriage (X. 85.26); is also invoked along with Vayu (VII.39.2). His coursers, ajasah, lit. goats also, have been interpreted as sun-beams, when Pusan is identified as the sun (Daya. VI. 55.6). Pusan has solely a solar character with its two epithets, aghṛni (glowing on all sides, —Daya. VI. 48.16) and agohya (not to be concealed). Pusan is also regarded as the sun with his golden vessels moving in the ocean of firmament (VI. 58.3); he is the bringer of six seasons successively (I. 25.15); he draws the golden chariot of the sun (VI. 56.3), as if he is the driving spirit behind the sun; his golden ships move in the aerial ocean (VI. 58.6); his abode is in heaven (II. 20.4); is surrounded by golden grass (I. 23.13). Figuratively, he possesses a beard (X. 26.7), and the braided hair (VI. 55.2). (Dayananda interprets here as a braided Brahmacarin). Pusan is also connected with Panis (VI. 53.3,5-7). Dayananda interprets Pusan here as a king who punishes the exploiters. Pusan's favourite food is karambha (VI. 58. 1; cf. III. 52.7), which may be parched barley meal and butter mixed up. (Dayananda regards karambha as a special cereal). Pusan is associated with a path or a road that leads a dead to the distant path of fathers; he is the custodian of a path. (VI. 53.1; I. 42.13; VI. 17.6; X. 17.6).

Bhaga—He is usually mentioned in association with Pusan; he is another aspect of Aditya in whom solar features have been associated; he is connected with Savitṛ; it is expressly said that Bhaga's eye is adorned with rays (I. 136.2), and hymns rise up to Visnu on Bhaga's path. According to Yaska, he presides over the forenoon (Nir. XII. 13). The Ṛgveda (X. 11.6) says : "as a consumer (jara) to his enjoyment (bhaga)"; according to the Nirukta, the sun (Aditya) is called the consumer; he is the consumer of night; he is the consumer of lights also, since the light of the moon and stars is eclipsed by that of the sun. In Ṛv. VII. 41.2, Bhaga, is called as "early-conquering" (प्रातर्जितं), and so his time is previous to the sunrise; he is the fierce son of Aditi (उग्रपुत्रं अदितेः). The word bhaga means dispenser or giver; according to some, it was in the post-Vedic period, that the bhaga became one of the Adityas; but Ṛv. VII. 41.2 contradicts it. Dayananda describes bhaga as the one who is awarder of happiness or prosperity (भजते सुखानि येन); in the Nighantu, it is one of wealth or treasure. The Nirukta derives it from √bhaj (भज्), to distribute and considers it as a synonym for good fortune too.

Brhaspati—Dayananda considers it to be the sun's light, since it sustains the vast extent, (बृहतां पालन हेतु सूर्यप्रकाशम्). It is recognized as one of the planets also.

The word bṛhat is a synonym of great (Nir. I. 7), the generous Bṛhaspati granted Devapi (domestic chaplain to Santanu) divine speech (X. 98.7; for the legend, see Nir. II. 12). Bṛhaspati destroys the derider, (I. 190.5; Nir. IV. 25). Bṛhaspati is one of the gods with whom Indra is jointly praised, the others being Agni, Soma, Varuna, Pusan, Brahmanaspati, Parvata, Kutsa, Visnu and Vayu (Nir. VII. 10). Bṛhaspati is the protector and supporter of the great (Nir. X. 11; see Ṛv. X. 68.8; "on all sides, he saw water bound up by all-pervading cloud, like fish living in shallow water. He took it up like a cup from the tree, Bṛhaspati having rent it with a dreadful roar."). Bṛhas or bṛhat means great vast, large, or divine; pati, master or protector.

Adityan—To the twelve months (Daya.). Madhu and Madhava of the Vasanta (spring); Sukra and Suci of the Grisma (summer); Nabha and Nabhasya of Varsa (rains); Saha and Sahasya of Hemanta (early winters); and Tapa and Tapasya of Sisira (latter winter) (मधु-माधव, शुक्र-शुचि, नभ नभस्य, सह्-सह्स्य, तप-तपस्य). Also derived from aditi, meaning indivisible, or infinity. He is also so called because he is indestructible (Daya.). We have a reference to seven Adityas also (IX. 114.3); Varuna, Mitra, Aryaman, Bhaga, Daksa, Amsa and Dhatar.

Marutam-ganam—A collection of winds or vital principles. Maruts (in plural) are addressed very often as personified winds and storms; and are taken as companions and friends of Indra. Sometimes they are regarded as sons of Rudra and Pṛsni (रुद्र-पृश्नि), the latter has been identified as multi-coloured earth, whilst Roth regards Pṛsni as personification of speckled clouds. (Ṛv. I. 6.4); also appears to refer to maruts, though not named in the text: the winds drive Indra, or the firmament, into an aggragation of clouds, in which the rain again collects, as in their womb.

We shall summarize here various connotations of these terms for future use according to the context, and in reference to the mode of multi-interpretations :

Mitra-Sun—corresponding to the month Jyestha (sukra); also means surveyor (one who measures); and well-wisher; friendly or loving Lord.

Varuna—sun, corresponding to the month Asadha (suci); as a king, the venerable ruler; venerable Lord; benevolence.

Indra—The resplendent sun, associated with the month Sravana (nabhah); the resplendent Lord, also means the lower self, and lightning or thunder; he is the adorable head of big territory or empire.

Pusan—Nourisher; he is the Lord of sustenance; the sun associated with the month Asvina (isa); also providers of food or farmers in a State organization.

Bhaga—Gracious; he is the sun of the month Pausa (sahasya); in a State organization, the bestower or creator of wealth. Lord of prosperity in case of God.

Visnu—He is omnipresent Supreme Lord; he is the sun associated with the month Phalguna (tapasya).

12. Arusi haritah, red rays—Red coloured flames of fire. Rohita—ascending and descending means of transport (Daya.); also red; one of the names of the horses of Agni (Nigh. I. 15.2); also haritah and rohitah both synonymns of river or water channels. (The word tabhih is feminine, and hence, some scholars translate the word as mares, instead of horses).

Hymn-15

For verses 1 and 7, see Nir. VI. 24, and VIII. 2 respectively.

1. Ṛtu, appropriate to or according to seasons—It means (Daya.); ṛtuna somam—the seasonal medicinal extracts; the season personified as divinity (Wilson).

3. Nestṛ—another name of Tvastṛ; electricity, the purifier and sustainer of numerous substances (Daya.); one who carries product, (नेनेक्ति मर्वान् पदार्थान् or नमतीति नेष्टा, Unadi II.97); nestṛ is a leading priest. (Hotṛ is invoking priest, potṛ is a presiding priest; see II. 37.4).

Mitra-Varuna, source of enlightenment and vigour (mitra) and enforcer of universal laws (varuna)—Prana and Udana (Daya.); sometimes in-breath and out-breath.

7. Dravinodas, bestower of prosperity—The Lord who gives wealth, knowledge, strength etc. (Daya.). Dravinam means wealths so called because people run (√dru, द्रु), towards it, or strength, so called because people run by means of it; dravinodah, therefore, means the giver of wealth or strength (I. 15.3). Roth construes dravinodah with priests, taking it as nominative plural. Yaska however, explains it as nominative singular.

Dravinasah, द्रविणसः, means people who sit down to distribute wealth or who prepare offerings of wealth (द्रविणसम्पादकाः). Or else it means a cup of Soma; "let him drink from this."

Kraustuki thinks that Indra is the liberal giver of wealth and strength (Bṛh. D. III. 61). Indra is born of energetic strength (X. 73.10); Agni is also a descendent of Dravinodas. Sakapuni also says that the terrestrial Agni is the giver of wealth (Bṛh. D. III. 63-65; also Ṛv. I. 96. 1; X. 78.10).

Gravahastasah, having stones in their hands; pestles, mortars, grinding stones of technology (Daya.); and also one versed in worships and prayers.

Adhvara, a public act of sacrifice, without violence.

9. Nestrat, from knowledge (विज्ञान हेतोः,—Daya.)

12. Garhapatya, the household fire; anything pertaining to the head of the family.

Santva, giver of reward; agni or fire, used for public utility.

Hymn-16

3. Indram, agni or fire as the accomplisher of venerable actions; second indram, in-breath and out-breath; soma, the extract or essence of things, herbs etc. (Daya.).

4. Haribhih by rays; Indra, air or wind; Kesa, fire, lightning or the sun, possessing rays.

6. Somasah indavah—dripping juices of nectar or bliss.

8. Vṛtraha, the destroyer of clouds or the devil of ignorance.

9. Go, earth, sense organs, enlightenment, or the cow (Daya.); spiritual wealth.

Asva, the fast moving mechanisms, horse, elephant etc. (Daya.); motive force.

Satakratu, Lord of hundreds of actions and accomplishments; the one whose actions are cent per cent selfless.

Hymn-17

1. Samrajoh—of the two brights.

2. Indra-varunayoh—Sun and moon (Daya.).

4. Yuvaku—a mixture of curds and ghee (butter) or mixture in general.

Sacinam, of speech or noble actions. Thence a mixture or co-ordination of speech and noble actions is yuvaku sacinam (युवाकु शचीनाम्).

Vajadavnam, Givers of food, or good advice.

Hymn-18

For verses 1 and 2, see Nir. VI. 10 and III. 21 respectively.

1. Brahmanaspati, the giver of the text of the Veda, the Lord of divine knowledge (Daya.); Lord of prayer.

Kaksivantam, well-versed in the manual handicraft (Daya.); Kaksya is a synonym of fingers (Nigh. II. 5); and hence the craft associated with fingers, i.e., handicraft. According to the Nirukta, kaksivan is one who possesses secluded apartment. Ausija, one born of usij; usij (उषिज्) is derived from the root √vas, (वश्), meaning to desire, or else the armpit of a man may have been intended. (Nir. VI. 10). The text has nothing to do with the myth, that Kaksivat was the son of Dirghatamas by Usij, a female servant of the queen of the Kalinga King.

• 5. Daksina, a present, gift or honorarium to the priest at a sacred ritual; anything which causes prosperity (दक्षन्ते वर्धन्ते यया सा, —Daya.)

6. Sadasaspati, the chairman of an assembly; sadas, an assembly, an associate of Indra and Agni; the "Speaker" of an Assembly.

7. Invati, pervades or knows (Nigh. II. 14.18).

9. Narasamsam, one deserving praise from people; a person with popularity. Nara-samsa (नराशस) is a sacrifice, says Katthakya; 'seated man' (narah) praise (√sams) gods in sacrifice. (Bṛh. D. II. 28); it is Agni says Sakapuni; he is to be praised by man (Ṛv. VII. 2.2; Nir. VIII. 6).

Hymn-19

For verses 1 and 9, see Nir. X. 36 and X. 37 respectively.

1. Marudbhih, with Maruts; with vital forces; with specific winds (वायुविशेषैः —Daya.).

2. Agne, O adorable God; or fire both (Daya.).

3. Rajasah, worlds; from the root √रञ्ज् to glow. The two lights are called rajas; water is called rajas; world, blood and day are called rajas (Nir. IV. 19).

5. Ghora-varpasah, of terrific forms; varpa is a synonym of 'form', Nigh. III. 7.

7. Parvatan, clouds (Daya.); also mountain since it has parvas or joints; parva is from the root √pr, (पृ), to fill or from √pri, (प्री), to propitiate; here during the period of a fortnight, they propitiate the gods. Parvata (mountain) is so called on account of the similarity of the joints of the nature of the other period.* Seated on a cloud. A cloud is called mountain for the same reason (i.e. from its being raised) (Nir. I. 20).

Samudra, the interspace or the antariksa (Nigh. I. 3); also sea.

Hymn-20

1. Devaya janmane, for the next life, full of blessings (Daya.); to the class of divinities having truth (Wilson).

2. Nasatyabhayam—for the two everlasting, elementary fire and water (Daya.); na+asatya=not+not lasting=lasting.

Sabardugham dhenum, speech full of enlightenment; or cow yielding milk.

*According to Durga, a mountain has joints in the form of stone slabs, and a period has joints in the form of time with its various divisions.

4. Ṛbhu, for this subject, see M. Neve's Essai sur le Mythe des Ribhavas. According to mythology, Ṛbhus were the three sons of Sudhanvan, a descendent of Angiras named Ṛbhu, Vibhu and Vaja. In the Vedic texts, Ṛbhus are intellectuals, the pursuers of knowledge; men of wisdom (Daya.). For this, see Nigh. III. 15, where the term is synonymous of medhavinam. Ṛbhavah are so called because they shine widely (उरु + √भा), or they shine with sacred rite (ऋत + √भा); or they live with sacred rite (ऋत + √भू). (Nir. XI. 15.16). See Ṛv. I. 110.4 where Ṛbhus are mentioned as descendents of Sudhanvan, looking like the sun, or wise like the sun; they mixed things together with their works, i.e. actions during the year. Ṛbhus, Vibhu and Vaja are the architects of airways, waterways and roadways.

6. Tvastuh, of the architect; Camasam, the one by which pleasure is enjoyed, चमन्ति भुञ्जते सुखानि येन (Daya.); also, thus, a ladle.

Caturah, unto the four, air, water, fire and earth (Daya.).

Trih + a + saptani—thrice seven, or the seven mentioned repeatedly. Trih may mean three classes of the best, middling and worst. The ritualists describe seven sacrifices classed under three heads: Agnyadheyam (अग्न्याधेय) with the offerings of butter; the second the pakayajnas (पाकयज्ञा) with the offerings of dressed viands, and the third the agnistoma (अग्निष्टोम) with the offering of Soma or medicinal herbs. Dayananda gives seven social classifications: brahmacarin, gṛhasthin, vanaprasthin and sannyasin, with three types of duties: honour of learning; yajna or sangatikarana (सगतीकरण) and gifts or dana (दान).

Hymn-21

1. Indragni—air and fire (Daya.); like fire and air also.

5. Raksas—the evils or evil forces.

6. Indragni, vital breath and electricity or lightning (Daya.).

Hymn-22

For verses 1, 12, 15 and 17, refer to Nir. (1) XII. 4; (12) IX. 34; (15) IX.32; (17) XII.19 respectively.

1. Asvinau, (i) earth and heaven (Daya.) ; (ii) the widely present fire and water; (iii) priests or the givers of enlightenment; (iv) yoked with (अश्वी) or mares.

3. Kasa, कशा, speech (Nigh. I. 11); also whip; sunṛta (सूनृता), one with keen intellect; speech (Nigh. I. 11).

5. Savitṛ, the sun; the antaryamin God,* the creator. Devata, most adorable.

Savitṛ is not only the sun; the spiritual agent behind the sun; an abstract divinity of stimulation. He is golden in many respects; hiranyaksa, हिरण्याक्ष, golden-eyed (I. 35.8); hiranya-pani, हिरण्यपाणि, golden-handed (I. 22.5); hiranya-jihva, हिरण्यजिह्व,, golden-tongued (VI. 71.3). Savitṛ is so called because he is the stimulator of all (Nir. X. 31). There is a hiranya-stupa, हिरण्यस्तूप golden-tuft hymn in his praise (X. 149). A verse mentions of Savitṛ as the one who would produce best stimulation, श्रेष्ठ सव सविता (1. 164.26). See also Ṛv. V. 81.2, (Wise one puts on all forms, he has generated bliss for the biped and the quadruped. Noble Savitṛ, has looked on heaven; he shines bright after the departure of dawn).

The relation of Savitṛ with Pusan, Bhaga and Mitra is clear, if he is taken to be the sun. Savitṛ by his movements (यामभिः), becomes Pusan (III. 62.9 and V. 81.5); Savitṛ becomes Mitra by reason of his laws धर्मभिः, V. 81.4); he has been identified with Bhaga (V. 82.3; VII.38.1, 6).

6. Apam-napat, lit. son of the waters, but the sun is usually regarded as the parent of waters: आदित्याज्जायते वृष्टिः, i.e. rain is born from the sun, but napat (नपात्) is here taken in the etymological sense, i.e. the one who does not cherish (न पालयति); rather dries them up by his heat (सन्तापेन शोषकः).

Dayanand interprets apam (अपां) as the inspirer of the widely present objects like the interspace (ये व्याप्नुवन्ति सर्वान् पदार्थानन्तरिक्षादयस्तेषाम्) and napatam as the one who does not perish (न विद्यते पातो विनाशो यस्येति तम्). Apam napat is also energy pervading through water (I.143.1).

Similar to apam napat is the word tanunapat (तनूनपात्). Napat is a synonym of offspring which does not immediately succeed a person (i.e. a grandson) (Bṛh. D. II.27). The cow is called as tanu (तनू) because delicious things are prepared (तनाः) from her. Milk is produced from a cow, and the clarified butter is produced from the milk; and hence, tanuna-

---

*Dayananda derives the word thus : सुनोति सूयते सुवति वोत्पादयति सृजति सकलं जगत् स सर्वपिता परमेश्वरः सविता परमात्मा, i.e. one who creates and sustains the entire world, that Lord.

pat means clarified butter (Katthakya); but according to Sakapuni, tanunapat is agni or fire; waters are called tanu because they are spread in the atmosphere; herbs and trees are produced from waters and this fire is produced from herbs and trees. (Nir. VIII. 5). In this sense apam napat is also fire. [Also see apam napat, Nir. III. 16; X. 18; Ṛv. II. 35.10; golden in form and glittering like gold sat the offspring of waters, i.e., the fire, golden in colour; and also Ṛv. V.3.4; offspring of waters (i.e. the fire) who shines within the waters, without fuel, whom priests implore in sacrifices]. Also see note on I. 13.2.

10. Hotra, (होत्रा), generosity; bharati (भारती) wisdom or light; varutri (वरूत्री) knowledge and Dhisana (धिषणा), intellect—Hotra, generosity, traditionally is known as the wife of Agni, personified; the one which carries away the offered oblations (Daya.); bharati, wisdom, is the wife of Bharata, who is regarded as one of the Adityas or the Sun; the light of the Sun; varutri literally means one worth being chosen, one who is excellent (वरणीय). Dhisana is a synonym of vac (वाच्) or is vagdevi (वाग्देवी), the goddess of speech (Nigh. I. 11). The sun is called bharata; its light, therefore, is called bharati (Nir. VIII. 13). In the Unadi, dhisanah (धिषण.) is derived thus : धृष्णोति प्रागल्भ्यं ददाति स धिषण: गुरु: ; Thus it means the one who instructs knowedge, i.e. a teacher; and hence dhisana is intellect (buddhi) (II. 83). In the satapatha Brahmana, varutri means "day and night" (VI. 4.2.6).

12. Indrani, Varunani and Agnayi : Indrani (इन्द्राणी) venerability, is the power behind Indra, the Sun or wind (Daya.), Varunani (वरुणानी), resplendence, is the strength (tranquility and sweetness) behind waters, and Agnayi (अग्नायी), adoration, is the flame or the essential characteristic behind fire; anything like the flame; Agnayi is the wife of Agni (Nir.IX.33,34); or the wife of any person who has the characteristics of fire (पावकवद् वर्तमानस्य पत्नी—Daya.). The Nirukta refers to this verse (IX.34), which is self explanatory.

14. Gandharvasya dhruve pade, the highest level of righteousness. According to the Satapatha, wind is gandharva (गन्धर्व) and water is apsara (अप्सरा) (IX. 3.3.10); one who holds earth is gandharva (यो गां पृथिवीं धरति स:—Daya.), i.e. wind, or vayu. Gam also means speech, and hence gandharva is also a learned preceptor. In mythology, the sphere of Gandharvas, Yaksas, and Apsaras is the antariksa; the atmosphere or firmament between heaven and earth.

16. Visnu, omnipresent God, is the Lord present in the entire static and dynamic universe; the Lord supreme (Daya.), who pervades the world.

Vicakrame, stepped, or created in steps.

Sapta dhamabhih—सप्त धामभि:, by seven forms, i.e. from (i) prakṛti (causal matter) to (ii) atoms, thence in steps (iii) virat, विराट् or mahan (महान्), thence (iv) air, thence (v) fire; thence (vi) water, and thence (vii) pṛithivi or earth (Daya.). This might also mean the seven metres (gayatri, usnik etc.) through which the Vedas were revealed.

17. Tredha nidadhe padam, त्रेधा निदधे पदं, dominated over three regions. This has been explained by Yaska (Nir. XII. 19). Now that which is set free becomes Visnu. Visnu is derived from √ विश् to pervade, or from √व्यू-अश् (or वि-अश्) to interpenetrate (Nir. XII. 18). Visnu strode over the universe. Thrice he planted his foot, enveloped in dust. Visnu strides over this and all that exists. Thrice he plants his foot (for threefold existence), "On earth, intermediate space and in heaven", says Sakapuni. "On the mountain of sunrise, on the meridian and on the mountain of sunset", says Aurnavabha.

Samudhamasya pansure, समूळ्हमस्य पांसुरे, enveloped in his dust, i.e., the foot print is not visible in the stormy atmosphere. Or it is used in a metaphorical sense, i.e. his footstep is not visible, as if enveloped in a dusty place. (Nir.XII.19).

20. Paramam padam, the realisation of God—the highest achievement or aspiration; the supreme reward; the supreme station of Lord.

Hymn-23

1. Vayu, see I. 2.1.

2. Indra-Vayu, see I. 2.4-8; fire (or electricity)—wind pair (Daya.).

3. Sahasraksa, one with thousand eyes; one possessing numberless means (Daya.).

4. Mitra-Varuna, see I. 2.1; I. 15.6; Mitra, in-breath and outbreath; varuna, the udana breath (the up-going) (Daya.).

7. Maruts, nature's bounties; see I. 14.3.

8. Indra, the sun; marud-ganah, collection of winds (Daya.).

10. Pṛsni-matarah, wealth born out of the mother earth; who have pṛsni (पृश्नि) for their mother. The many-coloured earth is pṛsni; it is also a synonym of sky or heaven (Nigh. I. 4.2). Pṛsni also means the sun (Nir. II. 14), since it is thoroughly pervaded by the bright colour (Nairuktas), it closely unites the fluids, it closely unites the lights of luminaries, or it is closely united with light.

13. Pusan, see I. 14.3; the sun (Daya.), the one that protects.

14. Rajanam, to breaths or to the soul (Daya.).

19. Apsu—in waters.

20. Soma, see I. 2.2.

24. Ṛsis, see I. 1.2.

Hymn-24

For verses 10 and 15, see Nir. III. 20 and II. 13 respectively.

1. In mythology (See the Ramayana, B.L. Chap. 61), Sunahsepa (शुनःशेप, or शेफ) is called the son of the ṛsi Ricika and sold for hundred cows by his father to Ambarisa, a king of Ayodhya, as a victim for a human sacrifice; on the road, he comes to the lake Puskara where he sees Visvamitra and implores his succour, and learns from him a prayer, by the repetition of which at the stake, Indra is induced to come and set him free. The story in a different form finds a place in the Aitareya Brahmana also, but the king named is Hariscandra, who has no sons and he worships Varuna in order to obtain a son, promising to sacrifice to him his first born; the first son born to him was Rohita, but when Varuna claims his victim, the King delays the sacrifice under various pretexts, from time to time, until Rohita attains adolescence, when his father communicates to him the fate for which he was destined. Rohita refused submission and spent several years in the forests, away from home; he at last meets there with Ajigartta, a ṛsi, in great distress, and persuades him to part with his second son, Sunahsepa, to be substituted for Rohita, as an offering to Varuna; the bargain is concluded, and Sunahsepa is about to be sacrificed, where by the advice of Visvamitra, one of the officiating priests, he appeals to the gods and is ultimately liberated. The verses recited by Sunahsepa for his liberation are the ones given in the present hymn (I.24) addressed to God Prajapati and in the hymn I.55; then in the hymns I.26 and I.27, then I.29 and I.30.1-15 :

addressed to Prajapati	:	I. 24.1-2	(2 verses)
addressed to Agni	:	I. 24.3-5	(3 verses)
addressed to Varuna	:	I. 24.6-15	(10 verses)
addressed to Varuna	:	I. 55.1-21	(21 verses)
addressed to Agni	:	I. 26.1-10	(10 verses)
		I. 27.1-12	(12 verses)
addressed to Visvedevah	:	I. 27.13	(1 verse)
addressed to Indra	:	I. 29.1-7	(7 verses)
		I. 30.1-15	(15 verses).

On this Indra presented him with a chariot which he accepted having recited the verse I.30.16. Then he addressed 3 verses (I.30.17-19) to the Asvins, and 3 verses (I.30.20-22) to Usa. Now the Sunahsepa became free from all the bonds, and he participated in the sacrifice of gods, pressed out the Soma essence with verses I.28.5-8, poured it in the Drona vessel with verse I.28.9, and he completed the Soma sacrifice with verses I.28.14 with "svaha" added at the end of all these verses. The last rites (अवभृथ) were performed with verses IV.1.4-5, and then finally he called Hariscandra with the verse V.2.7.

The word "sunah" in the Nirukta has been interpreted as wind, so called because it moves quickly; there is another word, which often accompanies with sunah is sirah (शुनासीर), which is described to mean as the sun, so called from moving, √सृ, and thus we have "O wind and the sun (sunasiram), enjoy this praise. Sprinkle ye both this earth with whatever water you make in heaven." (Ṛv. IV.57.5).

The words sepah (शेप.) and vaitasah (वैतसः) are synonyms of penis. Sepah is derived from the root √शप्, meaning by means of which to touch a woman (स्पृश्यते हि तेन स्त्री).

Related to the word sepah is another word sipivista (शिपिविष्ट), which on account of penetrability, is the synonym of Visnu, the sun. (Ṛv. VII. 100.6, denuded like a phallus, i.e. whose rays are not displayed; the rising sun at the day break —Durga); or else it may be that the word is used as a synonym of praise: O Visnu, what is this well-known shape of Thine, i.e. worthy of being fully known that thou sayest to us, I am enveloped with rays (शिपिविष्ट); i e. whose rays are displayed; rays are called here sipayah (शिपय.), i e. he is enveloped by them. (Nir. V.8). Sipivista is the name of Visnu; it also means a bald person (TS.II.5.5.2); it also means a diseased person whose private parts are exposed (TS.II.2.12.5).

The word parucchapa (परुच्छेप) is also mentioned in Nir. X. 42. He is described as a seer; he whose organ is large like a joint (paru), he whose organ is in every point (TS.II.5.8.3).

Dayananda interprets the first six verses of the hymn devoted to the supreme Lord, Prajapati; seventh verse is devoted to Vayu and Savitṛ; the eighth verse to Varuna, the Self or wind.

The verses 15 and 16 contain the word sunahsepa. Dayananda describes sunahsepa as "शुनो विज्ञानवत इव शेपो विद्यास्पर्शो यस्य सः (विद्वान् पुरुषः); also श्वाशुयायी, शवतेर्वा स्यात् गतिकर्मणः (Nir. III. 18). शेपः शपतेः स्पृशति कर्मणः (Nir. III. 21). He interprets the term as God or the sun. (One who touches or approaches or is approached by knowledge or light.)

1. Aditi, the Nighantu describes it as a synonym of earth (I. 1). In Ṛv. I. 89.10, Aditi is regarded as heaven; Aditi the sky; Aditi the mother, the father, the son; All-gods are Aditi, the five clans are Aditi; the past is Aditi and so is the future. Aditi is really the infinite, for something beyond the visible world. See Max Müller, the Vedic Hymns pp. 254-265. Diti, opposed to Aditi (V. 62.8) is a being without any definite conception, a mere reflex of Aditi (Roth). Aditi means indivisible or infinite. Sunahsepa wishes to be restored to the great Aditi (Ṛv. V. 2.7).

Expressions like these, words like daman. bond, and ni-dita, bound, naturally suggest a-diti, the unbound, or unbounded; aditi when used as an adjective may mean boundless; as in V. 59.8, the boundless dyu.

9. Nirṛti, one of the synonyms of earth (Nigh. I. 1). It is also opposed to righteousness, and hence a sin, papa-devata (पाप देवता).

13. Trisu drupadesu, to the three-footed tree; three stands for karma (efforts), upasana (devotion) and jnana (knowledge). (Daya.); sacrificial tripod (Wilson).

Hymn-25

7. Samudre, in the sea or in the inter space.

9. Dvadasa masah—the twelve months of a year. यः उपजायते—the thirteenth additional month; whatever is produced in addition (Daya.).

11. Cikitvan, one who enlightens everyone.

12. Drapim, armour, or dream, √dra, द्र, स्वप्ने (Daya.).

15. Yasah, reputation; also food or anna (Nigh. II. 7).

16. Gavyuti, the abodes of cows or sense organs.

20. Gmah, a synonym for earth (Nigh. I. 1).

Hymn-26

4. Aryaman, one of the Adityas or the suns, pertaining to the month Vaisakha; also the law-giver, or one who maintains law and order; a judge of a court of justice (Daya.). God or the Lord of supreme justice.

Aryaman is the sun, having many chariots, and whose path is undestructed, i.e, unimpeded, chastises the enemy (the sun dispels darkness) (Nir. XI. 25); or one who dispels lawlessness also.

Manusah—Man, मन्यन्ते जानन्ति ये सभ्या मर्त्यास्ते, the mortal men, who know or accept something. (Of Manus, who, the Scholiast says, is the same as Manu, the Prajapati).

Hymn-27

For verses 1, 10 and 13, see Nir. I. 20; X. 8 and III. 20 respectively.

4. Navyansam gayatram, collection of the ever-new Gayatri metres or the Vedic verses.

6. Citrabhanu, one with wonderful lustres, one versed in various disciplines of knowledge.

10. Jarabodha, one with mature experiences, a leader.

Vise-vise, for the good of common people.

11. Bṛhad-bhanuh, one with vast enlightenment.

Hymn-28

For verses 5 and 7, see Nir. IX. 21 and IX. 36 respectively.

The first four verses are addressed to Indra, the two next to ulukhala, the domestic mortar, the next two to the mortar and pestle and the ninth is of miscellaneous appropriation (or to Prajapati or Hariscandra, adhisavana, अधिषवण, to skin (चर्म) or Soma. Dayananda ascribes, on the other hand, the devatas of this hymn as Indra-Yajna-Soma.

1. Grava, stone; pṛthubudhna, broad based; ulukhala, mortar; suta, effusions of the mortar-pestle. Barley, herbs and cereals to be treated by this process (Daya.).

2. Adhisavana, the implement for separating the desired portions from the undesired ones; two platters for containing the juice, as broad as a woman's hips, (grinder and the stone plate, —Daya.); or two shallow plates for receiving and pouring out the Soma juice.

3. Apacyavam upacyavam, gress from and ingress into (अपच्यवं-त्याग; उपच्यवं - प्रापणम्—Daya.).

4. Mantham, churning staff (घृतादिनि मारणं मन्थानम्,—Daya.) as for separating butter from milk.

5. Dundubhih, drum (musical instrument).

6. Somam, essence of medicinal herbs (Daya.). Vanaspata, of trees, plants etc. (Daya.).

7. Hari-iva, like the horses.

9. Camvoh, like the infantry and cavalry.

Goradhi-tvaci, on the back of the earth-crust (Daya.); cow-hide (Wilson).

Uc-chistam, remains, remainders or leavings (Wilson); Dayananda explains as cambam sistam ut-bhara (चम्व, शिष्टं उत्, भर); sistam, trained or to be trained (infantry and cavalry).

Pavitra, to purify, to filter (through blades of grass).

Hymn-29

1. Gosu, in cattle, or earth, or sense organs (Daya.). Asvesu, in horses.

2. Siprin, the praiseworthy, benevolent or handsome, also having nose, lower jaw or chin (hence handsome).

Vajanam pate, Lord of battles (Daya.), Lord of food.

Saci, people, folk (Nigh. III.9); or actions and efforts (Nigh. II. 1).

4. Mithu-dṛsa, looking at each other (with passionate or evil eyes).

4. Gardabham, ass (our adversary), ass-like in temper (Daya.). Papaya, discordant; vicious.

6. Kundṛnacya, with crooked course or movement.

Vanat, from or on the forest; also world or the sun rays (Nigh. I. 5).

Kṛkadasvam, one that does us injury.

Hymn-30

For verse 4, see Nir. I. 10.

14. Dhranu, resolute or firm; अक्षं न चक्रयोः, like the axle of two wheels.

The hope that blessings should follow praise, as the pivot on which they revolve, as the revolutions of the wheels of a car turn upon the axle (M. Langlois).

20. Usas, the dawn.

Hymn-31

For verse 16, see Nir. VI. 20

1. Angirah, the essence of the entire cosmic creations, as well as of the body of creatures; omnipresent Lord (Daya.); the essence or sap of body organs (SBr. XIV. 3. 1. 2; आंगिरसो अंगानां हि रसः (Angiras as the progenitor of all the angirasas).

Ṛsi, the instructor of all the Vedas; omniscient.

Maruts, righteous, well-instructed people. (Marut is one of the 36 padanamas, Nigh. V. 5);see also, notes on I. 14. 3.

2. Angirastamah, superlative of angiras; the best amongst the living creatures (Daya.).

3. Vasu, the sustainer or holder or inhabitor of all (Daya.).

Rodasi, the earth and heaven (द्यावा पृथिवी).

Prathamo matarisvane, first in, or on, or over the wind; agni precedes vayu (agnir vayur adityah) (मातर्यन्तरिक्षे श्वसिति मोऽय मातरिश्वा; one who breathes in the sky, i. e. wind).

4. Pururavase, पुरूरवसे, the one who is associated with numerous sounds or words (पुरव. numerous; rava, रवा —sounds or words)—Daya.

It has been alluded that Agni explained to Manu that heaven was to be gained by pious works. Pururavas has also been supposed to be the son of Budha, the son of Soma, in the generation of fire by attrition. The fire in rituals is first applied to kindle the ahavaniya fire and then the garhapatya.

5. Ahuti, the one by which noble acts are accomplished, the invocation and oblation.

Vasatkṛti, utterance of the word vasat, वषट्, at the moment of pouring the butter on the fire, (the one by which a noble step is undertaken). The Nirukta refers that vasat-karin, a person about to utter the sound vasat, should meditate on the particular deity to whom the oblation is offered (Gop. Br. II. 3.4; Nir. VIII. 22).

11. Nahusa, in mythology, was the son of Ayus, son of Pururavas, who was elevated to heaven as an Indra, until precipitated thence for his arrogance. The myth is irrelevant in the present context. Nahusa is one of the synonyms of manusya or men.

Ida or Ila, divine wisdom; in the legend, she is described as a daughter of Vaivasvata Manu. Frequently, the Vedic verses ascribe to Ila the first institution of the rules of performing sacrifices. In this text, she is termed, sasani, (शमनी), which means the giver of instruction in duty (शास्ति सर्वान् विद्याधर्माचरणशीलान् यया सत्यनीत्या, तान्—Daya.).

14. Caturaksah, four-eyed agni; illuminating the four cardinal points; aksah from √अश्, to obtain (Nir. IX. 7).

15. Varma syutam, sewn armour, a quilted jacket, formed with needles without leaving a fissure.

Jivayajam yajate, sacrifices a life, sacrifice (literally); जीवान् याजयति धर्मंञ्च सगमयति, तं, (Daya.), the one that inspires living creatures to perform noble actions.

17. Manu, Angiras and Yayati—Manu, men; angiras, in-breaths and out-breaths; yayati, persons diligent and dedicated (Daya.). Legend regards them as ancient patriarchs, associated with well-known sacrifices held at different places.

Hymn-32

For verses 1, 5, 6, 10 and 11, see Nir. (1) VII. 2; (5) VI. 17; (6) VI. 4; (10) II. 10; and (11) II. 17.

In this and subsequent hymns, we have a reference to the legend of Indra's slaying Vṛtra. Vṛtra, also named ahi, is nothing more than accumulation of vapour condensed, or figuratively shut up in or obstructed by a cloud. Indra, with his thunderbolt, or atmospheric or electric influence, divides the aggregated mass and vent is given to the rain, which then descends upon the earth, and moistens the fields, or passes in rivers. On the spiritual plane, Indra or Maghavan is the self, or the supreme Self, and Vṛtra is the cloud of ignorance. On the cosmic plane, Indra is the sun and Vṛtra is the rain-bearing cloud.

1. Vajri, one with thunderbolt, or adamantine justice; one with radiation-beams, the shatterer of obstructions or enemies (सर्वपदार्थ विच्छेदकः किरणवानिव शत्रुच्छेदी सेनापतिः —Daya.).

Ahi, cloud (Nigh. I. 10)

Parvata, cloud (Nigh. I. 10), and also mountain.

2. Tvastṛ, the Sun, the one who cuts with the rays; the one who by his valour destroys the enemies (स्वकिरणैं छेदन सूक्ष्मकर्ता, स्वतेजोभिः शत्रुविदारको वा—Daya.). See note on I. 13.10.

3. Trikadruka, the one associated with three phases; birth, sustenance and dissolution. Also triple sacrifices: Jyotis, Gauh and Ayu.

4. Taditna=tadanim, then an example of transposition of vowels

(श्रा and ई) or varna viparyasa. (तादोत्ना → तदानीम्).

Vṛtra, cloud (see note on I. 3.8.). We have in the Nirukta (II. 16) whose enemy is Indra, i.e., Indra is his slayer, or destroyer, therefore, he is called having Indra as his enemy. But who is Vṛtra ? "It is a cloud", say the etymologists.

("It is a demon, son of Tvasta" say the lengedarians). Vṛtra is derived from √वृ to cover, or from √वृत् to roll, or from √वृध् to grow. Vṛtra is so called because he covered, he rolled, and he grew. (Nir. II. 17).

6. Rujanah, rivers (Nigh. I, 13); pipise, crushed or ground the rivers; banks were broken down.

Indra-satruh, the one whose Indra is satru or slayer, i.e. Vṛtra or cloud.

9. Danuh, from √दो to cut or destroy or it means, "gives" (Unadi III. 32) (ददातीति दानुः); the one who is liberal in giving, the one possessing keen intellect (बुद्ध्यादिविचक्षणः—Daya.).

11. Dasa-patni, wives of the destroyer; the one who has a husband as the one to provide shelter (Daya.); name of Vṛtra; destroyer of all things or all holy acts.

Pani, keeper of cows; businessmen, or traders.

Ahi-gopah, protected by clouds.

12. Sṛke, like thunderbolt, a beam of rays.

Asvyah, versed or skilled in speed and other characteristics, or like a horse's tail.

Sapta-sindhun, seven rivers; seven types of water-holders or water-reserves: four on land: lakes, rivers, wells and tanks; and three at long distances, at short distances (medium) and quite close by, these three in the interspace or atmosphere. The ten water channels quoted by Yaska (Ṛv. V. 75.3) are Ganga, Yamuna, Sarasvati, Sutudri, Parusni, Asikni, Marudvṛdha, Vitasta, Susoma and Arjikiya (Nir. IX. 26).

Maghavat, maghoni (Ṛv. II. 11.21), Lord of wealth; are derived from magham, meaning wealth; (one of the 28 synonyms of wealth, Nigh. II. 10); from √ मह्, to give, (Nir. I. 7). It is an appellation of God, Indra, III. 30.5; V. 34.3.

14. Sravanti, rivers, nerves.

Rajansi, worlds (Nigh. IV. 1).

Hymn-33

For verses 3, 12 and 13, see Nir. VI. 22; VI. 19 and VI. 16 respectively.

1. One may also recall from this the allegory of stolen cows by Panis. The followers of Vṛtra are here said to be the shades of night, which are dispersed by the rising of the sun; according to the Brahmanas, "verily the sun, when he rises in the east, drives away the Raksasas."

4. Dasyu, one who deprives others of their belongings by force and injustice (बलान्यायाभ्यां परस्वापहर्त्तारम्—Daya.); a robber, a barbarian, opposed to an arya. Dasyu has been called dhaninam or wealthy, because according to the Vajasaneyins, he comprehends within him all gods, all knowledge, all oblations, वृत्रस्यान्त. सर्वे देवा. सर्वाश्च विद्याः सर्वाणि हवींषि चासन्. धनिन धार्मिकं धनाढ्य, virtuous and wealthy—Daya.

Sanakah, those who enjoy the wealth of others by injustice (Daya.); the followers of vṛtra (सनन्ति सेवन्ते परपदार्थान् ये ते दस्यवो जनाः; cf. Unadi II. 32).

Ayajvan, non-sacrificers (Daya.); those who do not perform yajna or noble selfless acts.

6. Ksitayo navagvah—men whose practices are commendable (may be Angirasas engaged in offering oblations to Indra for nine months); Ksitayah is a synonym for men (Nigh. II. 3); Navagvah, one possessing the latest instructions or knowledge (Daya.).

7. Rajasah, earth; the terrestrial world (Nir. IV. 19).

8. One is again reminded of Vṛtra allegory. The followers of Vṛtra are here said to be the shades of night, which are dispersed by rising of the sun.

14. Kutsa, thunderbolt or vajra (Nigh. II.20). Sayana, by mistake, takes it to be a seer of Kutsa gotra.

Dasadyu, one who shines in ten directions; cloud.

Svaitrayah, son of the terrestrial oceans, hence a cloud : (श्वित्राया वर्णकल्यां भूमेरपत्यम्,—(Daya). Svitrya is described in the following verse as having hidden himself in a pool of water through fear of enemies.

Hymn-34

1. Asvins, see notes on I. 3.1

2. Vena, one desirous of the fulfilment of objects (Daya.). Venus planet also.

Soma, see notes on I. 2.2.

6. Sanyu, शं सुखं कल्याण विद्यते यस्मिन् —(Daya.); the one possessing happiness and contentment.

Sunave, for the adopted son or disciple. (Daya.).

Tridhatu, three humours: wind, bile and phlegm; or three metals : iron, copper and brass (Daya.) or three means of transport on land, water and interspace, using three metals.

7. Nasatya, not untruth, i.e. truth;see note on I. 20.3; tisrah, hav-ingmovements in the upward, forward and downward directions (Daya.).

8. Sindhubhih, rivers; three rivers, three sorts of jars or pit-chers used to contain and pour out the Soma juice at three daily sacrifices (Wilson).

9. Rasabha, the one, while in speed, roars with sound (रासयन्ति शब्दयन्ति येन वेगेन तस्य रासभस्य—Daya.). See Nigh. I.15. Two asses are said to be the steeds of Asvins.

11. Tribhih ekadasaih, by three, and by eleven; Dayananda refers to such transports as take one across an ocean in three days and three nights and across the world in eleven days and eleven nights.

It may also mean thrice eleven or thirty-three; the well-known thirty-three devatas, eight vasus, eleven rudras, twelve adityas, Indra and Prajapati; (may also be three-fold repetition of eleven divinities).

Hymn-35

1. Agni, fire, adorable Lord; see I. 1.1.

Mitra-varuna, prana and udana (Daya.); see notes on I. 2.7.

Savitṛ—The Sun; see note on I. 22.5.

5. Hiranya pra-u-ga, the one possessing a space resembling the effulgent fire; pra-u-ga is a triangular yoke; a golden yoke of a chariot. (Pra-u-ga in the Sulbo geometry means a triangle.)

6. Yamasya bhuvane, dwelling of Yama; Yama is wind, and hence its dwelling is interspace or antariksa, atmosphere. The soul after leaving the body also passes through the interspace; their abode is interspace (Daya.).

7. Suparna, the solar rays (Nigh I.5).

10. Asurah, from asur, the breaths; one which sustains the breaths; the air.

Raksas, thieves, robbers and other wickeds; they from whom one needs protection (Nir. IV. 18).

Yatudhanan--to them who are the cause of troubles, pains; the vicious persons; यातवो यातना. पीडा धीयन्ते येषु तान् दस्यून्, (Daya.).

Hymn-36

1. For Agni; see I. 1.1.

4. For Varuna and Mitra see I. 2.7; for Aryaman, see I. 26.4 (He who measures or estimates properly the Aryas : आर्यान्मिमीते).

7. Hotrabhih, by priests engaged in righteous and good acts like the performance of havana (Daya.). Usually we have a mention of seven hotṛs or seven priests, which at the soma yaga are : (i) The yajamana, यजमान (the institutor); (ii) hotṛ होतृ, who repeats the hymns of the Ṛk, (iii) the udgatṛ उद्गातृ, who chants the Sama: (iv) the potṛ, पोतृ, who prepares the materials for the oblation; (v) the nestṛ, नेष्टृ, who pours it on the fire; (vi) the brahma, ब्रह्मा, who supervises the entire ceremony; and (vii) the raksas, रक्षस्, who guards the door. (This list omits one, the adhvaryu, अध्वर्यु, who recites the yajus; perhaps, the yajus recitation is done by the yajamana.) For the Saptahotarah, see VIII. 60.16; III. 4.5. There is a reference to five hotṛs also (Ṛv. II. 34.14).

8. For Vṛtra, see I. 32.5.

Kanva, intellectuals and learned, well-versed in spiritual or technological sciences (Daya.). It has nothing to do with Kanva, a reputed ṛsi or seer.

The Unadi describes Kanva as कणति निमीलति चेष्टतेऽसौ कण्वः, कण्व पापं, कण्वो मुनिर्वा (I. 151).

10. Kanvah-medhyatithih ; here kanvah represents an intellectual and wise person (मेधाविन —Daya.) and medhyatithih, are those who welcome the unexpected guests of honour (a host of pious guests); here medhyatithih, is an adjective or an epithet of kanva. (Medhya—venerable, atithi—guest). In the legendary history of ṛsis, Medhatithi is the son of Kanva.

Manave, for the sake of a rational being; for a man of discrimination.

18. Turvasam, to one who readily attains the possessions of others (tura=with speed or readiness)—तुरा शीघ्रतया परपदार्थान् वष्टि काङ्क्षति तम् (Daya.).

Yadum, to a robber who deprives others of their property (इतरधनाय यततेऽसौ यदुर्मनुष्यस्तम् —Daya.).

Ugradevam, those with bad temper or harsh attitude (उग्रान् तीव्रस्वभावान् विजिगीषुम्, —Daya.).

Nava-vastvam, pertaining to the one who builds a new house in a solitary place like a forest : (नवानि नवीनानि अरण्ये निर्मितानि वास्तूनि गृहाणि येन तम्,—Daya.).

Bṛhadratham, one possessing large chariots or vehicles (बृहन्तो रथा रमण-साधका यस्य तम्, —Daya.).

Turvitim, the vicious dangerous persons, murderers, involved in violence (तुर्वति हिनस्ति तम् —Daya.).

19. Kṛstayah, the cultured persons (Nigh. II. 3; synonym of people or men).

Hymn-37

For the verse 1, see Nir. VII. 2.

1. For Kanva, see notes on I. 36.8.

For Maruts, see notes on I. 14.3 and I. 31.1.

Anarvanam, without horses arva, a synonym of horse (Nigh. I. 14); by some scholars, interpreted as without a brother's son (भ्रातृ-व्यरहितम्). Maruts' chariot is drawn by a deer (legend).

4. Devattam-brahma, the Veda or divine knowledge as revealed by God, or instructions given by learned scholars. (Daya.); also the praise or prayer which recommends the oblation, obtained from the favour of instruction of the gods (Wilson).

5. Aghnyam, not deserving violence or ill-treatment; aghnya, a synonym for go (cow, earth or sense organs) (Nigh. II. 11; V. 5).

6. Gmah, a synonym of prithivi or earth (Nigh. I. 1).

7. Yamaya, for approach, from √या and म particle; for an approach or appropriate attitude or action (Daya.); यायते प्राप्यते स यामः प्रहरो वा; (Unadi, I. 140).

10. Kastha, intermediate quarters or cardinal directions (Nigh. I. 6); also quarters, since they are situated having gone across; intermediate quarters, since they are situated having crossed each other; the sun is also called kastha, since it is situated having gone across; in the same sense, destination as well as stationary waters are called kastha (Nir. II. 15).

12. Giri, cloud (Nigh. I. 10).

14. Kanva, man of wisdom.

Hymn-38

1. Vṛkat barhisah, the learned priests (ऋत्विजः विद्वांसः,—Daya.); also trimmed sacred grass. Barhi is sacred grass (Ṛv. VII. 39.2, Nir. V. 28—for them, the grass soft to tread is spread); they spread the grass successively (Ṛv. VIII. 45.1; Nir. VI. 14); to sit on this our grass (Ṛv. X. 188.1; Nir. VII. 20); we call barhih as grass, from its growing rapidly (Nir. VIII. 8; Ṛv. X. 110.4).

4. Pṛsni-matarah, the one whose mother is pṛsni or akasa, the atmosphere or space, and hence wind. (Daya.).

5. Yamasya, of the wind (Daya.). Patha, path or channels for in-breath aud out-breath (Daya.); also the path of Yama (the Lord of discipline, God of death).

6. Nir-ṛti, the painful movement of wind, causing disease (Daya.); also calamity; also earth. The 'earth' is so known from its giving enjoyment; when the word is derived from √ṛ, √ऋ to befall, then it means 'calamity' (Nir. II. 7).

7. Dhanva, a synonym of antariksa or interspace (Nigh. I. 3); also desert (Nigh. IV. 2).

14. Slokam, divine speech; an instruction according to the Vedas (Speech, Nigh. I. 11); a verse in general.

Gayatram Ukthyam, a measured hymn which can be recited with tune; the one in the Gayatri metre.

Hymn-39

For verse 10, see Nir. VI. 23.

1. For Maruts, see notes on I. 14.3 and I. 31.1.

4. For Rudra, see note on I. 10.4 (the eleven rudras); the one who makes the law-breakers weep; one who takes to task the unjust persons, or the out-laws, the outragers (ये रोदयन्त्यन्यायकारिणो जनान् तत्सम्बुद्धो रुद्रासः,— Daya.). Rudra is so called because he bellows (रौति), or because he runs (द्रवति) vociferating (int. of ru), or it is derived from the causal of the verb √रुद् (to roar) (Ṛv. VIII. 46.1; Nir. X. 4). Agni is also called Rudra (Av. VII. 87.1; Nir. X. 7). Rodasi is the wife of Rudra (Nir. XI. 49 and XII. 46); (Usually, she is regarded as the wife of Maruts or lightning). "Rudra is one, and none second", (TS. I. 8.6.1); whereas we have also a text, "Rudras who on earth are thousands without number." (असंख्याता सहस्राणि ये रुद्रा अधिभूम्याम्, Yv. XVI. 54). For this see (Nir. I. 15). Rudras and Maruts are the deities of the realm of atmosphere (Nir. VII. 23).

9. Pracetasah, one possessing superb intellect or knowledge (Daya.).

10. Sudanavah, those who literally give for noble purposes (Daya.); bounteous givers.

Hymn-40

1. Brahmanaspati, Lord of divine knowledge or universe. (Daya.); also regarded as a form of Agni; the term is usually associated with Maruts or Indra. The word may also be translated as Lord of prayers (Ṛv. II. 23.9, Nir. III. 11; Ṛv. I. 18.1, Nir. VI. 10). For this, see note on Ṛv. I. 18.1.

Maruts, see notes on I. 14.3 and I. 31.1.

4. Ila, speech or earth. A synonym of earth (Nigh. I. 1); of speech (I. 11); of anna or cereals (II. 7); a padanama (V. 5); one of the triad with Sarasvati and Bharati.

5. Indra, see notes on I. 2.4 and I. 3.4.

Varuna, see notes on I. 2.7.

Mitra, see notes on I. 2.7.

Aryaman, see notes on I. 26.4.

Hymn-41

For verse 9, see Nir. III. 16.

1. For Varuna, see notes on I. 2.7; Mitra on I. 2.7; Aryaman on I. 26 4; Adityas on I. 2.7; Varuna, Mitra and Aryaman, all three represent different characters of the sun or Aditya.

9. Dayananda refers to four types of characters which are unreliable for friendship, (i) one who loves not. (ii) one who curses and plans to murder, (iii) one who is suspected to poison, (iv) one who covets the wealth of others or a gamester. According to another interpretation, caturah means the four dice. For this verse, see Nir. III. 16: just as one should be afraid of a gambler who holds the four (dice), in the same manner, one should be afraid of using harsh speech; one should never be eager for using harsh speech.

Hymn-42

1. For Pusan see note on Adityas; Pusan is the Aditya of the Asvina month. Goats are coursers of Pusan (Ṛv. VI. 55.6; Nir. IV. 25; VI. 4). At the termination of night, Pusan and Vayu come with their teams (steeds) for protection, Nir. V. 28. Pusa (पूषा) is supposed to have no teeth (करूलती); for this see Nir. VI. 51 on Ṛv. IV. 30.24 : "may god Aryaman give you all fair and beautiful things. O destroyer of enemies, may Pusan, Bhaga and the god having gaps in his teeth (करूलती) give you all fair and beautiful things." Who is the god who has gaps in his teeth ? According to some it is an epithet of Bhaga who comes before it. According to others, this god is Pusan, because he has no teeth. Pusan has no teeth, says a Brahmana passage : अदन्तः पूषा (Kaus. Br. VI. 13; SBr. I. 7.4.6). करूळ्ती-इति पूषोक्तोऽदन्तकः स इति श्रुतेः। (Bṛhad. D. IV. 139). Pusan never loses his cattle; he is the guardian of universe, i.e. he, the sun, is the guardian of all. (Ṛv. X.17.3; Nir. VII. 9). For Pusan, see Ṛv. VI. 58 hymn; when he goes on account of the increase of his rays, he is called Pusan (VI. 58.1; Nir. XII. 18; one form is bright, the other holy). Pusa occurs as a feminine noun, when it may become synonymous with earth (इयं पूषा). Also see note on I. 14.3.

Hymn-43

1. For Rudra, see notes on I.10.4, and I. 39.4. Rudra is one who makes to weep, who causes all to weep at the time of death; thus he is the destroying principle; but here in this hymn, he is a beneficient deity, presiding over medicinal plants. Rudra is a vital force or air.

2. Aditi, may mean here a mother (Daya.); also earth, which, it is wished, may so act that rudriya may be obtained. According to Sayana, rudriya is a medicament in relation to or presided over by Rudra (Wilson). (Rudriya is that which is related to Rudra, God, prana or wind; may mean a student or a learned person —Daya.).

3. For Mitra and Varuna, see notes on I. 2.7.

4. For Sanyu, see note on I. 34.6; is often regarded in legend as a son of Bṛhaspati.

Jalasabhesajam—medicament conferring delight.

7. For Soma, see note on I. 2.2.

Hymn-44

1. For Agni, see note on I. 1.1.

2. Usasa, associated with dawn or morning functions (Daya.); usasam, उषसं, to morning.

3. Vasum, to one, embodiment of learning (Daya.).

4. Yavistham, youngest of gods.

Jatavedasam, one who knows all that is in the creation; who knows all that is born.

6. Yavisthya, the juvenile, young, youngest; namasya, honoured or respected.

7. Visvavedasam, one who knows and possesses all objects of happiness; omniscient.

9. Usarbudhah, those who wake up in the mornings; people awaking at dawn.

11. Manusvat, like manu or a rational man (मननशीलेन मनुष्येण तुल्यम्,—Daya.).

13. For Mitra, see notes on I. 2.7; and for Aryaman on I. 26.4.

14. For Maruts, see notes on I. 14.3 and I. 31.1, for Varuna on I. 2.7 and for Asvins on I. 3.1.

Hymn-45

For verse 3, refer to Nir. III. 17.

1. For Agni, see notes on I. 1.1; for Vasu, on I. 10.4; for Rudra on I. 39.4 and for Aditya on I. 2.7 and I. 14.3.

2. In this verse, there is a reference to thirty-three gods which according to the Satapatha Brahmana are : 8 Vasus+11 Rudras+12 Adityas+Indra (वषट्कार)+Prajapati. (These are known to be Somapas). According to the Aitareya Brahmana (II. 18), there are two classes of thirty-three divinities each one consisting of Somapas (enumerated above) or the acceptors of the Soma essence, and the others are the asomapas, i.e. 11 prayajas (fore-offerings; प्रयाज, the soma with the Apris), the 11 anuyajas (after offerings; अनुयाज) and 11 upayajas, उपयाज (subordinate offerings), who in ceremonies are to be propitiated by oblations of clarified butter, not by Soma.

3. Praskanva, superior to Kanva, a person of great wisdom. For Kanva, see notes on I.14.2 and I.36.8. This verse is discussed in Nir. III.17: Hear Praskanva's call, O Lord of great ordinances, and having all created beings as his property, like that of Priyamedha, Atri, Virupa and Angiras.

Priyamedhah, is one to whom sacrifices are dear; just as you have heard the call of these seers, so hear the call of Praskanva. Praskanvah, a son of Kanva, or one born of Kanva, a word formed on the analogy of pragram (प्राग्रम्, in front). Bhṛgu was produced in flames, i.e. one who, although being roasted, was not burnt. Angiras was born in live coals; live coals are so called because they leave a mark, or they are bright, अङ्गारेष्वङ्गिरा । अङ्गारा अंकना (अञ्चनाः). They said, "Seek the third in this very place" (अत्रैव तृतीयमृच्छतेत्यूचुः । तस्मादत्रिः । न त्रय इति।). Therefore Atri is so called, i. e. not three.

Virupa is multiform. (See Nir. III.17). Dayananda translates priyamedhavat, as one like the person who has keen and pleasant insight; atrivat as one who is free from three types of pains, spiritual, physical, and environmental; virupavat is one who is of multiform nature; angirasvat i.e. one who is like the vital breaths, the essence of body organs.

4. Mahikaravah, they, under whose supervision are employed technicians of various crafts; also performers of great ceremonies.

9. Pratar-yavnah those who incessantly work manually from morn to evening with diligence (Daya.); strength generated (Wilson), —produced by friction which requires strength to perform effectively.

Daivyam janam—learned person with profound enlightenment (Daya.); divine or deified persons.

10. Tiro-ahnyam, tiras, oblique, ahnyam, diurnal (in ceremonies that juice which is expressed on the preceding day and offered on the succeeding); well-known during the day, which is of obsession to thieves etc. (Daya.).

Hymn-46

For verse 3, see Nir. V. 24.

1. For Usa, see I.44.2; Morning or dawn; for Asvins see I.3.1.

4. He causes the waters to be consumed by oblations. The words pipartti and papurih (पपुरिः) mean either to fill or to please. The father who observes the deed, the action, i. e. the sun. See Nir.V.24. पपुरिः—प्रपूरको विद्वान् (Daya.).

5. For Nasatya, see I. 20.3; 34.7.

9. For Kanva, see I. 14.2; 36. 8, according to Dayananda, this verse is an invocation to intelligent technicians to explore across the seas and under water depths, the nature's resources to be utilized by the society.

Hymn-47

1. For Asvins, see I.3.3.

2. For Kanva, see I.14.2; 36.8

7. For Nasatya, see I.20.3; 34.7.

Hymn-48

1., 2. For Usas, see I.44.2; she is regarded as the daughter of heaven or sun (duhitar divah); ladies are expected to be pleasing and benevolent like dawn, as described by the epithets asvavati and gomati (abounding with horses and kine, or rather strength and intellect), speaking kind words (सूनृता) (Daya.).

4. For Kanva, see I. 14.2.; 36.8.

6. Arthinah visrjati, she lets loose askers or solicitors.

8. Sridhah, the driers up (Wilson); absorbers of moisture (शोष-यित्रीन्); violent, the one who causes injury (Daya.).

15. Dvarau, the two doors (of house or sense organs), one for entry and another for exit (Daya.); the east and west points of horizon.

Hymn-50

For verses 1, 3, 5, 6 and 7, see Nir. (I) VII.20; 12.15; (3) III.15; (5) XII.24; (6) XII. 22-25; (7) XII.23.

7. Aktubhih, by nights (Nir., Daya.).

Rajas, prthu, the vast universe.

8. Sapta haritah, solar rays of seven kinds (Nigh. I.15); seven coursers of the sun.

12. Sukesu, in parrots; शुकवत् कृतेषु कर्मसु (Daya.); by the actions or behaviours similar to those of parrots.

Harimanam, efficient medicines to cure diseases.

Ropanakasu, by ointments; or starlings.

Haridravesu, curatives or haritala tree (Sayana). (But there is no haritala tree; haritala is a yellow orpiment). It may be a yellow vegetable powder.

Hymn-51

For verse 14, see Nir. VI. 31.

1. Mesam, ram; one who inseminates through rain (Daya.).

2. Rbhavah, may be synonymous with Maruts; men of wisdom (Daya.). The Nirukta describes as follows (XI. 15): Rbhavah are so called because they shine widely (उरु+भा), or they shine with sacred rite (ऋत+भा); they live with sacred rite (ऋत+√भू). We have in the text: "Having performed laborious works, with zeal, institutors of sacrifice, being mortals, they attained immortality. The Ṛbhus, sons of Sudhanvan, radiant like the sun, mixed things together with their works during the year. (Ṛv. I. 110. 4). Ṛbhu, Vibhvan, and Vaja are supposed to have been the three sons of Sudhanvan, a descendant of Angiras. With reference to them there are Vedic passages which mention the first and the last (Ṛbhu and Vaja) in plural number, but not the middle one. With regard to this, i.e. the use of plural number of Ṛbhu, and the praising together the cup (चमस्), there are many hymns in the ten books of Ṛgveda. The rays of the sun are also called Ṛbhus. We have in Ṛv. I. 161. 11: when you slept in the house of the unconceivable one, because you were there, hence, O Ṛbhus, you did not come here today. The unconceivable one is the sun, so called because he cannot be concealed (Nir. XI. 16).

3. Angirasas, they have been referred to in the Nirukta V. 4; X. 33 and XI. 17, 19. Angirasas are called varahas (वराहाः) also (Ṛv. VIII. 77. 10; X. 67. 7). We have a reference to an Angirasa Hiranyastupa (हिरण्यस्तूप) also (X. 149.5; Nir. X. 33), one with golden tuft (a tuft of hair made of gold or one having a golden colour). The word stupa is drived from the verb styai, स्त्यै, (to be collected into a heap); i.e. a collection. Angiras is born in live coals (अङ्गारेष्वङ्गिराः); live coals are so called because they leave a mark or they are bright (अङ्गाराः अङ्कनाः, अञ्चनाः)—Nir. III. 17. The seers are regarded as sons of Angiras; they were born of Agni (Ṛv. X. 62. 5)—ते अङ्गिरसः सूनवः, ते अग्ने परिजज्ञिरे ।

Atri, see note on I. 45. 3, along with Praskanva and Angiras. See Nir. III. 17; VI. 36, and Ṛv. I. 116. 8. Dayananda regards atrim as attaram अत्तारम्, (Unadi, IV. 69), one who eats, enjoys (भक्षयतीति अत्री अत्त्रिणौ, पापं वा, अत्रिः मुनिभेदो वा) (also a name of a seer). Also one who is free from three categories of pains, mental, physical and environmental. (Daya.).

Vimada, the one enjoying various kinds of raptures (Daya.). Later on the name of a maharsi.

Sataduresu, by hundred doors or contrivances; by hundreds of clusters of clouds (Daya.).

4. Parvate, on the clouds (or mountains) (Nigh. I. 10, a synonym of clouds). For vṛtra, see note on I. 3. 8; 32. 5.

5. For Indra see notes on I. 3. 4.

Pipru, the decisions of presiding officer of a court of law (Daya.). In mythology, he is an asura or demon, who oppressed Ṛjisvan, (ऋजिश्वान्) a worshipper. Dayananda explains Ṛjisvan, as a righteous person, with noble virtues.

6. For Kutsa, see note on I. 53.14; vajra or thunderbolt (Daya.), or such weapons.

Susna,. (शुष्ण) Sambara, (शम्बर) and Arbuda (अर्बुद) have been regarded as asuras or demons of atmosphere. Susna and Sambara are synonyms of strength or bala (Nigh. II. 9); arbudam is a large number also. Arbuda.means a cloud; aranam (अरणम्) means water; giver of water (cloud), it shines like water, or it seems to be like water. Just as that cloud, when raining, becomes a large mass, so like that is the number arbudam (ten millions) (Nir. III. 10)

Atithigvaya, for the transport facilities of guests (अतिथीनां गमनाय—Daya.); in relation to guests, atithigvam may mean hospitable; it is said to be also termed Divodasa, a liberal prince in mythology.

8. Arya or Aryas, persons practising religious rites, are cultured and virtuous and lovers of God. Dasyus, on the contrary, who do not adhere to the Vedic sociology or way of life and are hostile at times to Aryas. Whilst discussing the verse I 117. 21, the Nirukta refers to Asvins, who had made far-spreading light for the Arya. The word arya (अर्य) is a synonym of lord or isvara (Nigh. II. 22) and hence Arya means the son of the lord (आर्य ईश्वरपुत्र:, Nir. VI. 26). Dayananda regards Aryas as righteous persons, learned and engrossed in public service (धार्मिकानाप्तान् विदुषः सर्वोपकारकान् मनुष्यान्).

Dasyus, are those ignorant villain persons who oppress others, are vicious and unrighteous (परपीडका मूर्खा धर्मरहिता दुष्टा मनुष्याः,—Daya.).

9. Vamra, also see VIII. 102. 21 : when the emmet eats, when the pismire crawls. (Nir. III. 20); उद्गिरकस्त्यक्ता, abstainer from vices (Daya.). वम्रो विजिघान सन्दिहः—vamra destroyed the collections.—The Scholiast says: a ṛsi, named Vamra took advantage of Indra's absence from a sacrifice, to carry away the accumulated heap of offerings, the marrow or the essence of earth (Wilson).

10. Usanas, the well-intentioned wise men (Daya.). In later legend, it came also to be the name of a ṛsi, son of Kavi, also known asKavya, a special friend of Indra (I. 121. 12), whom he gave his thunderbolt.

Nṛmanah, friend of men, learned people in service of men; mano-yujah, will-harnessed (yoked by thoughts), such servants (Daya.), such steeds (Wilson).

Hymn-52

1. For Indra, see notes on I. 3. 4.

2. For Vṛtra, see notes on I. 3. 8; 32. 5.

4. For Maruts, see notes on I. 14. 3; 32. 1.

5. For Vala, see notes on I. 11. 5. Tritah, triple or threefold; paridhiriva, as through triple coverings, or defences. According to a traditional legend of the non-Vedic age, ekata, dvita, and trita (एकत, द्वित, त्रित) were three men produced in water by Agni for the purpose of removing or rubbing off the reliques of an oblation of clarified butter; in the ritual, three blades of sacred grass are placed on the altar, (to which the legend owes its origin). Sayana, following the Taittiriyas, says that Agni threw the cinders of the burnt offerings into water, when successively arose Ekata, Dvita and Trita, and they were for this reason called Aptyas (आप्त्याः) or sons of water. The legend further says that on one occasion Trita went to draw water from a well, fell into it, and the Asuras heaped coverings over the mouth of it, and thus prevented him from getting out; but Trita could break through them with ease. It is to this exploit that Indra's breaking through the defences of the Asura, Vala, is compared. There is another version of this legend (in the Nitimanjari). The three brothers, Ekata, Dvita and Trita were travelling in a desert and being distressed by thirst, came to a well, from which, the youngest, Trita, drew water ond gave it to his brothers; in requital, they threw him into the well, in order to appropriate his property, and having covered the top with a cart-wheel, left him in the well; in this extremity he prayed to all the Gods to extricate him, and by their favour, he made his escape.

The hymn 105 of the First Book is devoted to Trita Antya. The verse 8 of this hymn is "Bricks torment me on every side, like rival wives. O Satakratu Indra, opperessing care devour me, thy praiser, as mice the threads. Know, O heaven and earth, of this state of mine." The Nirukta says, this hymn was revealed to Trita fallen into a well. With reference to this, there is an invocation, accompanied with a legend, a stanza, and a gatha. Trita was one most eminent in wisdom. Or else, the word may have been intended as a synonym of number, i.e. ektah, dvitah, tritah, thus the three were produced (Nir. IV. 6).

In Ṛv. I. 187. 1, we have : Verily, I will praise the food, the holder of great invigorating strength; with whose vigour Trita rent Vṛtra limb by limb." Here Indra is known as Trita who abides in three places (Nir. IX. 25).

Dayananda interprets Trita as three lines, the top one, the middle one and the transversal. He interprets paridhin as the circumference, the external circular line. He translates vala as cloud or a powerful enemy.

7. Tvastṛ, see notes on I. 13. 10; 32. 2.

9. Bṛhat, great; also Bṛhat Saman (Sayana).

10. Ahi, see note on I. 32. 1.

11. Maghavan, see note on I. 32. 13.

13. Pratimanam bhuvah, the counter-measure of the earth. The measure of earth (bhuh) and of extensive sky or interspace (Pṛthivi), —Daya. (Nigh.-prthivi as a synonym of antariksa, 1.3).

15. Bhṛstimata vadhena, with the killers that have angles (razor-edged sharp weapons); wise and highly practical policy (Daya.). According to the Aitareya Brahmana, Indra's thunderbolt has eight angles or blades (II. 1).

Hymn-53

1. Indra, resplendent God, see I.5.4

2. Durah, door, the source; asvasya durah, giver of the vigorous body; asva the pervader, the vigour; goh durah, nourisher; go, earth, speech; yavasya, anything superb; vasanah, of the treasure; inaspatih, (in-isvara, Nigh. II.22) Lord.

3. Saci' vah, wise.

5. Goagraya, with sharp intellect; Asvavatya, with brilliant vigour (प्रशस्त बलवेग युक्ता, Daya.); possessing vigour and momentum .

6. Dasa Sahasrani, ten thousand, innumerable.

8. Namuci, ever clinging voice, devoid of freedom (Daya.); in mythological literature, it was personified as a demon.

Karanjam, wicked thought, one who inflicts injury on righteous people; in mythology, name of a demon or asura.

9. Parnayam, perverted thought, one who steals the possession of others (पर्णानि परप्राप्तानि वस्तूनि याति प्राप्नोति तं चौरम् —Daya.)=pani or dasyu.

Atithigva, making way for reverential ones, (अतिथीन् गच्छति गमयति वा येन तस्य —Daya.). See I. 51. 6 also.

Vangrida, capricious instincts;(यो वङ्गून् वक्रान् विषादीन् पदार्थान् व्यवहारान् ददात्युपदिशति वा तस्य दुष्टस्य; that wicked one who poisons or gives crooked advices.—Daya.).

Ṛjisvan, earnest and simple thoughts. (One possessing straightforwardness, a gentleman,—Daya.). See I. 51. 5.

9. Susravas, widely reputed sage. Dvi-dasa; $2 \times 10=20$.

Sastim sahasra navatim nava $= 60 \times 1000 + 90 + 9 = 60{,}099$, innumerable.

10. Turva, the valorous (turvayanam, the one in whose chariots are the valorous people, capable of defeating enemies.—Daya.).

Kutsa, generous (also vajra or thunderbolt, Nigh. II. 20) See I. 51. 6 also.

Atithigva, reverential. See I. 51. 6 also.

Ayu, elders in age, य एति प्राप्नोति तम्, or one with life-experience.

Hymn-54

For verses 3 and 5, see Nir. VI. 18 and V. 16 respectively.

1. Maghavan, resplendent Lord, synonym of Indra, literally meaning, the possessor of plentiful wealth (प्रशस्तधनयुक्त, used as an epithet for king and teacher as well.—Daya.).

2. Sakra, another synonym of Indra, the mighty Lord (समर्थ —Daya.).

3. Sacivate, for the one possessing instinctive knowledge (प्रज्ञा) in plenty (Daya.; Nigh. III. 9).

4. Sambara, deluding senses, the one who shrouds righteousness or happiness (शं सुख वृणोति येन त मेघमिव शत्रुम्,—Daya.). Cloud or cloud-like enemy.

Mayinah, devilish tendencies, which delude.

6. Narvam, genius amongst men (नृषु साधुम् —Daya.).

Turvasam, glorious people (उत्तमं मनुष्यम्,—Daya.); the nearest one Nigh. II. 16; one who controls readily (तुर्वशः सद्योवशंकर,:—Daya.); it is a synonym of man (Nigh. II. 13).

Yadum, assiduous persons (प्रयतमानम्,—Daya.).

Turvitim, the killer or destroyer of evils.

Vayyam, those belonging to one fellowship; a rational being (ज्ञानवन्तं मनुष्यम्—Daya.).

10. Vṛtra, clouds, ignorance resembling clouds. See I. 3. 8; 32,5.

Hymn-55

1. Divah, the inter-space, or celestial region; the region of vital breath and mind; pṛthivi, the annamaya kosa; or exposed physical body. Indra, the soul, ruling over sense organs.

Hymn-56

For verse 3, see Nir. VI. 14.

1. Human body is the golden chariot and the sense organs are horses yoked to it; Indra is the self, the soul. Again, the sense organs are the sacrificers, and the sense enjoyments are the oblations. Atyah, horse (Nigh. I. 14).

2. Venah, loving; women (Sayana); also wisemen (Nigh. 3. 15).

Girim, mountain, also clouds (Daya.; also Nigh. I. 10).

3. Ayasah, with invincible power; lit. clothed in iron, with special knowledge (Daya.).

6. The dark powers of ignorance are Vṛtra who have been crushed with the solid determination.

Samaya pasya, with solid determination or with solid rock; worth sustaining, right in time (Daya.).

Pasya=with a stone or spear; Sama=whole or entire.

Hymn-57

Indra refers to the lower self, the soul.

1. Manhisthaya, to the most generous (Nigh. II. 20).

Yat parvate na samasita, lit. did not sleep on the mountain; it did not stop until it had performed its office; parvata according to Dayananda, is either a mountain or a cloud (Nigh. I. 10); na samasita, iva, न समाशीत, इव सम्यग्व्याप्नुयात्; न=इव=like or as.

Hymn-58

1. Rajo vyamame, made the firmament (Wilson); made the earth and other heavenly bodies (Daya.).

Havisa by the obtained body (Daya.).

2. Adma, food; fruit of an action (Daya.); straw and twigs (Sayana).

Atasa,—wood or timber (Sayana); the widespread sky or air (Daya.).

3. Purohitah, honoured, puraskṛtah (Sayana); पूर्वगृहीत, fore-most adorable (Daya.).

6. Divyaya janmane, for the sake of being born as blessed ones with prosperity.

7. Vaghatah, men with widom (Nigh. III. 15).

9. Maghavan, one possessing good deal of wealth (Daya.).

Hymn-59

1. Vaisvanara, belonging to all people, to all nations; also a synonym of fire, which is also common to all mankind; natural heat of stomach helpful in digestion. It is a synonym of God also who controls the entire creation (यो विश्वान् सर्वान् पदार्थान् नयति,—Daya.).

Sthuna, deep-planted column; धारक-स्तम्भ (Daya.).

2. Aryaya, उत्तमगुणस्वभावाय, or for the one possessing excellent qualities (Daya.): Wilson thinks that it applies either to Manu, as the institutor of the first sacrifice; or to the yajamana, the institutor of the present rite.

4. Bṛhati iva Sunave, as the most venerable mother to her son (Daya.).

Rodasi, heaven and earth. (See also III. 3. 11, उभा पितरा॰).

7. Purunithe, that which is attainable by many beings or many things (यत् पुरुभिः बहुभिः प्राणिभिः पदार्थैर्वा नीयते, तस्मिन्,—Daya.).

Satavaneya, the offerer of a hundred, the one who enjoys the hundred-fold world with infinite divisions (Daya.); the son of Satavani (Sayana).

Satinibhih—with hundred-fold, i.e., numberless characteristics of activity (Daya.).

Bharadvajesu—In the worth-knowing or worth-possessing substances or heavenly bodies (Daya.). See Nir. III. 17. Also in sacrifices which present food in the shape of nutritious oblations of clarified butter (भरणाद् भरद्वाज:).

Visvakṛstih—The creator of the entire universe (Daya.); lit. all-men; also of whom all men are of same nature (Sayana).

Hymn-60

1. Vahnim, carrier of objects (पदार्थानां वोढारम्,—Daya,); hence, also fire.

Bhṛgave ratim, to the son or friend of Bhṛgu;—ratim, दातारं, the donor, the action of giving (Daya.); bhṛgave, for digestion, भर्जनाय परिपाचनाय—(Daya.). (rati=friend, arati=enemy; also wealth; donation; see also II. 1. 16; I. 169. 4; VII. I. 25).

Dvijanmanam, offspring of two parents; the fire is the offspring of two pieces of wood in the process of attrition: द्वाभ्यां वायुकारणाभ्यां जन्म यस्य तं वह्निम्, i. e. obtained of two, i. e. one air and the other its own nature (Daya.).

3. Navyasi, the new creation.

4. Usik pavakah, the purifying fire: usik is the seeker of truth, (सत्यं कामयमान:—Daya.).

5. Gotamasah, they who praise to a great extent the Vedic verses; lovers of knowledge (Daya.). गौरिति स्तोतृनाम; गौ.=स्तोतृ, Nigh. III. 16.

Hymn-61

For verses 1, 7 and 12, see Nir. V. II, V. 4 and VI. 20.

1. Ṛcisamaya, see also X. 22. 2; Nir. VI. 23 as identical or equal to the hymn (rca sama), worth praises, Ṛcisah are the persons who offer praises (Daya.).

Brahmani, wealth or food (Nigh. II. 7; 10). Ratatama, very much worth-giving.

2. Angusam—the enemy in battle.

Hrda manasa manisa—in heart, in mind, in understanding.

4. Tasta-iva, like a carpenter (तनूकर्त्ता शिल्पी—Daya.).

5. Arkam juhva, the instrument of invocation, the organ of speech; जुहोति गृह्णाति ददाति वा यया—one by which one receives or gives—Daya.).

7. Musayat, with the intention of stealing (Daya.). Visnuh, sun (Daya.). Varaham, clouds (Daya.) (vara=boon, aha=day). Adrim, of the dimensions of a mountain, Nigh. IV. 2.

8. Deva-patnih, worthy of receiving protection from gods or learneds (Daya.). Gayatri and other metres of the Vedas are also called as the wives of gods. According to Sayana, the term gnah, preceding deva patnih, usually means females or women, whose nature is locomotive, गमनस्वभावः.

Ahi, clouds, ignorance, evil forces.

10. Vrtra, cloud, cloud-like shrouding enemies (Daya.).

11. Turvitaye, for one who accomplishes with readiness, (तुराणां शीघ्रकारिणां व्याप्तिस्तस्यै—Daya). According to Sayana, Turviti is the name of the rsi who had been immersed in water, and who was brought to dry land by Indra. Also see II. 13.12; IV. 19.6 (for the subduer of enemies), (तुर्वति=हिनस्ति, तुर्वी हिंसायाम्). See also turvanih (I. 130.9); fast-mover, fast-killer (I. 186.3; IV. 20.1); turvane (VI. 46.8); turvasam (I. 174.9; nice person, brave I. 54.6; the nearest relation VII. 19.8; Nigh. II .16). See turvitim (I. 54. 6).

14. Nodhah, the chief of an army; the leader of a group (यो नायकान् प्राप्तिकरान् धरति—Daya). Also I. 62. 13. Name of a rsi (Ait. Br. VI.48; hymns ascribed I. 58-64).

15. Etasam, horse (Nigh. I. 14)

Sauvasvye, son of Svasva; in the army equipped with excellent horses or mobile forces (Daya.). There is a legend which relates that a king named Svasva, or the lord of good (su) horses (asva), being desirous of a son worshipped surya, who himself was born as the son of the king; at a subsequent period, in some dispute between him and the rsi Etasa, Indra took part with the latter —Wilson.

16. Gotam, those who hold knowledge in high esteem (Daya.).

Hymn-62

1. Angirah, see I. 31. 1; 45. 3; 51. 2; vital breaths.

2. Angusyam soma—a chant fit to be sung aloud (perhaps rathantara saman); a chant full of divine knowledge (अङ्गूषाणां विज्ञानाना भावम्तम्,—Daya.).

3. Sarama, the inner instinct which guides through; the discriminating faculty (यया सरान् विद्याधर्मबोधान् मिमीते तथा (माता)—Daya.). Similar to this word is sarasvati. In mythology, sarama is the name of a bitch, who was asked by Indra to go in search of stolen cattle; she consented to do so only on condition that the milk of the cows should be given to her young ones, which Indra promised. It also means a learned woman; a lady-physician. Also या सरति सा सरला नीतिः (a simple wholesome policy—IV. 16. 8). See also sarameya VII. 55. 2. Saranam nirmatah or the house-holder VII. 55. 2. Also sarameyau, the two sons of Sarama, Indra's mythical two dogs; lit. descendent of Sarama; the two dogs of Yama (X. 14. 10); perhaps Sarameya refers to the departed soul (VII. 55. 2).

Bṛhaspati, the protector or master of the great ones, also a synonym of Indra—(Wilson). (बृहता पतिः पालयिता सभाद्यध्यक्ष., the head of a council—Daya.).

4. Navagvaih, obtained or attainded by nine (navanita-gatibhih, —Daya.).

Dasagvaih, the rays traversing through the ten directions. (Four cardinal directions, four corner directions, nadir and zenith).

7. Ayasyah, the one accomplishing without effort (यसु प्रयत्ने from yasa, effort) or the one which is not attainable by effort (प्रयत्नासाध्यः स्वाभाविकः,—Daya., i.e. natural); perhaps opposite to susadhya, easily to be reached or accomplished.

10. Avanih, fingers; earth Daya.). Wilson refers to fingers, employed in the performance of what is at present termed mudra; certain intertwinings and gesticulations accompanying prayer.

Janayo na, like the wives; like husbands (Daya.).

Janayo na patnih, like the husbands protecting their wives (Daya.); but Wilson takes janayo no patnih svasarah, like the wives of gods, the protecting sisters.

13. Gotamah, worth immense laudations and praises (गच्छतीति गोः स्तोता सोऽतिशयित मः—Daya.).

Nodhah, those who praise, (स्तोता, —Daya.); nodha from नुवो धुट् च, Unadi. IV. 223; नोधा ऋषिर्भवति, नवन दधाति, (Nir. IV. 16) i.e. Nodha is a ṛsi, since he composes or comprehends a new hymn. (Ṛv. I. 124.6).

Hymn-63

1. Susmaih, by thy energies; बलादिभिः (by strengths and forces, —Daya.).

2. Aviharyata·kratoḥ, the one free from evil desires, actions or intentions, accomplisher of undesired acts (also अप्रेप्सित कर्मन्—Sayana; one who does actions undesired by his foes). हर्यति प्रेप्साकर्मा, the root √har, हृ, means to desire to obtain, Nir. VII. 17. (See Ṛv. IV. 58.8 for haryati).

3. Ṛbhuksah, great in desires and accomplishments, ऋभुक्षा=महत् Nigh. III. 3; i.e. it is one of the synonym of great. (Sayana interprets as the chief of the ṛbhus).

4. For Kutsa and Susna, see I. 33.14 and I. 51.6.

4. Dasyun, the plunderers of others' belongings; the one possessing evil desires, inflicting injuries on others, thinking ill of others, the non-believer or atheist (Daya. on I. 51.8); the oppressor, the daring thief (Daya. II. 15.9; IV. 28.3; V. 4.6). दस्यति नाशयति परपदार्थानिति दस्युः, तस्करो वा Unadi III. 20; दस्युर्दस्यतेः, क्षयार्थात्, उपदस्यन्त्यस्मिन्रसाः, उपदासयति कर्माणि,—Nir. VII. 23—i.e. dasyu is derived from √दस्, meaning to lay waste ; in him the juices are wasted, or he causes works to be laid waste. Dasyus have been opposing Kutsa, the reciter of hymns for Kutsa, see Nir. III. 11 on I. 106.6; it is one of the eighteen synonyms of vajra; it is derived from √कृत्, to cut; it is also the name of a seer. A seer is a composer of hymns, says Aupamanyava; it has the meaning to kill only; his friend Indra slew draught.

5. Arisanyan, unwilling to harm. Indra, the supreme Self, is in himself indifferent to those who are opposed to him, and if he undertakes their destruction, it is not on his own behalf, but in defence of his friends and worshippers (Wilson).

7. Purukutsaya, बहुभिरवक्षिप्ताय,—Daya; for immense good; for the support of a large number of people; for a large number of war-weapons (बहुशस्त्राय, राजपुरुषाय).

Sudase, in the region, where people give alms with generosity.

Amhoh, (अंहोः), of the kingdom worth having (प्राप्तस्य प्राप्तव्यस्य वा राज्यस्य —Daya.); also the evil-doers (II.26.4).

Hymn-64

2. Rudrasya maryah, men of or sons of Rudra (Perhaps it refers to maruts): rudra is the vital breath system (समष्टि प्राणस्य—Daya; maryah, mortals, —Daya.). (See रुद्रस्य सूनुम्, I. 64. 12).

Asurah, devoid of enlightenment (Daya.).

Satvanah, of such living beings as possessing might and valour. In mythology, satvanah represents the troops of demons attendant on Paramesvara or Siva.

8. Pṛsatibhhih, पृषतीभिः with the spotted deer, which are the steeds of the Maruts; characterized with speed; speedy means of communication and transport (स्वगमनागमनवेगादि गुणैः —Daya.).

9. Amatih, it is one of the synonyms of rupa or appearance. (Nigh. III. 7).

Marutah, engineers and technicians शिल्प विद्याविद ऋत्विजः —(Daya.).

11. Apathyah na, on the best possible path (पथि भवः पथ्यः, सर्वतः पथ्य आपथ्य. —Daya.)

Sayana translates it as "like a chariot which drives over and crushes sticks and straws on the way. Wilson translates it as "as elephants", literally, "like that which is produced or occurs on the road."

12. Ṛjisinam, the one which has an ample capacity to hold or procure (प्रशस्तमुपार्जन विद्यते यस्मिन्तम् —Daya.); a vessel for the Soma juice also.

Hymn-65

The hymn consists of five stanzas or verses; but there is another type of reckoning also, in which the metre is dvipada virat, that is, a stanza of two lines not of four; and in such a case, the stanzas would be taken as ten instead of five.

1. Guha, meaning a cave or cavity. Guha catantam means pervading to the inner-most core or cavity. According to some it applies to the depths of waters, or to the hollow of the asvattha tree, in both of which Agni hid himself for a season.

Namah, a synonym of anna, edible grain (Nigh. II. 20); it also means respects and regards (satkaram).

2. Ṛatasya deva anuvrate etc. —The gods followed the traces of the fugitive; the search spread everywhere and the earth became like heaven (Wilson). The parable continues, "A fish revealed to the gods where agni had hidden"; according to the Taittiriyas. "he concealing himself, entered into the waters; the gods wished for a messenger to him; a fish discovered him". This and other such verses refer to the spiritual fire which lies hidden innermost in our cavity.

4. Roma pṛthivyah—Hairs on the earth. The entire vegetation —fruits, flowers, grasses and shrubs are known as hairs on the earth.

5. Somah na vedah—Creator like Soma. Just as Soma creates or causes useful plants to grow, so agni creates or extracts from them their nutritive faculty (Wilson). Perhaps, the agni alluded here is the fire of digestion, the heat of the stomach.

Hymn-66

For verses 7, 8 and 9 see Nir. X. 21.

1 Takva na bhurnih—Like a rider-bearing steed (Wilson); like a swift-bird (Griffith); like a hoarding-thief (Daya.); takva, a thief (Nigh. III. 24).

3. Samatsu, battles (Nigh. II. 17).

Duroka-socih, of unattainable or farthest brightness;

Kratur na nityah, like a vigilant sacrificer; Kratuh, intellect or action (प्रज्ञा कर्म वा— Daya.).

As the performer of a sacrifice takes care that nothing vitiates the rite, so Agni defends it from the interruption by Raksasas.

4. Yamo ha jato, yamo janitvam—yamah, the regulator of law (नियन्ता, II. 5. 1, also —Daya.), one who gives the desired object to the worshippers (यच्छति ददाति कर्मान् स्तोतृभ्यः, —Sayana), and thus a synonym of Agni. Indra and Agni are said to be born together, and hence are twins (Yaska, on X. 10); yama means a twin also. Yama is a synonym of air (I. 35. 6); of fire or Agni (SBr. VII. 2. 1. 10); Agni is one of the twins (yama), from simultaneous birth of Indra and Agni, according to Yaska. Being the supreme authority, Yama is a supreme commander of army (Daya. 1. 66. 4). Yama is so called because he governs (√यम्; Nir. X. 19 on X. 14.1).

Jata (जात) is said to imply all existing things, all manifested ones; janitva, (जनित्वा) those that will exist; the cause of birth etc. (जन्मादिकारणम् —Daya.). Both jata and janitva are identical with Agni as Yama, from the dependence of all existence, past, present or future, upon worship with fire (Wilson).

Jarah kaninam, जारः कनीनाम्, lover of maidens, because they cease to be maidens when the offering to fire is completed in the marriage ceremony.

Dayananda translates jarah as the sun, destroyer (हन्ता सूर्यः) of darkness or night. Kaninam, nights behaving as maidens, कन्येव वर्तमानानां रात्रीणाम् (Daya.).

Patih janinam, husband of wives; the protector of people (पालयिता जनानां प्रजानाम्, Daya.).

This stanza (I. 66.4) has been commented upon by the Nirukta (X. 21). Like a spear hurled, it inspires awe as the archer's arrow of bright appearance. Yama, indeed, is what is born, Yama, what shall be born; he is the maiden's lover, the matron's Lord.

Maiden's lover, i.e., one who causes maidens to be loved. Matron's Lord, i.e. one who causes matrons to be protected. Matrons have Agni as their chief deity, on account of their association with sacrifice.

5. Caratha, (चराथा), the movable; vasatya, (वसत्या), the stationary, the non-movable. The two words have been translated as animal and vegetable offerings by Sayana, which is wrong. Griffith translates : To him lead all your ways; may we attain the kindled God as cows their home at eve.

Dayananda associates both the terms with the mother earth, who is moving (caratha), and yet is an abode of rest for all people (vasatya).

Hymn-67

1. Havyavat, the bearer of oblations; the accepter and donor of gifts (यो ग्राह्य दातव्यान् पदार्थान् वहति प्रापयति मः —Daya.).

In the terminology of rituals, three types of agnis or fires are recognised: (i) havya-vaha or havyavahana, that which conveys offerings to the gods; (ii) Kavyavaha, or kavya-vahana. that which conveys them to the Pitṛs or Manes, and (iii) saharaksas, that which receives those offered to the raksasas, (Wilson). For kavya-vahana, कव्यवाहन, see Yv. XIX. 65 and 66; one who receives excellent contributions from learned people. (Daya.).

2. Guha, the cavity, the seat of consciousness or intellect (गुहायां मर्वविद्यासंयुक्तायां बुद्धन्); (गुहा गूहते Nir. XIII.9 or 1.164.45)

3. Guha Guham Gah— Here Guha may mean any arid or rugged tract unfit for pasture, a place unfit for grazing. and which has been scorched up by Agni with impunity. Accordingly, the three words "guha guham gah" represent the attainment of the secret divine knowledge hidden or stored in the innermost cavity of human consciousness.

4. Dame, the peace-abiding home or dwelling (उपशमे गृहीते गृहे वा —Daya.). Wilson adds the following note to this verse : In building a house, worship is first offered to the edifice. and it is then put to use (गृहप्रवेश). So Agni is to be first adored, and then employed in any sacrificial rites.

Hymn-68

1. Sthatuh-caratham—Things movable and immovable, sthavara and jangama groups. स्थावरममहम् ज गममसमहम् (Daya.).

4. Manorapatye, mankind; children of rational beings विज्ञानवतो मनुष्यस्य सन्ताने (Daya.).

Amurah=अमूढा:, i.e. wise, devoid of ignorance or folly (Nir. VI. 8 in reference to X.4.4).

Hymn-69

Devanam Pita putrah san—Dayananda translates putrah as the student or disciple, whilst pita is the teacher. The son becomes the father of the gods after having received the highest education. According to tradition, Agni, as the bearer of oblations, may be said to give paternal support to the gods, whilst he is their son as the presenter to them of sacrificial offerings. Griffith translates as "Father of Gods and yet their son wast thou."

Putrah, पुत्रः पुरु त्रायते । निपरणाद् वा । पुन्नरकं ततस्त्रायते इति वा; i.e. son is so called since either he very much protects by offering or put being the name of the hell, he the son, saves one from that. (Nir. II. 11).

Uso na jarah, like the lover of the dawn. The sun is the consumer (वयो हन्ता) of the age of dawn (Daya.).

2. Pitunam, of the cereals or grains (pitu is synonymous with anna, Nigh. II. 7 —Daya.).

3. Durone, in the house (Daya. ; Nigh. III. 4); in the sacrificial chamber (Wilson).

Ranvah, रमणीयः (Daya.) or रमयिता स्तुत्यो वा भवति (Sayana); becomes worth enjoying, pleasant, worth adoration.

Compare with V. 3.1—त्वमग्ने वरुणो जायसे त्व मित्रो भवसि, thou art born as Varuna; thou becomest Mitra.

4. Samanairnṛbhih, with equal leaders or men; with men equal in learning and other acquisitions. (Daya.); with Maruts (Wilson).

5. Uso na jarah, (as in verse 1), the extinguisher of the dawn; jarah, (जारः), from जरयितृ, the causer of decay (Sayana); दुःखहन्ता सविता, the reliever of the dawn (Daya.).

Hymn-70

2. Garbhah vananam—He is the garbha [स्तोतव्यः, (or adorable), अन्तस्थः (the embryo) वा] or the internal germ of heat and life, in the waters etc., all which depend for existence upon natural or artificial warmth. —Wilson.

3. Ksapavat—The one having or possessing the extensive nights, particularly bright and illuminating (क्षपा: प्रशस्ता रात्रयो विद्यन्ते यस्मिन् यस्य वा स: —Daya.); Lord of Nights. We have such texts also. आग्नेयी वै रात्रि: (Tai Br. II. 1.2.7), indicating that night is characterised by Agni (also अग्निर्ज्योतिर्ज्योतिरग्नि: स्वाहा, Yv. III. 6 and Tai Ar. IV. 10.5).

Hymn-71

Ketuh, the indicator, the causer of day; perhaps the Sun, enlightenment (प्रज्ञानम् —Daya.); usrah, rays.

3. Aryah, the possessor of wealth; the vaisya (Daya.), or the person who creates and distributes wealth.

The stanzas 2 and 3 are corroborative of the share borne by Angirasas in the organization, if not in the origination, of fire by attrition, and later on in the fire-rituals.

4. Matarisvan, a synonym for air or wind which, as if, breathes in the interspace (यो मातर्यन्तरिक्षे श्वसिति स वायु: —Daya.). Here, it may mean the principal vital air, vyana (मुख्य प्राण), divided (विभृत) into five airs, so denominated. Sayana quotes a dialogue in this connection ; To them said the arista breath, "Be not astonished, for I having made myself five fold, and having arrested the arrow, sustain (life)." (Prasna Up. II.3). The five breathes are : Prana, Apana, Vyana, Samana and Udana.

Jenyah—from √जन्, to be born; or from √जि, जये to conquer, and hence any agent that leads to victory (विजयहेतु: or जयति येन तम्—Daya.). We have in the Aitareya Brahmana (VI. 4) : the gods having awoke Agni, and placed him before them at the morning sacrifice, repulsed, with him in their van, the asuras and raksasas at the morning rite.

Dutyam, the function of an ambassador or messenger.

7. Sravatah sapta-yahvih, the seven great rivers flowing into an ocean (see I. 32.12).

Yahvih, the movements of blood, electricity etc. (Daya); it means a great woman (III. 1. 4, —Daya); yah ah is a synonym of mahat, great, Nigh. III. 3. It thus represents the great Lord too, I. 36. See also Nir. VIII. 8 : the word yahva is a synonym of great, i.e. gone (√ya, √ या) and invoked (hu, हु).

10. Pura tasya abhisasteradhihi—May you not spoil the affectionate and cordial relations of ours, handed down to us traditionally by our forefathers, and may you think of me before that source of destruction prevails.

Hymn-72

1. Vedhasah, the epithet is for the supreme creator, and is here associated with sasvatah, the eternal.

2. Vatsam, abiding affectionately in pleasures like children, the divine speech of the four Vedas (Daya.). वत्सं परि षन्तं (=परि सन्तम्) dear to us as a son (Wilson).

Amurah, अमूरा :=unbewildered=अमूढा: .

3. Tisrah saradah—for three years, for three autumns. शरद := शरद् ऋत्वन्तान् संवत्सरान्.

Sucayah, the pure (पवित्रम्). Sayana supplies maruts, for whom, it is said, seven platters are placed at the agni cayana ceremony, and they are severally invoked by appellations ईदृश्, अन्यादृश्, एतादृश्, प्रतिदृश्, मित:, सम्मित: and सभरा: (such like, other like, thus like, similar, measured, commensurate, harmonious). (Tait. S. IV. 6.5.5). In consequence of this participation with Agni of sacrificial offerings they exchanged their perishable for immortal bodies and obtained heaven. The Maruts are, therefore, like the ṛbhus, deified mortals (Wilson and Sayana).

4. Rudriya, dedicated to Rudra (one who punishes evil persons or enemies).

There is an allusion to the hiding of Agni. Rudra is Agni; the hymns of the gods are addressed to Agni, and are, therefore, termed as Rudriya A legend in the Taittiriya sakha relates that during a battle between the gods and asuras, Agni carried off the wealth which the former had concealed; detecting the theft, the gods pursued the thief, and forcibly recovered their treasure; Agni wept (अरोदीत्) at the loss, and was thence called Rudra. (Tait. S. I. 5. 1. 1).

5. Namasyam, worthy of reverential adoration; God, teachers and elders (Daya.).

Abhijnu Namasyam namasyan, अभिज्ञु नमस्यं नमस्यन्, offering adoration kneeling upon their knees (अभितो जानुनी यस्य तम्,—Daya.). Compare namasyam with Muslim Namaz, offered whilst kneeling upon knees.

6. Guhyani pada(ni), secret or mysterious steps. According to the ritualists, this refers to the Vedic ceremonies, arranged in three classes (each consisting of seven) i.e. (i) the paka yajnas, those in which food of some kind is offered, as in the Aupasana, Homa, Vaisvadeva, etc.; (ii) the havir yajnas, those in which clarified butter is presented, as at the agnyadheya, darsa-purna masa, and others; (iii) and the soma-yajnas, the principal part of which is the libation of the soma juice and other medicinal herbs, as at the Agnistoma etc. All these are comprised in Agni, because they cannot be celebrated without fire. (Wilson).

8. Sarama, the divine intellect (या सरान् बोधान् मिमीते सा —Daya.). One may again refer to the mystic parable; the sun, nourished by burnt offerings, is enabled to send down the rain, which supplies the rivers; the Angirasas recovered their cattle when carried off by vala, through the knowledge obtained by holy sacrifices; and Indra sent sarama on the earth, when propitiated by oblations with fire. Hence Agni may be considered as prime mover in the incidents. (Wilson).

10. Aksi, the two eyes, the internal and external eye; the eye of vision and the eye of inspiration अश्नुवते व्याप्नुवन्ति याभ्यां बाह्याभ्यन्तरविद्यायुक्ताभ्यान् ते—Daya.).

Hymn-73

2. Vrjanani, forces (synonym of bala, Nigh. II. 9).

Didhisayyah—sustainer (धारक:, पोषक:).

5. Samithesu, in battles or wars (synonym of संग्राम, Nigh. II. 17).

8. Chayeva, like a shade. As any thing affording shade, keeps off heat of the sun, so Agni guards the world against affliction.

Hymn-74

3. Here Agni is the slayer of Vrtra, and as such he is identified with Indra —the two names of one and the same Supreme.

Hymn-76

1. Kena va te manasa dasema—With what intent may we offer thee ? It is not possible to offer anything to the Supreme in return to His immense blessings showered on us.

2. Ni sida, sit down; always bestow on us your enlightenment (नित्यं आस्व:, —Daya.).

3. Somapatim—To the Lord of blessings and grandeur (ऐश्वर्याणां स्वामिनम्, —Daya.); an appellative of Indra (not very usual).

Haribhyam, the two driving forces (or steeds)—धारणाकर्षणाभ्याम् (centripetal and centrifugal).

Hymn-77

3. Manasa, with the mind; (विज्ञानेन, —Daya.). Sayana explains it as namasa, with reverence asserting that the letters n and m are transposed (मकार-नकारयो: स्थानविपर्यय:).

4. Tana, wealth (Nigh. II. 10).

Hymn-78

1. Gotamah, the learned and wise in plural. In verse 2, the text is with गोतम: in singular. Sayana uses the text in plural (गोतमा:) in the sense of singular on account of reverence (used honorifically) towards the great seer. It is not a proper name, as indicated by Dayananda. Gotamah=अतिशयेन स्तोतार: —Daya. (They who offer immense prayers).

Hymn-79

1. Agni, here a manifestation of lightning, takes part in the production of rain by piercing the clouds. The dawn is not concerned in the operation; but this is said, not to depreciate the excellence of Usas, but to enhance that of Agni (Wilson).

Satyah, (plural, fem.), sincere in thoughts, words and deeds.

3. Nayan ṛtasya—conducts through the most direct ways.

Dayananda translates the first ṛtasya as "of water" (उदकस्य), and the second one as "सत्यस्य" (of true nature, of direct).

Through direct ways, one may take as drinking, washing, bathing and the like.

5. Purvanika, the one possessing many armies (Daya.). With many flames also (puru=many; anika=face or mouth).

7. Gayatrasya, of Gayatri-pragatha; or of pleasing treatment or behaviour (गायत्री प्रगाथस्य छन्दस आनन्दकरस्य व्यवहारस्य वा, —Daya.).

12. Sahasraksah, with a visual capacity of thousands of eyes (Daya.); having countless flames (Sayana), applied to Agni.

Hymn-80

For the verse 16 see Nir. XII. 34.

The burthen of the hymn is : arcan nu svarajyam, अर्चन्नु स्वराज्यम् —manifesting thine own sovereignty (Wilson); lauding thine own imperial sway (Griffith); सत्कुर्वन् आनुकूल्ये स्वस्य राज्यम् (Daya.); arcana means worship, adoration and respect. पूजयन् स्वस्य स्वामित्वं प्रकटयन् (Sayana).

3. Nṛmnam, wealth (synonym of dhana, Nigh. II. 10).

7. Mayinam mṛgam, one who covets to enjoy like a deceptive deer.

Mṛgah, (animal) is derived from √mrj, √मृज्, meaning to go (Nir. I. 20).

10. Paunsyam, masculine attitude, effort; a synonym of strength (Nigh. II. 9).

Vṛtra, cloud, ignorance, nescience.

12. Ayasah, iron weapons; vajra, thunderbolt; adamantine power of justice.

Abhyenam vajra ayasah, many-edged iron thunderbolt.

14. Tvastṛ, sculptor (छेत्ता, —Daya.); one who inflicts injury upon enemies.

16. Atharva, one free from the vices of violence etc. (हिंसादिदोष-रहितः, —Daya.).

Manuh, the wise (विज्ञानवान् —Daya.).

Dadhyan, the attainer of noble qualities (दधति यैस्ते दधत् सद्गुणास्तानञ्चति प्रापयति वा सः —Daya.).

In mythology, Manu is the progenitor of all man-kind; Dadhyanc is the same as dadhici, a well-known ṛsi, the son of Atharvan.

Hymn-81

1. Madaya savase vavṛdhe, augmented in strength and satisfaction. On this Sayana says: "a deity acquiring vigour by praise increases", that is, becomes more powerful. Dayananda translates Indra as "the head of an army". He increases (he is encouraged) for the good of his people (स्वस्य भृत्यानां हर्षकरणाय,—madaya) and for strength (savase). "Increases" is merely a literal rendering of "vardhate".

2. Dabhrasya, of the small (synonym of hrasvasya, Nigh. III.2).

3. Kam hanah kam vasan, destroy one (enemy) and enrich another (a friend)—Daya. Sayana and Wilson quote a legend in this connection. Gotama, the son of Rahugana, was the purohita of the Kuru and Sṛnjaya princes, and in an engagement with other kings, propitiated Indra by this hymn, who in consequence, gave the victory to the former. Sayana explains kam, whom, by kancit, anyone, some one; i. e., Indra gives the victory to whomsoever he is pleased with.

Hari (dual), horses of a chariot (Daya.).

4. Kratva, by intellect or action (Daya.); ṛsvah, the well-trained head of an army (Daya.).

Vajramayasam, the iron thunderbolt, adamantine determination.

5. Rajah, tiny small particles, particles in suspension; group of people (Daya.).

6. Marta-bhojanam, people's food, sustenance of people (Daya.).

9. Vedah, intellectual prosperity, treasure of wisdom; also the one which imparts pleasure and prosperity (Daya.); (विन्दन्ति सुखानि येन and विज्ञानघनम्).

Hymn-82

1. Ma-atatha-iva, be not different; (be) not, as it were, non-such; i. e. according to Sayana, be not the contrary of that propitious divinity which thou has't always been to us.

The burthen of the hymn is: "yojanvindra te hari", therefore, Indra quickly yoke thy horses. (Wilson.); "Now Indra, yoke thy two Bay Steeds" (Griffith); also a request to the army chief to yoke horses to war chariot (Daya.).

4. Patram Hariyojanam, a place or patera filled with hariyojanam; the appellation of a mixture of fried barley, or other grain and Soma juice; well-yoked horses.

5. Daksinah. right-hand; savyah, left.

6. Gabhastyoh, reins of a horse in both hands (हस्तयोः —Daya.).

Hymn-83

1. Vicetasah apah. unconscious rivers; the sources of excellent knowledge (विशिष्ट ज्ञान हेतुभूत, Sayana); apah, waters —Daya.

2. Rajah, the primary fundamental particles (सूक्ष्मं सर्वलोककारणं परमाण्वादिकम्,—Daya.).

Avah-pasyanti, they look down; Sayana adds devah to it;—the gods, who look down, it is said, upon the sacrificial ladle, hotriyam, well pleased to behold it filled with the intended libation. The text again, has only "as diffused light" (यथा रजः); the comment adds, "descends on earth". In the next phrase, we have, "the gods lead that which is pleased by the libation, and wished for them, either by progressive movements, or in an eastern direction (prachair, प्राचैः) as bridegrooms delight". What is so led, and whither? The ladle, camasa, the altar, vedi, as well as the bride or maiden, kanyaka, are filled up by the comment (Wilson). This refers to the brevity and obscurity of the entire hymn.

4. Samya, by peaceful means; sami is synonymous with karma (motion).

5. Ajani, was born; Sayana further adds: "the sun appeared, in order to light the way to the cave, where the cows were hidden."

Ajat, holds and then revolves (Daya.).

Usana-kavyah, brilliant or favoured son of the poets.

Pathah, paths, for the rising sun to travel.

In mythology, Usana Kavya is the name of a celebrated ancient ṛsi. The verse is regarded as obscure. Ludwig renders it "seek we to win by sacrifice the immortality which has sprung from yama". Yama here represents the rising sun.

Dayananda translates yama as the supreme God, the prime ordainer.

6. Svapatyaya=su+apatyaya, for the very affectionate progeny (Daya.).

Grava, clouds (Nigh. I.10); also stone for expressing Soma juices.

Barhih, enlightenment (Daya.); holy grass in a ceremony (Sayana); cushion grass; grass-mat; synonym of water, Nigh. I. 12; Dayananda translates as water; I. 116.1; V. 56.5; also interspace (antariksha, Yv, II.22—Daya.).

The words derived from barhih are barhisadam यो बर्हिष्याकाशे सीदति तं, यज्ञम्, Yv. XIX.32—Daya; यो बर्हिरन्तरिक्षे सीदति तम्, योगबलम् Yv. VII.12; barhisadah, the members of a venerable assembly (ये बर्हिष्युत्तमायां सभायां सीदन्ति ते, पित्रादयः—Daya. Yv XIX.55); learned people.

Barhisi, बृंहन्ते वर्धयन्ते येन तत् बर्हिर्ज्ञानं प्राप्तं कर्मकाण्डं वा तस्मिन् —Daya. on Yv. II.18, i.e. in the place of holy acts, wherein knowledge may be acquired; any good behaviour or action, —Daya. on I.86.4; in technology and industry, Daya. on I.109.5.

Barhistham, learned people participating in sacred acts (बर्हिषि यज्ञे तिष्ठतीति तं, विद्वांसं जनम्—Daya. on III.13.1.)

Hymn-84

For verses 7, 8 and 15 see Nir. IV. 17; V. 17 and IV. 25 respectively.

7, 8. Anga, vocative, O dear, O friend (Daya.).

Ho ! (Wilson). Anga is also "quick", Nir. V. 17—The anga is a synonym of quick (ksipra nama); it is gone as soon as it is calculated. It is usually an interjection of calling : Ohe ! (Rosen) ; Oh viens (M. Langlois).

8. Ksumpam-iva, coiled up snake, यथा सर्पः फणम् - Daya., or one sleeping in a ring, which is, therefore, killed without difficulty.

10. Vasviranu svarajym, (dwelling aftcr, or according to his own dominion): expectant of his sovereignty (Wilson).—This is a burthen of three verses 10-12: Griffith renders this as "good in their own supremacy". आनुकूल्ये स्वकीयराष्ट्रे (Daya.); Dayananda translates vasvih as related to earth etc.

13. Dadhicah— ये दधीन् वाय्वादीनञ्चन्ति तान् i.e. is one who procures the sustaining elements like air etc. — Daya.

Asthabhih, non-stationary, ever-moving rays etc. (Daya.).

It is surprising to see that the above two words have given origin to the mythological parable. Dadhyanc, also named as Dadhica and Dadhici is a well-known sage, whose bones were utilized for the formation of a thunderbolt (vajra), used by Indra to kill the enemy. Sayana gives another version of the legend. Whilst Dadhyanc the son of Atharvan lived, the Asuras were intimidated and tranquilized by his appearance, but when he had gone to svarga, they overspread the whole earth. Indra inquiring what had become of him, and whether nothing of him had been left behind, was told, that the horse's head with which he had at one time taught the madhuvidya to the Asvins, was somewhere in existence, but no one knew where. Search was made for it, and it was found in the lake Saryanavat on the skirts of Kuruksetra; and with bones of the skull, Indra slew the Asuras or, as otherwise explained, foiled the nine times ninety, or 810 strategems or devices of the Asuras or Vṛtras.

Navatinava, or 90 × 9 = 810—Sayana accounts for the number by saying, that, in the beginning, the asuri maya, or demonic illusion was practised in the three worlds for three periods in each,—past, present and future, whence it was ninefold; each being exerted with three saktis or energies, made the number 27; each of these again being modified by the three gunas (sat, rajas, and tamas) they become 81; and the scene of their display extending to each of the ten regions of space, the total reaches 81 × 10 = 810 = 90 × 9. This is purely an invention without any rationality in the legend. Dayananda reads as nava-navatih meaning 99 (i.e. 90+9).

15. Tvastuh, of the sun (as one of the names of the sun); of the sculptor (Daya—मूर्त्तद्रव्यछेदकस्य).

Apicyam, the (solar rays) found—This stanza has been discussed in the Nirukta (IV. 25). Indeed in this place, it is said, they thought of the ray separated from the sun; here in the house of the moon (also Av. XX.41.3, Sv. I.147; 2.265). In this place indeed the rays of the sun, together of their own accord, thought of the separated, i.e. disunited, removed, disconnected, or concealed (ray); there in the house of the moon.

This indirectly explains the fact that the moon shines only through the reflected light of the sun; so it is said, "the rays of the sun are reflected back in the bright watery orb of the moon," and again, "the solar radiance, concealed by the night, enters into the moon, and thus dispels darkness by night as well as by day."

According to the Nirukta II. 6, it is one ray of the sun (that named susumna) which lights up the moon, and it is with respect to that, that its light is derived from the sun. (See Yv. XVIII.40; S Br. IX 4.1.9)—सुषुम्णः सूर्यरश्मिश्चन्द्रमा गंधर्वः.

16. Kah, who, and Prajapati both; gah, horses (steeds); also (रश्मिः —Daya.); also the Veda. With Prajapati (ka) and the Veda (gah), Wilson renders it as: "Prajapati combines today with the burthen of the sacrifice the sacred words (the Vaidika words) that are affective, brilliant, essential, emitted from the mouth, animating the heart, and productive of happiness : the worshipper who fulfilled the object of such prayers, obtains life."

18. Ṛtubhir-dhruvebhih, according to the constant seasons. Various interpretations of the word ṛtu have been proposed : season; ṛtus as divinities presiding over sacrifices; ṛtus as the chief sacrifices, prayajah; ऋतवो वै प्रयाजः (Ts. I.6.11.5). Dayananda renders ṛtu as seasons like spring etc.

20. Utayah, actions like protection etc. (Daya.); also benefits, assistances. It has also been proposed to read utayah, shakers or agitators (कम्पयितारः) ; i.e. the cloud bearing winds or the Maruts.

Hymn-85

1. Saptayah, horses (Nigh. I. 14).

Rudrasya, of the Rudra, the breathing complex : also the brave (महावीर, —Daya.).

2. Uksitasah, wetted, drenched with rains (Daya.).

3. Gomatarah, sons of the earth, brave sons, whose mother is the earth (Daya.), or the cow.

Anuriyate ghrtam, the waters follow their path ; i.e. the rains follow the wind.

5. Arusasya, of the horse (arusah is a synonym of asva, Nigh. I.14) — Daya.; also the radiant; as an epithet of the sun or the lightning, either of them being the source of rains.

9. Tvastr, artisan or sculptor, or the piercing sun (Daya.).

Vanam, arrow etc; lute (Sayana); a vina with hundred strings. Dhamanta, blowing would apply better for a pipe or a wind instrument.

11. Utsa, synonym of kupa or well (Nigh. III. 23 जिह्मम् उत्सम्, crooked well.

11, 12. Gotama and his thirst — A legend is associated traditionally, relating to Gotama, a rsi, who being thirsty prayed to the Maruts for relief, who thereupon brought a well from a distance to his hermitage. The same exploit is associated to the Asvins also (I.17.1).

Marut, the mortal, and hence men. (Daya.).

Trsnaje gotamaya, for a thirsty man of learning and wisdom, (Daya.).

Hymn-86

2. Yajnaih va, with or (without) sacrifices (Sayana, Wilson); with one's own or (others') sacrifices (noble duties of teaching etc.) —Daya.

3. Ataksat, have sharpened; have made very fine; possessed with sharpened or keen intellect (Daya.).

5. Isah, anything for attaining a target (इष्टसाधका:) ; rays (Daya.).

9. Raksah, an evil person (दुष्टकर्मकारी मनुष्य:) —Daya.

10. Atrinam, the spoiler of an immense pleasure (Daya.); devouring (अत्तारं राक्षसादिकम्, Sayana.)

Hymn-87

For the verse 6 see Nir. IV. 16.

2. Kosah, clouds (Synonym of मेघ, Nigh. I. 10).

3. Ajmasu, in battles or wars (synonym of संग्राम Nigh. II.17).

4. Ṛnayava, liberators from debt; the one who pays for others' debts (य ऋणं याति प्राप्नोति स: —Daya.); that is by making their worshippers wealthy (Wilson).

Hymn-88

For verses 1 and 5 see Nir. XI. 14 and V. 4 respectively.

1. Maruts—Dayananda has interpreted the word in several senses ; (i) It is a pada-nama in the Nighantu (V. 5); (ii) in the Unadi, it means a mortal being, (III. 25.13) mankind or wind : म्रियते मारयति वा स मरुत् मनुष्यजाति: पवनो वा (I. 94); (iii) it is a synonym of wind, or Vayu, अनेन गमनागमनक्रिया प्रापका वायवो गृह्यन्ते (I. 15.2); (iv) the head of an assembly (I. 87.2); (v) a learned person (V. 58.6); (vi) an artisan (V. 63.5); (vii) very powerful being (I. 167.9); (viii) the cosmic wind (Yv. 18.17); (ix) vital breath complex (I. 171.4); (x) a man moving with fast speed, supported by the Jnan Yoga (I. 85.6).

Sayana bases several of his interpretations on the Nirukta of Yaska (XI. 13). Ma-rutah, of measured sound ($\sqrt{mi}+\sqrt{ru}$), or of measured brilliancy ($\sqrt{mi}+\sqrt{ruc}$), or they run very much (mahad+dru) (I. 88.1).

All the minor divinities that people the mid-air are said in the Vedas to be styled maruts, as in the text, "all females whose station is the middle heaven, the all pervading masculine vayu and all troops of divine gods are maruts."

4. Utsadhim—the tract of land which has water-wells in plenty (Daya.).

Gabhastyoh, in the arms.

Hymn-89

For verses 1, 9 and 10 see Nir. IV. 19; XII. 39; and I. 15 respectively.

3. Purvaya nivida, with an ancient text. Nivid is a synonym of vac, speech, or a text, (वेदवाण्याभिलक्षितान् निश्चितार्थान् विन्दति यया तया वाचा, —(Daya.).

Aryyamanam, the one who does justice (न्यायकारिणम्, —Daya.).

Bhagam, prosperous glorious (ऐश्वर्यवन्तम्, —Daya.).

Mitram, friend of all (सर्वसुहृदम्, —Daya.).

Aditim, the one who provides all types of enlightenment and knowledge (सर्वविद्याप्रकाशवन्तम्, —Daya.).

Daksam, one with skill and strength in matters of knowledge (Daya.).

Varunam, the one possessing venerable qualities, and keeps vicious under control (वरगुणयुक्तम् दुष्टानां बन्धकारिणम्).

Somam, in the process of creation, the one who extracts out essences, and also one possessed with tranquility सृष्टिक्रमेण सर्वपदार्थाभिषव-कर्त्तार, शान्तम्, (Daya.).

Asvina, pairs as one of student and teacher in the study of technology; or of fire and water, and so on (Daya.).

Sarasvati, the lady, well trained and educated; the divine speech, a learned lady. (Daya.).

According to Sayana, bhaga and mitra are the Adityas, and the later is specially the lord of day; as by text, मैत्रं वा अहर् (Tait. Br. I. 7.10.1), the day is dependent on mitra. Aditi is the mother of the gods (she is also akhandaniya or indivisible, and adina, self-dependent); daksa is called a prajapati, able (having the capacity) to make the world, or he is the creator (hiranya-garbha), diffused among breathing or living creatures, as breath or life, प्राणो वै दक्षः (Tait. S. II. V. 2.4), —Daksa verily is breath.

Asridh, from √sṛdh √सृध्, to dry up; undrying, unchanging; that is the class of Maruts.

Aryaman, is the sun (असौ वा आदित्योऽर्यमा) (Tait. S. II. 3.4.1), —he the sun is aryaman. Varuna is named from √वृ, to surround, encompassing the wicked with his bonds (पाशाः); he is also the lord of night; as by the text : varuni ratrih, वारुणी रात्रिः (Tait. Br. I. 10.1), —the night is dependent on Varuna. Soma is twofold : (a) the plant so called on earth, and the moon, a divinity in heaven. The Asvins are so termed either from having horses (अश्ववन्तौ), or from pervading all things, the one with moisture, the other with light, according to Yaska, who also states the question : who were they? which is thus answered: according to some, they are heaven and earth; to others, day and night; according to others, the sun and moon; and according to the traditionalists (aitihasikas), they were two virtuous princes (Nir, XIII. I). They are the foremost amongst the celestial deities (द्युस्थाना देवताः).

6. Tarksyah, worth knowing and attaining supreme self (तृक्षितुं वेदितुं योग्यस्तृक्ष्यः —Daya.). According to Sayana, the term is patronymic, implying son of Trıksa. Garuda. He is termed in the text as arista-nemi, —he who has unharmed, or irresistible (arista), weapons (nemi).

Dayananda interprets aristanemi as "अरिष्टानां दुःखानां नेमिर्वज्रवच्छेत्ता" (nemi is synonymous with vajra, Nigh. II. 20), that is the one who pierces pains like a thunderbolt.

10. Aditih, one free from birth and death, (Daya.); independent; indivisible. Here, according to some, the word stands for the earth, or the mother of gods (Sayana). According to Yaska, the hymn declares the might of Aditi—अदितेर्विभूतिमाचष्टे (Nir. IV. 23), or, as Sayana, says "Adıti is hymned as the same with the universe."

Panca-janah—The five organs of senses (Daya.) and soul also.

Also five classes of men (the four varnas and the fifth category of outcastes). (Brahmana, Ksattriya, Vaisya and Sudra, and rest of the people like nisada, who do not submit to this discipline.) The other five groups are : gods (deva), men (manusya), gandharva (including apsaras), serpents (naga) and manes (pitṛ). In the Nirukta, we have gandharva, pitṛ, deva, asura and raksas. (Nir. III. 8).

Hymn-90

For verse 1 see Nir. VI. 21.

1. Aryaman, one who stands for and imparts justice; the Lord of Justice (न्यायकारी—Daya.). (Aryaman is said to be the sun, in his function of separating day from night.)

Ṛjuniti, one with straight-forward policy or attitude.

Varunah, venerable; with excellent qualities of head and heart (श्रेष्ठगुणस्वभावः—Daya.).

Mitrah, friendly and generous to everyone (सर्वोपकारी—Daya.).

4. Pusa, sustainer (पोषकः—Daya.).

5. Pusan, one who sustains with enlightenment, knowledge or education (Daya.).

Visnu, pervader; one who pervades through all learnings (Daya.).

Evayavah, by which the entire behaviour is known is evah; and by which everything is attained and realized is yati. (एति जानाति सर्वव्यवहारं येन स एव बोधस्तं याति प्राप्नोति प्रापयति वा तत् सम्बुद्धौ—Daya.).

Sayana interprets the term as troop of Maruts from their going with horses (एवैः).

9. Sam occurs five times in the stanza, generally meaning : "be propitious". Dayananda elaborates it as (i) happiness-giving (सुखकारी); (ii) peace-giving (शान्तिप्रदः); (iii) (prosperity-giving (ऐश्वर्यसौख्य-प्रदः); (iv) health-giving (आरोग्यसुखदः) (v) enlightenment-giving (विद्या-व्याप्तिप्रदः)

Urukramah, one having to his credit innumerable acts of valour. (Daya.).

In this verse, as in the earlier verses, mitra, varuna, aryaman. indra, bṛahaspati, visnu and urukrama are the epithets and attributes of one and the same Supreme Self, in as much as they are the epithets and attributes of a benevolent teacher, instructor, leader or the head of a state.

Hymn-91

2. Nṛcaksah, the enlightened ones (like eye) amongst people. (नृषु चक्षो दर्शनं यस्य स., — Daya.).

3. Te varunasya rajnah—The stanza is addressed to Soma, the Delightful Lord... Rajnah is the Lord of all, or shining with wisdom and knowledge; varunasya, of the venerable.

Sayana even seems to interpret Varuna as that which is enclosed in a cloth, or the Soma plant that has been purchased for a sacrifice.

4. Dhamani, name, birth and abode (नामजन्मस्थानानि,—Daya.).

Rajan Soma, illustrious Soma; royal (the same in stanza 5, as satpatis tvam raja, "the sovereign of the pious". Sayana renders it as "the king of Brahmanas".

15. Urusya, save, protect (उरुष्यती रक्षाकर्मा, Nir. V. 23).

16. Samgatha, synonym of battle (संगथ संग्राम, Nigh, II.7).

20. Sadanyam, material worth using in house-building (Daya.).

Vidathyam, essentially related with Yajna (sacrificial acts) and defence (Daya.).

Sabheyam, essentially related with assembly.

22. Gah, sense organs, or rays (Daya.).

23. Gavistau, pertaining to the movements of rays; pertaining to an empire (a compound of go (गो) and ista (इष्ट).

Wilson refers to the confusion in the hymn between Soma, standing for the moon, and Soma standing for the medicinal plant.

The verse 22 is perhaps definitely for moon since it alludes to the function of scattering darkness by light (त्वं ज्योतिषा वितमो ववर्थ).

Hymn-92

For verses 1 and 13 see Nir. XII. 7 and XII. 6 respectively.

The entire hymn has the beautiful description of the dawn, in relation to the sun, and the darkness.

1. Usasah, the plural, used honorifically (Nir. XII.7). It does not mean different deities presiding on dawns.

Yanti matarah, progressed mothers; matṛ means maker or author of light (गावो गमनात् : अरुषीरारोचनात् मातरो-भासो निर्मात्र्यः—Nir. XII.7).

4. Nṛtuh-iva, parts played like an actor; nṛtuh may also mean a barber, since he cuts the hair (Sayana) or a dancing girl—(Usas display graces like a dancing girl.). यथा नर्तको रूपाणि धरति तथा,—Daya.).

5. Divo duhita, the daughter of the sky (or the sun—Daya.).

10. Svaghniva, like a hunting she-wolf, which devours dogs and deer (Daya.); like the wife of a hunter, व्याध-स्त्री (Sayana); the wife of a dog-killer (Wilson).

11. Svasaram, night, resembling a sister (भगिनीस्वरूपा रात्रिम्,—Daya.).

Yosa jarasya, wife or beloved of the sun (Daya.); जारस्य लम्पटस्य रात्रेर्जरयितः सूर्यस्य वा—Daya.). (jara, meaning the causer of the decay, or disappearnace of night; and hence the sun).

13. Vajinivati, one with excellent actions or plentiful food (Daya.).

17. Asvina, pair of fire and air (Daya.); of the sun and the moon (Sayana; also Nir. XII.1),

Hymn-93

4. Bṛsayasya sesah, the left-overs of the coverer (आच्छादकस्य अवशिष्टो भागः—Daya). Sesa is synonymous with aptya (offspring) (Nir. III.2). Bṛsaya is also a synonym of Tvastṛ and so it means Vṛtra, the offspring of Tvastṛ. Agni and Soma are the two vital breaths, prana and apana, the separation of which from Vṛtra was the approximate cause of his death (Sayana). Agnisoma, according to Dayananda are air and electricity.

Panim, practice (व्यवहारम्—Daya.).

5. A Vedic legend in this connection is as follows :

The rivers were defiled bv the dead body of Vṛtra, which had fallen into them; their waters were consequently unfit to bear any part in sacred rites until they were purified by Agni and Soma, i.e. by offering the libations of Soma juice to fire.

6. Matarisva, the air or wind of the interspace.

Syena, speedy horses, or hawk. There is a legend developed on this stanza during the allegorical ages of mythology. It relates that Vayu brought Agni from heaven at the desire of Bhṛgu, when performing a sacrifice; Soma was brought from svarga, on the top of Mount Meru by Gayatri, in the shape of a hawk. These are clearly allegorical allusions to the early use of fire and the Soma plants in the Vedic rituals.

Hymn-94

For verses 2 and 15 see Nir. IV. 25 and XI. 24 respectively.

Agne sakhye ma risama vayam tava, this is the burthen of the stanzas 1-14. Let us not suffer injury, Agni, through thy friendship (Wilson); let us not, in thy friendship, Agni, suffer haṛm (Griffith).

6. There are several terms used in this stanza, which later on became technical terms in the fire-rituals. Agni is identified with the chief of the sixteen priests engaged at solemn sacrifices. He is the adhvaryu (reciter of the yajus), or the presenter of the offerings; he is the hotṛ, or the invoking priest; he is the prastotṛ or the maitra-varuna, whose duty is to direct the other priests what to do and when to perform their functions; he is the potṛ, or the priest so termed and the family or heriditory purohita; or the purohita may be the same as the brahma of a ceremony (Wilson).

Hymn-95

For the verse 5 see Nir. VIII. 15.

1. Dve virupa—It refers to two (night and day), with darkness and brightness as opposed characters (Daya.). Day is said to be the mother of fire which is then, as it were, in an embryo state, and is not fully manifested or born until it is dark. So the sun is in the womb of night, and is born, or shines, in the morning; hari or the sun, being manifested in the morning, is then to be worshipped or glorified. (Dayananda translates hari as moon, which takes away the heat). Agni shining at night, is to be worshipped in the evening (तस्मादग्नये सायं हूयते सूर्याय प्रातः - Tai. Br. II.1.2.6), which is rather at variance with the preliminary statement, that agni of the hymn is the one entitled to a share of the morning oblation (उषसि प्रातःकाले हविर्भाग्योऽग्निरस्ति स देवता —Sayana in introduction to this hymn.); therefore, it is said, the agni is that endowed with the properties of dawn: or it may be the simple, discrete Agni (औषस गुण विशिष्टोऽग्निः शुद्धोऽग्निर्वा—Sayana). Dayananda gives the deveta of the hymn as सत्यगुण-विशिष्टोऽग्निः शुद्धोऽग्निर्वा. Therefore, one may treat agni as identical with Hari, which means the sun (हरि रसहरण-शील आदित्यः), since he takes away water and saps.

2. Dasemam=dasa+imam; dasa is the same as disa, or ten cardinal directions or ten regions of space, which generate the electrical fire or lightning, as an embryo in the clouds, through the agency of winds (अग्नेर्हि वायुः कारणम् वायोरग्निः etc. Tait. Ar. VIII.1).

According to Rosen, dasam or ten stands for ten fingers, which generate agni or fire through the act of attrition, as an embryo in the sticks. (Sayana gives both interpretations).

Vibhṛtram, the sustainer of several actions (Daya.). It may also mean deposited in all creatures; that is, in the capacity of the digestive faculty, which is referred to the action of natural heat. (Wilson).

3. The stanza indicates three sources of fire (three birth places):

(i) one in the ocean, (समुद्र), as submarine fire (बडवानल).
(ii) one in the heaven (द्यौ), as the sun (आदित्य).
(iii) one in the interspace (apsu, apah being a synonym of antariksa, Nig. I.3) as lightning (वैद्युताग्नि).

Dayananda, by trini, त्रीणि, takes past, present and future, the three divisions of time. The ahoratra (pair of day and night) as three steps, one in the heaven (दिव्ये), one in the ocean (समुद्रे), and the last in the interspace (अप्सु). The seasons are set up also on the same basis and so are the points of the horizon indicated.

4. Matṛh janayata—He begets his mothers (nights protecting as mothers—Daya). According to others, agni, in the form of lightning, is the son of the waters collected in the clouds, and those waters he is said to generate by the oblations which he conveys, for we have in the Manusmṛti (III.76)—"oblations offered in the fire ascend to the sun, rain is produced from the sun, corn from rain and thence spring the mankind."

Bahvinam apasam upasthat, issues from the ocean. Agni is said to rise in the morning in the form of the sun out of the ocean. Dayananda, however, interprets as "जलानां समीपस्थ व्यवहारात्", by the closest relationships of several factors (बह्वीनाम्) like celestial space, earth, or cardinal points etc.

5. Jihmanam urdhvah, above, on the side, or on the tip of the crooked waters. (jihmanam, crooked, urdhvah above or on the tip (Daya.). Agni here is the lightning, which appears on the skirts of the unevenly disposed or undulating rain falling from the clouds. (Wilson).

Simham prati josayete. Approaching the lion (or violent wild animal—simham=himsakam). Sayana applies the term simham to Agni, to imply his ability to suffer or be overcome (सिहं सहनशीलमभिभवनशीलं तमग्निम्).

6. Ubhe, in both (heaven and earth, —Daya.); it may be two pieces of wood rubbed together to produce fire or flame.

8,9. Budhnam, the knowledge pertaining to vital forces (प्राणबल) —Daya. It is also a synonym of interspace, or antariksa, as being the source of rains.

10. Navasu prasusu, in the new-sprung parents; (in the newborn people,—Daya.). According to Sayana, it represents osadhis or the annuals or the cereals, which ripen after the rains, and bear food, being impregnated by the terrestrial agni.

Hymn-96

For verses 1 and 7 see Nir. VIII.2 and IV. 17 respectively.

1. Agnim, Dayananda uses the term in the sense of fire and adorable God both.

Apasca mitram dhisana ca—Apah may mean waters or vital breaths; dhisana is pure intellect (prajna, प्रज्ञा); it may be voice, (vak, वाक्) too. According to Sayana, agni alluded to is the ethereal or electric fire, combined at its production with rain and sound.

Dravinodam, giver of wealth (Daya.).

2. Ayoh, from the eternal cause (सनातनात् कारणात्); according to Sayana, it is another name of Manu.

Nivida, वेदवाचा, the divine speech of the Veda.

3. Prathamam—The foremost creator of the entire universe. (Daya.); mukhya or chief (Sayana).

5. Sisumekam, to one infant; it refers to agni which is constantly nourished by mothers day and night (नक्तोषसा), or another pair of mothers, dyava-ksama, heaven and earth.

Hymn-97

Apa nah sosucadagham, may our sin be repented of (Wilson), or "let our sin pass away from us, and light upon our adversaries"; or, "let our sin, affected by grief, perish" (Sayana). "May our sin, accrued through the weaknesses of thoughts, words and deeds be punished for our purification" (Daya.). अप=दूरीकरणे; शोशुचत्=दूरीकुर्यात् अघम् =मनो-वाक्शरीर-जन्यं पापम्).

4. Pra jayemahi vayam, may we obtain posterity; surayah, men of learning.

Hymn-98

For verse 1 see Nir. VII. 22, 23.

1. Vaisvanara, supreme Lord, the inspirer of all people; also the metabolic fire (or even electric fire)—Daya.; also the one who rules over all (visva) men (nara); on the ceremonial side, the one who conducts nara or men to another region; either to heaven through oblations, or possibly to future life through the funeral fire; on the social side, the one who is reputed to be the world citizen, leader of all people (the man belonging to all) (सर्वेषां जीवानां नेता—Daya.).

Yatate suryena, accompanies the rising sun; one who exerts with the assistance of the sun, or the prana (Daya.). [Either as the combined heat with solar radiance, or, it is said, that at the rising of sun, in proportion as the solar rays descend to earth, so the rays of the terrestrial fire ascend, and mix with them (Wilson).]

2. Pṛstah, worth being questioned, addressed, or invoked (विदुषः प्रति य. पृच्छ्यते—Daya.). Vṛsta, explained by sampṛsta, in contact with, or nihita, placed or present in the sky (divi). It refers to agni which is present in the sun; on the earth, in the sacred and domestic fires and in herbs or annuals, as the cause of their coming to maturity. According to Dayananda, it refers to God as the venerable Lord worth being invoked, or the physical fire.

3. Maghvanah, any one, in possession with the most respectful treasure of knowledge (मघं परमपूज्यं विद्याधनम्,—Daya.). [It has been stated that this word maghavanah cannot be the accusative plural (which would be मघवतः or मघोनः) (मघवानः=मघवन्तः=धनवन्त, i. e. wealthy)].

Rayah, knowledge, or the royal prosperity (विद्याराजश्रियः —Daya.) or riches.

Hymn-99

For the verse I, see Nir. VII. 20.

This hymn is notable in the sense that it has only one stanza. May the adorable Lord convey us, as in a boat over a river or ocean, across all wickedness, vices and pains (durita).

Hymn-100

Marutvanno bhavatvindra uti—This is the burthen of the hymn for 1-15 stanzas. May Indra, associated with the Maruts be our protection (Wilson); may Indra, girt by Maruts, be our succour (Griffith).

1. Vṛsa, the cause of rains (Daya.); showerer of desires; vṛsnyebhih samokah, co-dweller with rays; co-dweller with all energies.

4. Angirobhih, with the essence of body or life, or breathings (अंगेषु रसभूतैं प्राणैः सह—Daya.).

Vrsa, bountiful; sakha, friend; rgmi, well-versed in the Rgveda; jyestha, predominent; gatubhih, possessed with learning and education.

6 According to the traditionalists, the varsagiras (वार्षगिराः) (the sons of vrsagira, वृषागिर) are supposed to pray to Indra that they might have enough daylight, in which to attack their enemies, and to recover the cattle that had been carried away by them, or that the light may be withheld from their opponents (Wilson).

8. Andhe cit-tamasi, in the dim darkness of thoughts (darkness of understanding). May the effulgent Indra give the light of knowledge (jyotih) to darkness of understanding.

10. Krstibhih, through culture; through the technical skill (विलेखन-क्रियाभिः—Daya.).

11. Jamibhih, in the company of friends and allies.

Ajamibhih, in the company of enemies and adversaries.

12. Pancajanyah, five classes of people—(i) teachers of learning, (ii) preceptors, (iii) councillors of government, (iv) people of defence, and (v) authority of administration—Daya.; or the people belonging to four varnas and fifthly, the out-castes or nisadas or foreigners not governed by the set laws.

14. Sim—the code of conduct; the limits set for discipline (धर्म-न्याय-मर्य्यादा-परिग्रहे—Daya.); from all sides (सर्वतः—Sayana).

16. Nahusisu viksu, amongst the childern of these people (नहुषाणां मनुष्याणामिमास्तासु प्रजासु—Daya.); amongst human hosts, nahusa=man; vis=man (people designated as an army—Sayana).

18. Shimyun, peaceful beings; law-abiding persons (Daya.); enemies (Sayana—शमयितॄन् वधकारिणः) and raksasas, perhaps races, not subjected to the Vedic culture.

Dasyun, to the wicked (Daya.).

Hymn-101

For verses 1, 4 and 10 see Nir. IV. 24; V. 15; and VI. 17.

Marutvantam sakhaya havamahe—This is the burthen of the hymn for stanzas 1-7; we invoke to be our friend, Indra, who is attended by the Maruts (Wilson); —him girt by Maruts, we invoke to be our friend (Griffith).

1. Ṛjisvina, (derived from ṛju, simple, not crooked, straight, svanah=vṛddayah, development, improvement), by the straight-forward or simple acquisition in learning (Daya.).

Kṛsna-garbha, by the people well-versed in the sciences of lines, curves i.e. of geometry (Daya., from √ कृप् to draw lines); the traditionalists translate as the pregnant wives of Kṛsna. The legend goes to say that Ṛjisvan was a king friendly to Indra, and Kṛsna was a demon or asura, who was slain together with his wives, that none of his posterity might survive. Kṛsna also means black=a dark cloud=vṛtra; or dark-complexioned aborigines. (All imaginative).

Mandine, to the one, worthy of praise and laudations. (मन्दी मन्दते स्तुतिकर्मणः—Nir. IV. 14), for the one happy, or the one who imparts happiness to others (Daya.).

2. Sambara and Pipru,—Traditionalists regard them as the usuras, the latter is also styled as avratam, not performing, or opposing vratas or religious rites.

Dayananda translates sambaram as अधर्मसम्बन्धिनम्, or related to vicious acts, and piprum as उदरम्भरम्, or one who cares to fill his own belly; so selfish.

Susnam asusam, to the dryer up, who is without being dried up, who cannot be absorbed; (Daya.; susnam is strong and powerful बलवन्तम्), and asusam is 'devoid of sorrow', and hence joyous.

3. Sascati, attains, reaches (a gati karma, Nigh. II. 14).

4. Vadhah, a thunderbolt (a synonym of vajra, Nigh. II. 20).

5. Brahmane, one learned in the four Vedas (Daya.).
For angiras (Sayana), who was regarded as one Brahmana class.

Cows were stolen from the Angirasas, it is so said.

7. Rudranam, one who like the breath-complex, makes everyone weep at the time of death, be he virtuous or vicious (Daya.; also Sayana, amongst several other interpretations).

Indra is said to be radiant through the identity with the sun, and the Rudras to be the same as the Maruts, in their character of vital air or prana. (सर्वेषां भूतानां प्राणानादायोदेति—Tait. Ar. I. 14.1). When pranas go out of the body, i.e. when one dies, the relatives start weeping, and hence also rudra is prana.

8. Parame, (madhyame), and avame, this might refer to three fires : the sun in the heaven, lightning in the mid-air, and fire, sacred or domestic, on earth. The three may refer to three positions or status—the highest, the middle one and the lowest (Daya.).

Adhvaram, the peace-loving sacred duties as of teaching and learning professions (अध्ययनाध्यापनाख्यमहिंसनीयं यज्ञम् —Daya.); yajnam=noble sacrifice, devoid of cruelty and violence.

10. Sipre, the givers of all comforts, and hence the pair of heaven and earth (dual number)—(Nigh. a pada-nama, IV. 1).

Hymn-102

2. Dyava-ksama, light (celestial) and earth together (Daya.); pṛthivi, mid-space or antariksa (Daya.).—(Nigh. 1.3, a synonym of antariksa).

3. Sangame=samgrame (Nigh. II.17), in war or in battle.

4. Bhare-bhare = samgrame-samgrame = on every battle (Daya.).

10. Sam sisimasi, crush the enemies to powder, to pulverize the enemies (शत्रून् सूक्ष्मान् जीर्णान् कुर्मः —Daya.).

Hymn-103

1. Paracaih, accompanied with an external sign (बाह्य चिह्नैर्युक्तम्

—Daya.); as if present (Sayana, अभिमुखमेव); also averted or inverse.

Sam-pṛcyate—joined together; are in combination with. It is so said that the sun and fire are equally the lustre of Indra, the venerable Lord. In the day, fire is combined with the sun; in the night, the sun is combined with fire.

2. Rauhinam, clouds produced in the Rohini constellations (Daya.). Ahi, vṛtra and rauhina are clouds, perhaps of different forms and hues (clustered, wide-spread, and very high). A purple or red cloud may be a rauhina.

3. Dasyave, for the vicious people; Aryan, to the noble people.

Dasih purah, cities belonging to vicious people in particular (to the undeveloped or under-developed).

4. Nama bibhrat, possessing a name; full of glory; also full of water. (Nigh. I. 12; nama is a synonym of udaka or water).

Nama dadhe—attains a reputation or name.

Manusaima yugani (Daya.), these years of men (Daya.); these ages of men (kṛta, treta etc.)

5. Srat, a synonym of satya, truth (Nigh. III. 10).

Asvan, big objects (Asva is a synonym of mahat, big or great, Nigh. III. 3).

8. Sambarasya, of a rain-bearing cloud ready for precipitation; also of a mighty enemy (also a synonym of bala or strength—Nigh. II.9).

Hymn-104

1. Prapitve, at the attainable place or time (Daya.), see Nir.

III. 20; prapitve (arrived at) and abhike (approached) are synonymous.

2. Manyum, anger (Nigh. II. 13); dasasya, of the attendant.

3. Ketavedah, Keta is synonymous with prajna (intellect, Nigh. III. 9), the one who has known the place of wealth.

Kuyava, vicious, villain.

Ksira, water (Nigh. 1.12).

Siphayah, rivers.

4. Uparasya, of the cloud (uparah, a synonym of cloud. (Nigh. I.10). Ayoh, worth attaining (Daya.); ay, to go; also a vagrant.

Kulisi and virapatni—They have been regarded as unidentified rivers. Kulisi, protected by vajra or solar rays from drying up. (कुलिशीवज्रेणाभिरक्ष्या—Daya.).

Virapatni, the one whose lord is brave; in the context here, it means a river, whose lord is ocean.

6. Indriyaya, of the wealth (indriya = dhana = wealth, Nigh. II. 10).

Hymn-105

For verses 5, 8, 17, 18 and 19 see Nir. V. 16; IV. 16; VI. 27; V. 21; and V. 11 respectively.

1. Apsu-antara, in the midst of vital airs; candramah suparnah, graceful moving. सुपर्णः = शोभनपतनः (Sayana); शोभनं पर्णं पतन गमन यस्य (Daya.); the well or elegantly going; or it may mean, connected with the ray of the sun called suparna, the combination with which gives moon its light.

Vittam me asya rodasi, heaven and earth, know of this of me; be aware of this my state of affairs. Traditionalists have been erroneously referring this passage to the legend of Trita, lying at the bottom of the well, (Ṛv. I.52.5), which being covered over, shuts out from him all visible objects. On the spiritual plane, Trita is the light of the conscience, lying hidden under a cover of ignorance and neglect.

Vittam me asya rodasi is the burthen of the hymn for stanzas

1-18. "Heaven and earth, be conscious of this (my affliction)"—Wilson. "Mark this my woe, ye Earth and Heaven"—Griffith.

4. Avamam sah, the first amongst gods; Av=to protect; also first or best, and also the latest (रक्षादिसाधकमुत्तममर्वाचीन वा—Daya). Please compare with अग्निर्वै देवानामवमः (Ait. Br. I.1), meaning, Agni the first produced of all gods; अग्निर्मुखं प्रथमो देवानाम् (Ait. Br. I.4).

6. Varuna and Aryaman—Varuna is the obstructor of evil (अनिष्ट-निवारकः); also water etc. in the effective form (Daya.); aryaman, the restrainer of enemies (अरीणां नियन्ता); the sun (Daya.).

8. Muso na sisna—Rats gnawing and licking impure threads (Daya.). Weaver's threads, which according to Sayana, have been steeped in rice-water, to render them more tenacious, and which are, therefore, palatable to rats. We may also render it as: "As a rat gnaws, or licks, its tail, having just dipped it in oil or grease". For thickening threads by starch; see also Manu, VIII. 397.

9. Nabhih, navel (शरीरमध्यस्था सर्वप्राणबन्धनाङ्गम्—Daya.). The centre of gravity of body; connected with seven vital airs. Sayana refers to the solar rays with seven vital airs abiding in the ruling spirit (तेषु सूर्यरश्मिष्वध्यात्मं सप्त प्राणरूपेण वर्तमानेषु). This might be alluding to the mystic practice of contemplating the umbilical region as the seat of the soul (धारणा in the नाभिचक्र).

Aptyah, son of the waters; the best amongst the truthful persons of authority (यः आप्तेषु भवः सः—Daya.); or apam-putra. son of the waters (insertion of t (त्) is an anomaly, then. आप्यः, not आप्त्यः).

10. Pancokshanah, the five shedders of benefits. The fives have been thus enumerated:

Dayananda: Agni, Vayu, Megha, Vidyut and Surya (fire, air, cloud, lightning and the sun.)

Ṛgveda: Indra, Varuna, Agni, Aryaman and Savitṛ. (I. 107. 3)

Satyayana: Five glories in five worlds: Agni (on the earth), Vayu (in the interspace), Aditya (in heaven), Candrama (amongst stars) and Vidyut (in water).

Taittiriyas: Agni (on earth), Vayu (in interspace), Surya (in heaven), Chandrama (amongst directions), and Nakshatras (in Svarloka).

11. Vṛkam—Electricity or vidyut (Daya.); a wolf according to others; alluding to a story of wolf who was about to swim across a river to devour Trita, but was deterred by the brightness of the solar rays. Yaska interprets vṛka as moon, and apah, the firmament. (See stanza 18 also).

18. Tasta, a carpenter, taksaka or silpi or artisan (Daya); Ma sakṛt, me once=masa-kṛt=month-maker.

The moon having contemplated the constellations going along the path of the sky, became united with one of them paying no attention to Trita in the well. (Wilson).

Hymn-106

3. Pitarah, learned people (Daya); the agnisvattas and others, Sayana (Manu. III. 195).

4. Pusanam, the sustainer of the body and the soul (Daya); the sustaining God (पोषकं देवम्—Sayana).

5. Manurhitam, the one generous towards mind or thoughts. Sam yor yat-te manurhitam, implanted in thee by Manu; the good or blessing of those two (शं योः) (things or properties) which was placed in them by Manu (Wilson); शं योः=सुखं धर्मार्थमोक्षप्रापणम् (Daya.), that one which procures pleasure or dharma (righteousness), artha (wealth) and moksa (emancipation).

6. Kutsa, the one accomplished with adamantine knowledge and enlightenment, or the one who chisels and cuts objects. (Kutsa, a synonym of vajra, Nigh. II. 20). The word kutsa is derived from √कृत्, to cut. It is also the name of a seer (Nir. III. 11). A seer is a composer of hymns, says Aupamanyava. Further, it has the meaning 'to kill' only.

Sacipati, the Lord of saci, the protector of the Vedic speech, (वेदवाचः पालकम्).

Kate, from कटन्ति वर्षन्ति सकला विद्या यस्मिन्नध्यापने व्यवहारे तस्मिन्—(Daya.), from कट् to shower; and thus one related to the showering of knowledge.

Hymn-108

For verse 10 see Nir. XII. 3.

4. The epithets are in dual number; according to Sayana, adhvaryu and his assistant priest are implied.

7. Yad brahmani rajani va—A brahman who is a different institutor of a sacrifice; the second, by ksatriya, a man of the second or military discipline.

8. Turvasesu, those who keep control over undesirable elements, cruel and violent.

The descendents of the five sons of Yayati, mentioned in the Mahabharata are Yadus, Turvasas, Druhyus, Anus and Purus. Of these, Yadu is explained by ahimsaka (non-injurious; Turvasa by himsaka, or injurious; Druhyu by upadravechhu, उपद्रवेच्छु, or tyrannical; Anu, the pranair yukta, प्राणैर्युक्त, having breath or life, wherewith to acquire knowledge and perform religious acts; and Purus by कामैः पूरयितव्य, to be filled with or full of the objects of desire.

According to Dayananda, Yadu is a hard-working class of people; Turvasa has a control over wild violent animals; Druhyu, the anti-social element, the law-breakers; Anu the life-givers, and Puru, the competent person, knowing his jobs very well. (See Nigh. II. 3, where these five have been included in a list of 25 terms, as synonyms of manusya or man).

Hymn-109

For verse 2, see Nir. VI. 9.

2. Vijamatuh, of the unworthy bridegroom, (विगतो विरुद्धश्च जामाता च तस्मात्—Daya).

Syalat, brother-in-law, brother of one's wife (Daya.).

The prefix vi, in vijamatṛ, indicates a son-in-law (jamatṛ) who is not possessed of qualifications required by the Vedas; and who is, therefore, obliged to conciliate his father-in-law by liberal gifts, which is, in a way, paying for, or buying his wife.

The verse is : "For I have heard, that you are more liberal than a son-in-law, nay even more than a brother-in-law." On this the Nirukta says : "I have heard that you are more liberal indeed than a would be son-in-law," i.e., one whose son-in-lawship is not quite complete. It is well-known that the people in the South apply the term vijamata to the husband of a purchased maiden. By this is meant a bridegroom whose relationship is not quite complete as it were. Jamata is so-called because he is the progenitor of ja, which means offspring. Nay even more than a brother-in-law, i.e. more liberal than a brother-in-law. They, who are well-versed in primary causes, remark that a brother-in-law(syalah) is so called because he comes very near on account of his relationship. (See Manusmṛti, III. 51 : Let no father who knows the law receive a gratuity, however small, for giving his daughter in marriage, since the man who, through avarice, takes a gratuity for that purpose is a seller of his offspring).

There is another derivation of the word syala, the brother of the maiden, who makes her gifts through affection; sya=winnowing basket and la=laja, fried paddy or grains, which are scattered at the marriage ceremony by the bride's brother.

4. Devi dhisana, divine speech; the effulgent on account of great learning (दिव्य शिक्षा शास्त्र विद्याभिर्देदीप्यमाना—Daya.).

7. Suryasya rashmayah, rays of the sun; किरणा: मार्त्तण्डमण्डलस्य—Daya. The radiance of Indra and Agni is identical with that of the Surya. (Wilson).

Sapitvam, together; (समानं च तत् पित्वं प्रापण वा विज्ञानं च तत्-Daya.); they are blessing with equal treatment and scientific knowledge or enlightenment; Sayana translates it as सह प्राप्तव्यं स्थान, a place to be obtained together, i.e. the world of brahma, to which the pious proceed by the path of light.

Hymn-110

For verse 4, see Nir. XI. 16.

1. Ṛbhuh, wise (a synonym for medhavin, or wise persons, Nigh. III. 15); also Nir. XI. 15. Ṛbhavah are so called because they shine widely (uru+$\sqrt{}$bha, उरु + भा), or they shine with sacred rite (ṛta+$\sqrt{}$bha, ऋत+भा) or they live with sacred rite (ṛta+$\sqrt{}$bhu, ऋत+भू). Having finished the works with utmost quickness, the bearers or the wise ṛbhus, attained immortality although they were mortals. The Ṛbhus, sons of Sudhanvan, looking like the sun, or wise like the sun. They mix things together with their works, i.e. active during the year (I.110.4). Evidently, the stanza refers to some astronomical phenomenon, as solar rays. Dayananda translates the word as men of wisdom, for an interpretation on the social plane.

Sudhanvan, according to the traditionalists, was the father of Ṛbhus, and a descendent of Angiras; so is Kutsa, and thus they are related. On this, Wilson says, that although, as Kutsa is the son of Angiras, it seems not very consistent to call them his kinsmen of a former period, prancah (pracina) or purvakalina, as in verse 2.

2. Saudhanvanasah, sons of Sudhanvan; foremost or most adept amongst those who are archers, (शोभनानि धन्वानि धनूंषि येषु ते सुधन्वानः, तेषु कुशलाः सौधन्वानाः—Daya.).

Apakah, persons not permitted to cook their meals, for example, Sannyasins (वर्जितपाकयज्ञा यतयः —Daya.).

Savituh, of the sun; of the creator; of any one with prosperity ऐश्वर्ययुक्तस्य—Daya.); also from √ सु, to offer oblation.

4. Sami, work (karmani); and vistvi, both are synonyms of karma, action or work (Nigh. II. 1). See Nir. XI. 16 for the verse.

6. Ṛbhavas, the so lar rays (Nir. XI.16). आदित्य रश्मयोऽप्यृभव उच्यन्ते.

Nṛbhyah, for men; for the leaders of the yajna. (ऋभवो हि यज्ञस्य नेतारः ; Ṛbhus are the leaders of the sacrifice—Sayana); also to the chiefs of the firmament (antariksa).

8. Vatsena asṛjata mataram punah, reunited the mother with the son. There is a legend in this connection. A ṛsi whose cow had died, leaving a calf prayed to the Ṛbhus for assistance, on which they formed a living cow, and covered it with the skin of the dead one, from which the calf imagined it to be its own mother (see I.20.4). Of course the legend has no sense in it.

9. Vajasatau, in the battle; vajebhih, with grains and other materials (Daya.), or in battle, with your horses.

Hymn-111

2. Ṛbhumat, accompanied with men of wisdom, or resplendent; having much light (Ṛbhu from uru+√bha, उरु +भा, —Nir.).

4. Ṛbhuksanam indram, one who supports, or instructs the men of wisdom (Daya.); or Indra who is ṛbhuksin. According to Sayana, the three sons of Sudhanvan were Ṛbu, Vibhu and Vaja; these three are the arcihtects related to aeroplanes, ships and chariots (transports for air, water and land).

Vajan, superior in knowledge, ज्ञानोत्कृष्टान्—Daya.

5. Vajah, the one with speed and other noble qualities (Daya.).

Hymn-112

Tabhiru su utibhirasvinagatam is the burthen of this hymn, with those aids. Asvins, come willingly hither (Wilson); come hither unto us, O Asvins, with those aids (Griffith).

1. Utibhih, means of assistance, aid or protection.

3. Dhenum asvam, the speech which does not succumb to evils (Daya.); gave milk to the barren cow (asvam प्रसवासमर्थाम्, Sayana). Again, we have a legend stated in this connection. It relates to the cow of a ṛsi, named Sayu (शयु), to which, though barren, at his entreaty, the Asvins gave abundance of milk.

4. Yabhih parijma tanayasya majmana, endowed with the vigour of the son. Agni (fire) is regarded as the son of Vayu (air), either as generated, in the character, of digestive warmth, by the vital airs, or as having been excited into flame by the wind at the time of creation.

Dvimata, measurer of the two worlds (Wilson), or measurer of the two, water and fire (Daya.). The two regions are earth (the place of agni) and firmament (the place of vayu). Agni is also the son of two mothers (the two sticks in the process of attrition).

Trimantuh, the one adept in three, karma (actions), upasana (devotion) and jnana (knowledge) —Daya. Again, according to ritualists, the three are paka-yajna (offerings of food), haviryajna (oblations of butter), and somayajna (oblations of medicinal herbs, or Soma juice).

5. Rebham and Vandanam,—rebham, one who sings the glory—stota; vandanam, one who recites the noble attributes (gunakirtana) —Daya. Here again, the traditionalists have concocted a story. Rebha and Vandana are said to be two ṛsis, who were cast into a well by asuras.

6. Antakam, according to a legend, he is a rajarsi, whom the asuras threw into a pond or a well (again a legend).

Bhujyum—There have been several traditional legends concocted in the name of Bhujyu, who has been said to be the son of Raja Tugra. Bhujyu had embarked on a maritime expedition against the enemies of his father, but encountered a storm, in which the vessel was lost; he was saved, and brought back to his father by the intervention of the Asvins.

According to B. A. Macdonell and A. B. Keith (Vedic Index), Bhujyu denotes an adder in two passages of the Ṛgveda (iv.27.4;- X. 25.8) and one of the Yajurveda (XVIII.42) (cf. St. Petersburg. Dictionary). Then there are a large number of passages in the Ṛgveda in which the word Bhujyu has been used in another sense, round which the legend has been developed. The passages are: I.112.6; 20; 116.3; 117. 14; 119.4; VI.62.6; VII.68.7; 69.7; X.40.7; 65.12; 143.5. According to Bühler, the passages refer to Bhujyu being saved from shipwreck during a voyage in the Indian ocean, but the evidence is inadequate to support this conclusion.

Dayananda translates bhujyum as पालकम्, the supporter I.112.6 भोक्तारम् (IV. 27.4); enjoyer of pleasure (I. 116.3); the sustainer of body and soul (I.117.14).

Karkandhu and vayya,—Karkandhu according to Dayananda, means artisans, craftsmen कर्कान् कारुकानन्तति व्यवहारे बध्नाति तम् and vayyam is a learned person (ज्ञाता). According to traditionalists, these two are asuras whom the Asvins extricated from misfortunes (for vayya, also see I.54.6).

7. Sucantim, purifier (पवित्रकारकम्,—Daya.); a legendary person of this name of which no account has been given by Sayana.

Atraye, for the one free from three sorts or pains—mental, physical and accidental—Daya. According to Sayana and others, Atri is the name of a patriarch, who was thrown by the Asuras into a cave with a hundred doors, at all of which fires of chaff were kindled. They were extinguished with cold water by the Asvins; or according to Yaska, Atri is here a name of Agni, the eater (attri) of clarified butter, but whose appetite, or intensity, being checked by the heat of the sun in the hot weather, was renovated by the rain sent down by the Asvins.

Pṛsnigum, the one who moves through inter-space, अन्तरिक्षगन्तारम् Daya.). According to some, the name of a person,—so named from his possessing brindled cows (पृश्नयो गावो यस्य).

Purukutsam, one possessing large number of deadly defence weapons like thunderbolts etc. (बह्वः कुत्सा वज्राः शस्त्रविशेषा यस्मिंस्तम् —Daya.).

8. Paravrjam, the one who goes against discipline (धर्मविरुद्धगामिनम् Daya.). According to traditionalists, this is the name of a ṛsi, made lame and crippled.

Prandham, devoid of knowledge, merged in darkness (Daya.); totally blind; the name of a ṛsi (Sayana); perhaps the same as Ṛjrasva (ऋज्राश्व).

Sronam, the one crippled and deaf. Sayana gives some details of the persons of these names.

Varttikam, a bird, like a sparrow; or quail (शकुनिस्त्रियम् —Daya.).

9. Vasistham, to the one very much dedicated to his duty (यो वसति धर्मादि कर्मसु सोतिशयितस्तम् —Daya.).

Kutsam, thunderbolt, or a deadly weapon.

Srutaryam—श्रुतानि अर्य्याणि विज्ञानशास्त्राणि येन तम्, one who has listened to the authoritative teachings —Daya.).

Naryam, superior and senior amongst leaders of men.

10. Vispalam, the protector or sustainer of people(विशः प्रजाः पात्यनेन सैन्येन तल्लाति यया ताम्—Daya.). According to the legend, she was the wife of Khela, the son of Agastya.

For other references of Vispala, see I.112.10; 116.15; 117.11; 118.8; 182.1; and X.39.8.

Vasam, charming and attractive (कमनीयम् —Daya.).

Asvyam, son of asva, of the horses, or the one superior in speed (तुरगेषु वेगादिषु वा साधुम् —Daya.). Traditionalists regard Vasa and Asvya as ṛsis.

11. Dirghasravas, one possessing knowledge, food or wealth in large measures —Daya. By traditionalists, he is regarded as the son of Dirghatams, a ṛsi, but in a time of famine, he followed trade to obtain a livelihood, hence he is termed as vanika, a merchant; as the son of Usij, he should be the same as Kaksivat (I. 18.1) but the text treats them as distinct.

12. Trisoka, one not attached to the three lamentations pertaining to worth, action and behaviour. (Also the name of a ṛsi, son of Kanva. These holy persons were much exposed to cattle-stealing).

13. Mandhataram, one who goes to long distances on a car or airship; a wise man (Daya.). (See Nigh; III.15, synonym of medhavin). As a legend, he is regarded as a royal sage (rajaṛsi).

Ksetrapatyesu, concerning the lord of fields or of the earth (Daya.).

Bhardvajam, one who is acquainted with learned persons of high character. (विद्यासद्गुणान् भरतां वाज विज्ञापयितार; also वाजोऽन्न विज्ञानं वा बिभर्त्ति येन श्रोत्रेण तत्—one equipped with grains or spiritual knowledge.—Daya.). Also in S.Br., मनो वै भरद्वाज ऋषि रन्न वाजो यो वै मनो बिभर्त्ति सोऽन्नं वाजं भरति तस्मान्मनो भरद्वाज ऋषि : (VIII. I.1.9).

As a man of tradition, he is a man of wisdom (vipra), perhaps a Brahmana.

14. Divodasa, the giver or source of knowledge or enlightenment, —Daya.

Sambara-hatye. one competent to kill the adversaries (शम्बरस्य बलस्य हत्या हननं यस्मिन् युद्धादि व्यवहारे तस्मिन्—Daya.). (See Nigh. II.9 for sambara, a synonym of strength or force).

Atithigva, hospitable, cherisher of guests (अतिथीन् प्राप्नुवन्तम्—Daya.).

Kasah, is a synonym of water (Nigh. I.12).

Trasadasyum, one afraid of robbers or vicious people (यो दस्युभ्यस्त्रस्यति तम्—Daya.). According to Sayana, the son of Purukutsa.

15. Vamra, one who vomits for relief (रोग निवृत्तये वमनकर्तारम्—Daya.).

Vipipanam, one who takes (drinks) medicinal decoctions with care (औषधरसानां विविध पानं कर्तुं शीलम्—Daya.).

According to Sayana, vamra is called a ṛsi, the son of Vikhanas; the text calls him vipipanam, drinking much and variously, which Sayana explains drinking, especially earthly moisture, or dew (पार्थिवं रसम्). (See I.51.9).

Kali, one who saves from pains; or one adept in astronomy or calculations. (यः किरति विक्षिपति दुःखानि दूरीकरोति तं गणक वा—Daya.). Also name of a ṛsi.

Pṛthim, to one with keen intellect (विशालबुद्धिम्); traditionally, a rajaṛsi.

16. For Sayuh, see I.31.2; other references are III.55.6; Sayutra I.117.12; X.40.2; Sayum IV.18.12; X.40.8; Sayave I.112.16; 116.22; 117.20; 111.8; VI.62.7; VII.68.8; X.39.13.

Sayuh, is one in whom everything sleeps or rests during the pralaya, the final dissolution (Daya.); sayave, for the one that desires to sleep with comfort (Daya.); for the one reposing (Wilson).

Atraye, for the one free from three, the vices of thoughts, words and deeds (Daya.).

Manave, for the one righteous, judicious authority. In tradition, Manu is regarded a rajaṛsi, whom the Asvins extricated from want, by teaching the art of sowing the seeds of barley and other grains.

Syumarasmaye, for the one possessing the combined rays of justice (स्यूमा संयुक्तरश्मयो न्यायदीप्तयो यस्य तस्मै—Daya.).

17. Patharvan, students, continuing studies (Daya.).

Saryatam, the one controlling the men of violence (शरो हिंसकान् प्राप्तम्—Daya.). According to the traditionists, Patharvan is a rajaṛsi. Saryata is probably intended for Saryati, the fourth son of Vaivasvat Manu (cf. I. 51.12)

18. Vivare go-arnasah, to recover the stolen cattle (Wilson, Sayana); vivare, space (or cavern), avakasa; go-arnasah, गोः पृथिव्या जलस्य च (Daya.).

Manum, the one who knows (ज्ञातारम्), the rational man.

Asvins have been supposed to assist in the recovery of the stolen cattle (cf. Indra).

Manum samavatam, sustained Manu, or mankind i.e. by making him aware of the grain hidden in the earth and teaching him, in fact, agriculture (Wilson).

19. Sudase, in a munificint gift (सुष्ठु दाने) —Daya. According to the traditionalists, Sudas is the name of a king, the son of Pijavana. (शोभनं ददातीति सुदा: —Sayana). A prince named as Paiyavana, son of Piyavana is noticed by Manu. VII. 110.

20. For Bhujyu, see I.112.6.

Adhrigu, most resplendent (इन्द्रं परमेश्वर्यवन्तम्—Daya.). A sacrificer or immolator along with Capa, of the gods (Sayana, cf. अध्रिगुश्चापापश्चोभौ देवानां शमितारौ—Tait. Br. III.6.6.4)

Ṛtastubham, यया ऋतं स्तोभते स्तभ्नाति धरति, one standing for the sustenance of truth —Daya; name of a ṛsi (Sayana).

21. Kṛsanum, of the weak and timid (दुर्बलम्, Daya.). Kṛsanu is enumerated by the Taittiriyas amongst a class called Somapalas, venders or providers, apparently of the Soma plants (हस्तसुहस्त कृशानवेते व: सोमक्रयणा:—Tai. S. I.2.7). The word is a synonym of fire too (Nigh.).

23. Satakratu, a person of hundred or cent per cent selfless actions (शतं प्रज्ञाकर्माणि वा यस्तान्—Daya.); an epithet for Indra; here of Asvins.

For Kutsa and Turviti see I.112.9; 23.

Arjuneyam, one accomplished with a fine splendid finish. (The son of Arjuna—Sayana. Arjuna being the secret name of Indra—एतद् वा इन्द्रस्य गुह्यं नाम यदर्जुन: —Vajasaneyaka).

Purusantim, the distributor of riches to many; पुरूणां बहूनां सन्तिं विभाजितारम्—Daya.). As a legend, it is the name of a ṛsi.

24. Adyutye, attitude devoid of crookedeness (द्यूते भवो व्यवहारो द्यूत्यश्छलादिदूषितस्तद् भिन्ने—Daya.); also in the absence of light; that is, in the last watch of the night or that preceding the dawn, at which time, the Asvins are especially to be worshipped.

Hymn-113

For verses I and 2, see Nir. II. 19 and 20 respectively.

1. Ratri usase yonim—When the sun sets, the night comes on; or the night is generated by the setting sun, and may figuratively be termed as his offspring, and in the like manner, as the precursor, night may be termed the parent or the womb of the dawn.

2. Rusad-vatsa, the parent of the sun (रुश उज्ज्वलित: सूर्य्यो वत्सो यस्या: सा)—the dawn precedes, and therefore, figuratevely bears, or is the parent of the sun.

12. Yavayat-'dvesah, the beings hostile now withdraw. At the time of dawn, raksas like mosquitoes and other malignant beings vanish.

19. Devanam mata, mother of the gods (learned people—विदुषां माता—Daya.).

Hymn-114

1. Kapardina rudrah, (i) for the Brahmacarin who has led a life of austerity for 44 years and has braided hair (Daya.); Rudra with braided hair. (The one who makes everybody weep at the time of death is rudra रोदयति सर्वमन्तकाले इति रुद्र:—Sayana); (ii) again, rut is worldly pain; the one who takes it away is rudra (रुत् संसाराख्यं दु:खं, तत् द्रावयत्यपगमयति विनाशयतीति रुद्र:); (iii) the one who expounds the philosophy of the Upanisads of the Vedas in word-forms is rudra, (रुत: शब्दरूप उपनिषद:, ताभिर्द्रूयते गम्यते प्रतिपाद्यते इति रुद्र:); (iv) Rut is divine speech; the spiritual knowledge that propounds it for the devotee is rudra, (रुत् शब्दात्मिका वार्णा, तत्प्रतिपाद्या आत्मविद्या वा). (v) Rut is the surrounding or obstructing darkness of ignorance; one .who dispels this darkness is rudra, (रुणद्धि आवृणोति इति रुत् अन्धकारादि; तत् दृणोति विदारयतीति रुद्र:). In this way, Sayana gives serveal derivations to the word rudra, (also see Tai. S. I. 5. 1. 1).

Kapardine, means the one with jata, or braided hair (जटिलाय; जटाजूटं ब्रह्मचारिण, विद्वांसम्).

Agni has been called rudra in a legend. While the gods were engaged in a battle with asuras, Rudra, identified with Agni, came and stole their treasure; after conquering the enemy, the gods searched for the stolen wealth and recovered it from the thief, who wept (arudat) and Agni was thence called Rudra.

Ksayadviraya, destroyer of the heroes (क्षयन्तो दोषनाशका वीरा यस्य तस्मै —Daya.). Perhaps the heroes are Maruts.

For Ksayadvira, see I. 106. 4; 114. 1; 2; 3; 125. 3; VIII. 19. 10; X. 92. 9; and for kapardi see I. 114. 1; 5; VI. 55. 2; VII. 83. 8; IX. 67. 11 and X. 102. 8.

4. Vamkum, cruel and harsh towards mischievous enemies (Daya.); tortuous.

5. Varaham, like clouds (Daya.); also a boar or one who has a hard body. Sayana takes it to be an abbreviation of vara-ahara or good food.

Arusam, horses etc. (Daya.).

Namasa, with food (Nigh II.7), or dedication and service (Daya.).

6. Marutam pitre, father of Maruts; pitre, for the one that nourishes and sustains, Marut, the one who performs sacrifices in all seasons, such learneds (ऋतावृतो यजतं विदुषाम् —Daya.). Sayana unnecessarily gives a legend to show how Rudra becomes the father of Maruts (evidently fictions of a much later era than of the Vedas, being borrowed, if not fabricated from the tantras—Wilson).

10. Goghnam, cow-killing weapon, or a killer of cows (गवां हन्तारम्).

Purusaghnam, the killer of men, or man-slaying weapon.

Hymn-115

For verses 1 and 4, see Nir XII. 16, and IV. 11 respectively.

1. Caksus, enlightener (दर्शकं ब्रह्म, —Daya.).

Mitra, Varuna and Agni—Friend or the sun (mitra); giver of joy, the world of moon and seas (varuna); fire or electricity (agni). They are typical of the world or the seasons (Wilson).

Atma jagatah, the soul of the world; from his pervading and animating all things; or jagatah may mean "of what is moveable", followed by tasthusah, of that which is fixed. The sun is the cause of all effects, whether moveable of immoveable (जंगमस्य, स्थावरस्य —Daya.).

2. Yugani, a period of 5 samvatsaras, or divisions of time in Satya, Treta, Dvapara and Kali. Yugani also means "yokes for ploughs".

4. Madhya Kartor vitatam, diffused upon the unfinished task; spread in the middle of affair; the cultivator or artisan desists from his labour, although unfinished upon the setting of the sun.

5. Haritah, rays; directions or cardinal points (Daya.); also horses.

Hymn-116

For verses 8 and 16, see Nir. VI. 36 and V.21 respectively.

1. Vimadaya, for the one who gives intense pleasure (विशिष्टो मदो हर्षो यस्मात्तस्मै —Daya.). Also see I. 112. 19. According to the legend, Vimada is the name of a prince, who having won his bride at a svayamvara (a function at which a girl chooses her husband) was stopped on his way home by his unsuccessful competitors; Asvins came to his succour and placed the bride in their chariot, repulsed the assailants and carried the damsel to the residence of the prince.

Nasatya, absence of asatya or untruth or evil, i.e., one virtuous free from evils; an artisan or technician also. When used in the dual number, it represents asvinau (Nir. VI. 13) (नासत्यौ चाश्विनौ). "They are ever true, never false", says Aurnavabha. "They are promoters of truth", says Agrayana, or else they are so called because they are nose-born (nasa or nasika=nose).

2. Rasabhah, an ass; the one who has sustaining qualities as that of the earth etc. (आदिष्टोपयोजनपृथिव्यादिगुणसमूहवत् पुरुष: —Daya.). According to an absurd legend, the chariot of Asvins is drawn by two asses (rasabhavasvinoh, Nigh. I. 15) or it may mean "going swiftly".

3. Tugra, one who kills an enemy; the army-chief. See note on I.112.6 on Bhujyu. Tugra, according to the traditional legend, was a great friend of the Asvins. Being much annoyed by enemies residing on a distant island, he sent his son Bhujyu against them with an army on board ship; after sailing some distance, the vessel foundered in a gale; Bhujyu appealed to the Asvins who brought him and his troops back in their own ships, in three days' time. (See verses 4 and 5 also; referring to sea voyage and an encounter).

5. Sataritram, a boat with one hundred oars, and other controls of navigation (शतसंख्यकान्यरित्राणि जलपरिमाणग्रहणार्थानि स्तम्भनानि वा यस्याम् —Daya .).

6. Peduh, one who carries with comfort (सुखेन प्रापक: —Daya.). According to a legend it was the name of a certain rajarsi, who worshipped the Asvins; they, therefore, gave him a white horse, through the possession of which, he was always victorious over his enemies.

7. Pajriyaya=pajresu=padresu=padesu, for the one in reputed or authoritative positions (Daya.). Also another name in mythology for Angirasas, in which the race Kaksivat was born.

9. Ksarannapo. . .tṛsyate Gotamasya, see I. 85.6. It is difficult to find out how the well was presented to Gotama.

10. Drapimiva cyavanat pramuncatam—You stripped of from the aged Cyavana his entire skin (प्रमुञ्चेतं यथा कवचं पालयमानात् —Daya.). We shall not give here the unnecessary details of the restoration of the ascetic Cyavana to youth and beauty (See the Mahabharata, Vana Parva) as given in Indian Texts of the Non-Vedic Age,—the legend connected with Sukanya, daughter of the king Sharyati, how she pierced the eyes of the sage Cyavana, whilst he was engaged in penance, so much so that white ants constructed their nests round his body, and how all this enraged the old ṛsi and so how he could be appeased by the promise of the King to give him his daughter (Sukanya) in marriage, and for becoming marriageable, the Asvins restored the charming youth to the ṛsi. The Vedic text does not refer to any such details here.

For Dasra, see I. 116,16.

11. Nasatya and Vandana, see earlier notes (I. 112.5; 116.1).

12. Dadhica or Dadhyan, are who honour the learned (दधीन् विद्याधर्मधारकानञ्चति प्राप्नोति स: —Daya.). Also see I.84.13. A legend occurs in the Mahabharata also; from the bones of this king, Tvastṛ fabricated a thunderbolt to kill Vṛtra and rout the Asuras.

13. Vadhrimatyah, the noble ladies of excellent growth (वध्रय: प्रशस्ता वृद्धयो विद्यन्ते यस्यास्तस्या: स्त्रिय: —Daya.). In legend we have a wife of the name Vadhrimati of a certain rajarsi, who was impotent; the Asvins, propiated by her prayers, gave her a son (Wilson).

14. Vṛka, wolf, but here a dog (svan), a wild dog, aranya svan.

Khelasya, of the part or section (खण्डस्य —Daya,); a piece of the enemy's body. See I. 112.10. Accordiug to legend, Khila was a king, of whom Agastya was a purohita, and it was through his prayers, that the Asvins gave vispala an iron leg.

Vispala, see I. 112.10. She is regarded as the wife of Khela the son of Agastya.

16. Ṛjrasva, a simple horse (सरल तुरंगम् —Daya.). In a legend, we are told that Ṛjrasva was one of the sons of Vṛsagiṛ (I. 100.17); for his blindness, see I. 112.8, and the cure by Dasrsas (Ṛjrasva was made blind by his father whilst he was giving to a she-wolf a hundred sheep cut up in pieces; Dasras, the physician gave him back the eyes).

Vṛki, she-wolf; a legend describes her as one of the asses of the Asvins in disguise.

17. Suryasya duhita, daughter of the sun; according to a legend, the Sun was desirous of giving away his daughter to Soma, but all the gods desired her as a wife: they agreed that he who should first reach the sun, as a goal, should wed the damsel. In the race, the Asvins were victorious, and Surya (the daughter), well pleased by their success, rushed immediately into their chariot.

Karsmeya, wood and other material.

18. Vṛsabha, one who showers victory or prosperity.

Sinsumarah, one who destroys the infidels or enemies; a porpoise, a graha or an alligator (Sayana); they in the mythology were yoked to the car of the Asvins, to display their power.

19. Jahnavim, to the army, opposing the army of the enemies (जहत्यास्त्याज्याया:शत्रुसेनाया: इमां विरोधिनीं सेनाम् —Daya.). Legend regards Jahnu a maharsi (He is a prince of the lunar dynasty in the Puranas).

20. Jahusam, movement of vehicles (जहुषां गन्तव्यानामिदं गमनम् —Daya.). Legend regards him as a king; about him nothing is known. See also VII. 71.5.

21. Vasa, in one's control (स्वाधीनताम् —Daya.); legend regards him a ṛsi receiving daily presents up to one thousand in number.

22. Sarasya, of the one from the side of opposition or killer (हिंसकस्य सकाशात् —Daya.); Sara is also called arcatka, the one from the side of respectable persons of status (अर्चतः सत्कुर्वतः शिष्टानुकम्पकस्य —Daya.). In legend, a son of Ricitka; about him nothing is known.

Sayave, for Sayu; see I. 112.16.

23. Kṛsniyaya, the one attractive, or the one who attracts others; worthy of attraction.

Visvakaya, for the one, kind to every one.

Visnapvam, to the aspirations, received by a man of wisdom engrossed in learning (Daya.).

Legend regards all these three as ṛsis.

24. Rebham, see I. 112.5.

Hymn-117

3. Ṛbisat, the darkness of ignorance, which has shrouded the enlightenment (नष्टविद्याप्रकाशादविद्यारूपात् —Daya.). See Nir. VI. 35, i.e. Ṛbisam, अपगताभासं; अपहृताभासं; अन्तर्हितभासं; गतभासं वा; i.e. one whose lustre is gone, or taken away, or concealed, or lost.

4. Rebham, the admirers of true knowledge and virtues.

5. Tama, a synonym of ratri or night (Nigh. I. 7); rukma is gold or hiranya (Nigh. I. 2). For Dasra, see, I. 116.10; 16.

6. Madhunam, of water; madhu, a synonym of water (Nigh. I. 12).

Pajriyena, Kaksivata, for Pajra and Kaksivat, see I. 116.7 and for Nasatya, see I. 116.1-11.

7. Ghosa, (i) Laudatory words, (ii) the rest-places for cows etc. (Daya.). From tradition, we have Ghosa, the name of the daughter of Kaksivat; she was a leper, and therefore, unfit for marriage; in her advanced years, she prayed to the Asvins, who healed her leprosy and restored her to youth and beauty, so that she finally obtained a husband.

For Kṛsniyaya and for visnapvam, and for visvakaya see I. 116.23.

8. Syavaya, for the one wise or learned; in legend, he is a ṛsi with black leprosy, cured by the Asvins and then married.

Narsadaya, the dimunitive of nṛsad, which means one pertaining to men or people or leaders. Nṛsad, in legend, is supposed to be the name of a ṛsi, about whom nothing is known.

Kanva, a man of wisdom; the name of a ṛsi also, supposed to be blind in tradition, but his blindness is not adverted to in any of his hymns hitherto met with (Wilson).

9. Pedu, see I. 116.6.

10. Pajra, see I. 116.17.

11. Sunoh, of the son; perhaps the son of the jar (कुम्भात्-प्रसूत), according to Sayana (not in the text), thus alluding to the ṛsi Agastya of the mythology.

Vipraya, men of wisdom (traditionalists refer to ṛsi Bharadvaja).

Agastye, for noble actions; amongst the well known behaviours (अगस्तिषु ज्ञातव्येषु व्यवहारेषु साधूनि कर्माणि —Daya.).

For Vispala, see I. 112.10; 116.15.

12. Kavyasya, the work of a poet; according to traditionalists, the son of Kavi, i.e. Usanas.

13. For Cyavana, see I. 116.10; for Nasatya, see I. 116.1.

14. For Tugra, see I. 116.3 and for Bhujyu. see I. 112.6, I. 112.20 and I. 116.3. For Tugra the other references are I. 117.15; VI. 20.8; 26.4; VI. 62.6; and X. 49.4.

For Bhujyu, we have I. 112.6; 20; 116.3-5; 117.14; 119.4; VI.

27.4; VI. 62.6; VII. 68.7; 69.7; VIII. 22.2; 46.20; X. 40.7; 65.12; 95.8; 106.4; 143.5.

16. Jayusa, see I. 117.16; VI. 62.7; X. 39.13; by the one giving the glory of victory (जयप्रदेन; also जयशीलौ —Daya.).

Visvacah, of the enemy with numerous crooked ways. Visvanc is, in mythology, called an asura, whose son you kill with poison (विषेण) i.e. with poisoned arrow (Sayana).

17, 18. Ṛjrasva, see I. 116.16.

20. Dasra, see I. 112.24; 116.10; 16; 117.5; 20; 21; 118.6; 119.7; 120.4; 139.3; 4; 180.5; 182.3; IV. 43.4; VI. 69.7; VII. 68.1; VIII. 5.2; 22.17.

For Sayu, see I. 112.16; 116.22; 117.20; 118.8; VI.62.7; VII. 68.8 X. 39.13.

For Purumitra, see also X. 39.7; friends of many; in legend, the name of a raja (king).

21. Manusaya, for the rational beings, for men.

Aryaya, for the son of an arya, i. e. lord, for the children of a lord; one blessed with God. (Nir. VI. 26; Daya.).

This verse has been discussed by Yaska, in the Nirukta VI. 26; O Asvins, working wonders, sowing the grain, as it were, with a plough, milking food for man, blasting the impious foe with lightning, you made far-spreading light for the Arya.

Vṛka means a plough, so called from cutting. Langala (plough) is derived from the √लग्, to cling, or it is so called because it has a tail. Langala, a tail, is derived from the root √लग् to cling, or from √लंग्, to wave; or from √लम्ब्, to hang down; लाङ्गलं लगतेलङ्गतेर्लम्बतेर्वा (Nir. VI. 26.). Milking food for man. O fair ones ! blasting the impious foe (dasyu) with lightning or with (a flood) of water. Arya means the son of the lord (Nir. VI. 26).

Aryaya, विदुषे, to the sage, that is, to, or upon, Manu (Sayana erroneously thinks that manusa is a synonym of Manu).

22. Tvastram, a person, readily becoming adept in all learning

(Daya.). Tvaṣṭṛ is so called because it pervades quickly, say the etymologists (त्वष्टा तूर्णमश्नुत); or it may be derived from √त्विष् दीप्तौ, meaning to shine, or from √त्वक्ष्, meaning to do. (त्विषेर्वा स्यात् दीप्तिकर्मण:, त्वक्षतेर्वा स्यात् करोतिकर्मण: —Nir. VIII. 13).

24. Vadhrimati, see I. 116. 13; knowledge leading to prosperity (Daya.); wife of a ṛsi (Sayana); see I. 116. 13.

Hirnyahasta, one possessing gold, or the one possessing knowledge and prosperity like a hand. (Daya.).

Syavam, one properly educated (Daya.); see also X. 65. 12. According to the legend, Syava was cut into three pieces by the asuras, but these pieces were reunited into one by the Asvins.

Hymn-118

For verse 11, see Nir. VI. 7.

For Dasras (3) Nasatyas (4), daughter of the Sun (सूर्यस्य दुहिता) (5) Vandana, Rebha, Tugra, Cyavana (6); Atri, Kanva (7); Sayu (8), Vispala, pedu (9), see hymns 112, 116 and 117. In this hymn, they have been noticed more summarily.

Hymn-119

2. Urjani, in mythology, a name of Surya, daughter of the Sun; the bold policy of State (पराक्रमयुक्ता नीति:—Daya.).

3. Makhah, sacred benevolent acts like yajnas. (Daya.).

4. For Bhujyu, see I. 112 and I. 116, worthy of enjoyment (Daya.).

Divodasa, for the giver of enlightenment; for the leader of the army (Daya.). For Divah dasa, see I. 112.14; I. 116.18; I. 119. 4; I. 130.7; 10; II. 19.6; IV. 26.3; IV. 30.20; VI. 16.5; 19; 26.5; 31.4; 43.1; 47.22; 23; 61.1; VII. 18.25; IX. 61.2. For Rebha; Atri; Sayu; Vandana (6); Dasras (7) Ausija, Dahyanc (9), and Pedu (10), see hymns I. 112; 116; and 117.

Hymn-120

For Dasras, Ghosa, see hymns I. 112, 116, 117.

For Bhṛgu, see I. 58.6; I. 60.1; 1. 71.4; I. 120.5; I. 127.7; I. 143. 4; and other Mandalas.

5. Bhṛgu is one with matured experience and enlightenment (bhṛgavane, यो भृगु: परिपक्वधीर्विद्वानिवाचरति तस्मिन्—Daya.).

6. Takavanasya, of one stumbling; one instructed in knowledge (Daya.).

Hymn-121

4. Manusasya, of a rational being, of a man; of a descendent of Manu (Sayana).

7. Vanadhiti, a hatchet to cut down the trees of a forest; a collection of water (vana=water); or clouds.

Pari-rodhana goh—Sayana renders it as an attachment of the animal to the stake, (पशो: रोधनाय, यूपे नियोजनाय परिभवति समर्थो भवति—Sayana).

Rodhana, for protection (Daya.); pari—from all sides (Daya.); goh, cow.

9. Divah asmanam upanitam, brought the thunderbolt or vajra from heaven; it might refer to tvasṭṛ.

9. For Ṛbhu and Kutsa, refer to hymns I. 112, 116, 117.

10. Susnasya, of the exploiter enemy (शोषकस्य शत्रो: —Daya.).

Phaligam, a synonym of cloud (Nigh. I. 10)

13. Etasah, a trained good horse; a synonym of horse (Nigh. I. 14) (One of the horses of the sun).

Karttam, a synonym of well or kupa, (Nigh. III. 23)

14. Abhika, a synonym of battle or sangrama (Nigh. II. 17).

Sravas, a synonym of grains, or anna (Nigh. II. 7) (Sravana).

IN MEMORY OF

VED RATAN MOHAN

Col. Ved Ratan Mohan, M.P. was born at Rawalpindi on July 30, 1920. He graduated from the Punjab University and later took his Master of Commerce Degree from Delhi University.

Shri Ved Ratan Mohan's father Shri N.N. Mohan was a prominent industrialist and a generous philanthropist. Shri Ved Ratan Mohan made his own memorable contribution to the success of the enterprises in which his family was interested. He also took active interest in public life and supported many worthwhile causes.

In 1961, the honorary rank of Captain was conferred on Shri Ved Ratan Mohan; in 1966, he became a Lieutenant Colonel in the Territorial Army; in 1972, the honorary rank of Colonel in the Territorial Army was conferred on him.

He was elected as Deputy Mayor of the Municipal Corporation, in Lucknow. Later he was elected to the office of the Mayor. In 1964, he was nominated as a Member of the Uttar Pradesh Legislative Council. In 1967, he was awarded Padama Shri. In 1971, he became the recipient of the Padma Bhushan Award. In 1972, he was elected to Rajya Sabha, the Upper House of Indian Parliament, from Uttar Pradesh.

He died on July 28, 1973, deeply mourned and widely lamented.

He had travelled extensively and had a wide range of interests and accomplishments. Photography, painting, music and poetry had a claim on him. Equally, he gave generously of himself to the solution of public problems and to personal hardships of individuals in distress. He was deeply interested in Indian culture and in educational institutions as vehicles of India's cultural renaissance and socio-economic reconstruction. The Vedas and their message energised his inspiration and impelled him to consecrated action for human welfare.

Ved Ratan Mohan

Foreword

The Vedas enshrine the cosmic vision and vitality of our ancestors and epitomise a living legacy of divine inspiration, intuition and insight.

The glory of the Vedas is their universal and timeless quality.

The subtle and symbolic invocations of the Sruti and the mystic and melodic music of the celestial hymns have hallowed human consciousness through trackless centuries with a sublime glow.

The Vedas exemplify a carefully nurtured and elaborately systematized oral tradition which is unrivalled in the annals of civilization.

The evocative poetry of joyous and spontaneous affirmation of life and nature, the unravelling explorations of the seers into the terrestrial and transcendental destiny of mankind, the pervasive immanence and the pristine omnipresence of primeval reality and primordial matter, and the wisdom and philosophy of Moral and Social Order in an harmonious equilibrium unfold the luminous realm of the spirit of the Vedas.

The Vedas are unique in their perspective of time and space.

Early in the history of human civilization, the Vedas proclaimed the essential unity of mankind, untrammelled by geographical barriers and tribal parochialism.

The Vedas declared the enduring filial allegiance of Man to Mother Earth: माता भूमि: पुत्रोऽहं पृथिव्या:......अथर्व.12.I.12.

The Vedas articulated the essential equality and intrinsically equal dignity of men and nations and the need for cooperative effort for common benefit: अज्येष्ठासो अकनिष्ठास एते, सभ्रातरो वावृधु: सौभगाय । ऋक्.5.60.5.

The Vedas cautioned against recrimination, jealousy and ill-will among the human kindred: मा भ्राता भ्रातर द्विक्षन् मा स्वसारमुत स्वसा........अथर्व 3.30.3.

The Vedas aimed and aspired for an ambiance of unfailing and ubiquitous friendship: मित्रस्याहं चक्षुषा सर्वाणि भूतानि समीक्षे । मित्रस्य चक्षुषा समीक्षामहे । यजु. 36.18.

These noble thoughts made the culture of the Vedas the first and foremost foundation of the edifice of universal values: सा प्रथमा संस्कृतिर्विश्ववारा: यजु. 7.14.

These enduring verities of the Vedas are not a relic of the past, nor are they the exclusive preserve or the sole inheritance of Indians and Indo-Aryans. They belong to the common heritage of humanity and are relevant in our contemporary world and in our age. We owe it to ourselves and to the peoples and the nations of the world to share this precious heritage and to disseminate its message and meaning.

It is the proud privilege of Veda Pratisthana to be the chosen instrument of the monumental project for preparing and presenting a readable and systematic modern translation of all the four Vedas. The Veda Pratisthana has had the credentials and the capacity to attempt this ambitious task because it was founded on the deep understanding and encyclopaedeic erudition of Swami Satya Prakashji, an eminent scientist and a distinguished professor before he became a parivrajaka, the firm financial support and the bounteous benefaction of Narendra Mohan Foundation, an eloquent and tangible testament of the Mohan family's liberal and public spirited disposition, and of the intrepid faith, fortitude, vision and dedication of the late Shri Prakash Vir Shastri.

The munificence of Major Kapil Mohan and his family and their deep devotion to the cause of Vedic learning enabled the Veda Pratisthana to embark on this noble enterprise. It was Major Kapil Mohan's resolve to raise a truly meaningful memorial in the form of a new edition of the Vedas in remembrance of his elder brother, the late Col. Ved Ratna Mohan that led the Narendra Mohan Foundation to offer its generous and unsparing financial assistance for this project. We acknowledge our debt of gratitude to Major Kapil Mohan and to Narendra Mohan Foundation. We also take this opportunity to pay our tribute to the memory of Col. Ved Ratna Mohan whose life was a superb saga of service and an inexhaustible treasury of goodwill.

The late Shri Prakash Vir Shastri was the main architect of Veda Pratisthana. It was to him that we owed the initial organization, the basic conception and the purposeful momentum of the project. Indeed, we are only trying to translate his dream into a reality. An eminent and gifted parliamentarian, whose cascading eloquence, sparkling wit, mature wisdom and intrinsic goodness had a singular charm, Prakash Vir Shastri was an articulate exponent and a selfless missionary of the fundamental values of India's creative and spiritual culture. Spun and woven with the warp and woof of Indian sensitivity and perception, the tapestry of his life and work was as authentic as it was inspiring. He shunned the pettiness and parochialism of politics and strove to reinforce our national life with the tensile strength of our quintessential heritage. He lived and worked for national goals. In national politics he was the ambassador of the larger cultural claims on life. In his tragic and untimely death, Mother India lost an illustrious son who distinguished himself not by the office he held nor by his wealth or material acquisitions but by his dedicated and singleminded service to the cause of the nation. In his death, Veda Pratisthana lost its moving spirit, regained mainly because his memory is a motive force. We savour the exhilarating fragrance and see the inspiring and exhorting presence of his personality, pervasive, permeating and perdurable, in the fruition of this project and pay our affectionate homage to his everlasting memory.

Preface

The Vedas are the Word of God. At the very beginning of the Creation, man received knowledge of the Vedas. The Ṛgveda is the most ancient of all the holy scriptures in the world.

Knowledge of the Vedas is not intended for a particular race or country. God revealed this knowledge for the greatest good of mankind. This noble objective is reflected in the following words of the Vedic sages :

> May all be happy and rid of diseases,
> May all have a happy and harmonious life,
> May nobody ever be afflicted with suffering.

The Vedas have been translated into several languages. Scholars like Griffith, Wilson and Max Müller have written commentaries on the Vedas in English. But the need for bringing out an unconventional and standard translation of the Vedas has been felt for quite sometime. The task, however, involved dedication, hard work and considerable financial resources.

Col. Ved Ratna Mohan, ex-M.P., was a promising youngman, the scion of a family which had implicit faith in the Vedas. His brilliant career was cut short by untimely death in 1973. His father, late Shri Narendra Mohan, was a leading industrialist of India. Devoted to social service, he took keen interest in the dissemination and distribution of religious literature. He had unshakable faith in God. Daily he would perform yajna and once in a year he would perform this on a big scale when all the mantras of one of the four Vedas would be recited. He had named his eldest son Ved Ratna (Jewel of the Vedas). He had desired the late Ved Ratna to do some service to the Vedas. But fate had willed otherwise. Col. Ved Ratna died before he could fulfil his father's wish.

His younger brother Major Kapil Mohan, who has great reverence for the Vedas like his father, made the noble resolve to get all the four Vedas translated into English and publish them on behalf of the Narendra Mohan Foundation in the sacred memory of his elder brother. This Foundation was endowed by the sons of the late Shri Narendra Mohan, the founder of the Mohan Industries, in accordance with the wishes of their father. A hospital, a college, and several other charitable institutions devoted to public service are being run by the Foundation.

The task of rendering the four Vedas into English was entrusted to the Veda Pratishthana by the Foundation. Dr. Govardhan Lal Dutta, a famous educationist and Head of the Pratishthana, requested the Vedic scholar Svami Satya Prakash Sarasvati to undertake the highly onerous responsibility. Indeed one could think of no other scholar better qualified than Svami Satya Prakashji to accomplish this task. I am happy that Svamiji was kind enough to accede to the request. He is devoting most of his time to the translation work though he is a parivrajaka, a peripatetic monk. In this task, he is collaborating with Pandit Satyakam Vidyalankar.

Thanks are particularly due to Shri Vishwanath for his unstinted cooperation in the excellent printing of this work. No words would be adequate to express my warm appreciation and grateful thanks to Major Kapil Mohan, Svami Satya Prakashji and other colleagues and co-workers of the Veda Pratisthana who have generally helped in the accomplishment of this sacred task.

Our labours would be fully rewarded if through this English translation of the four Vedas, attempted for the first time in India, the divine message enshrined in the Vedas impregnates human consciousness everywhere.

BOOK ONE

122

O earnestly eager priests, may you dedicate the protective sacrificial offerings to the reward-showering cosmic powers. Let us praise him who, with his heroic followers, as with shafts from a quiver, has expelled the evil spirits from heaven; and may we praise the vital principles who reside between heaven and earth. 1

May dawn following the night of varied aspects and character come to promote the first invocation like a wife to the first call. May dawn, shining beautifully with the brightness of the rising sun, and like a youthful damsel decorated with golden ornaments and clad in finely woven garment, be pleased to come and participate in joy. 2

May the sun, the circumambient divinity and the dispeller of darkness, grant us delight. May the wind, the bringer of rain, grant us delight. May you, O thunder and clouds, sharpen our intellects, and may all the Nature's glories show us favour. 3

I, belonging to the traditions of a poet, worship those ever-moving and protecting twin-divines with all my zeal for the attainment of illumination. O priests, giorlfy the fire-divine, who without fail gives proper reward to all our actions and praise the sky and heaven who are like the parents of the rustling waters. 4

As a singer addresses loud praises to you, O twin divines for the remedy of his pains, so I, the poet devotee, am singing loud praises for your invocation. I offer praises amongst others to the divine nourisher, who is bounteous. In particular, I proclaim the munificence of the fire-divine. 5

Hear my prayers, O source of light and bliss, and hear the same from all sides in the prayer hall. May the mighty river, the renowned bestower of gifts, be attentive to my prayer fertilizing our broad fields with water 6

O divine source of light and bliss, we praise you for providing hundreds of cattle to the strong and valorous warriors fighting in the war with swift-moving horses. And may the divines, seated in their famous and splendid chariots, come to us. 7

I praise the treasures of that opulent assembly of the divines. May we, men who are blessed with excellent descendants, partake of them together. The assembly conferring abundant food upon the strong and valorous has been my benefactor, and has made me the master of horses and chariots. 8

The man who does you wrong, O the source of light and bliss, who injures you in any way, who does not present you with oblations, contracts for himself sickness in his heart, whereas the righteous person gains all the favours by worship. 9

Such a worshipper, wondrously urged onwards by well-disciplined horses, endowed with surpassing strength, famed amongst heroes, liberal in gifts, and bold in his steps, moves like a hero, and defeats his adversaries in all combats. 10

Come to us, therefore, O beloved immortal cosmic powers, to the invocation of this worshipping devotee and attend to the mental faculties of our inner realm. May these hastening through our body and mind applaud the offerings of this devotee who acknowledges no protector other than you. 11

The enlightened sense-organs declare: we present wealth offerings with vigour upon this cosmic vital force who invokes us to partake in the offerings. May all the enligh-tened senses, in whom splendours and riches abound, bestow adundant food on these solemn occasions. 12

May they say, let us be delighted with the tenfold offerings when the worshippers approach, presenting the enjoyments of twice five (five sense-organs and five action-organs). What can the speedy mind and bright intellect do ? These overpowering cosmic powers will subjugate the desires of men. 13

May all the divine powers favour us with a child decorated with gold earrings and jewel necklaces. May the brilliant divines, out of regard for our oblations and prayers, accept our oblations offered with spontaneity. 14

O welfare-workers and men of virtues, the four sons (the learned academicians, the men of defence, the producers of nation's wealth and the labour class) of the state and the three components of administration (the head, public servants and people) are to be taken care of. May your spacious and bright chariot (of sound administration) be ever radiant (of peace and prosperity) like the sun. 15

123

The vast chariot of dawn is yoked. The immortals are seated in it. Dawn, great and venerable, has emerged from deep darkness yearning to illuminate the hearts of men. 1

Before all the living world is she awake, triumphing over the transient darkness; she is wonderful and bounteous. Like a damsel is she, ever young and ever new. She glances from lofty heights. May she be the first to come on all our mornings, to join in prayers. 2

O brilliant, nobly-born dawn, as you are bestowing good fortune on all mortals, may the divine sun, the houshold friend of us all, through you recommend us to God as being sinless. 3

Each day, the fairy dawn visits every house, assuming new and splendid forms. May she, bounteous and bright, always diffuse light and cherish the first and best of our offerings. 4

Dawn, endowed with truth, is the sister of the effulgent sun and the supreme luminary. May she be praised in the beginning of our worship. And may he, the evil-doer, be subdued. May we conquer him with the aid of our triumphant chariot through her assistance. 5

Let sweet hymns be sung; let holy offerings be poured out; let ceremonial fires be kindled in all their brilliance, for the refulgent dawn is revealing the lovely treasures lying hidden under cover of darkness. 6

Night and dawn march together different in form; whilst the one recedes, the other comes to the fore. Coming in succession, the one covers the gloom of the surroundings, the other shines with her brilliant chariot. 7

The same today, the same tomorrow, untarnished dawn precedes the far course of the sun, the supreme luminary, by thirty yojanas (leagues), and each in succession revolves in its assigned position. 8

Proclaiming the first position of the day, dawn, who is fair and shines white, ascends, emerging resplendent out of the gloomy darkness. Cleansed by the radiance of the sun, the lady dawn breaks not the divine law of order, and comes to the appointed place day by day. 9

Manifesting your splendour proudly like a maiden, you come, O divine dawn, to the worshipper of the supreme God. And smiling beautifully like a youthful bride, you reveal the splendour of your body before the worshippers. 10

Like a young bride bathed and bedecked by her mother, you show forth your splendour. O auspicious dawn, just as other dawns did not diminish in their glory, may you also continue to shine vividly in the same manner. 11

Full of vigour and possessed of light, the beloved of all, you are ever with the rays of the sun dispelling darkness. Dawn departs and comes back again assuming many auspicious forms that promise a happy future. 12

Obedient to the reign of the law eternal, O divine dawn, may you inspire in us all that is propitious and commendable. May you be with us today when invoked. May you bestow abundant riches in our households as well as in the households of the affluent dedicated to service. 13

The refulgent dawn descends. Our sacrificial fire is kindled. The sun is rising, casting around its radiance. May the sun, the prime source, bring us wealth for our use and light for the activities of the bipeds and quadrupeds. 1

Truly following the eternal cosmic law and diminishing the days of man's life one by one, this dawn, the last of those endless dawns that have gone by, and the first of those yet to follow, shines forth brightly. 2

Clad in effulgence, this daughter of heaven has appeared in the east as on days before. Like one who knows well the regions, she goes along the path of the sun, faithfully following the quarters of the horizon. 3

She is seen near, as if she were the bosom of the sun. She manifests her splendour like a singer of a new song. She, like a matron, wakens those that are asleep, and comes again and again and without fail. 4

There in the eastern half of the luminous regions, the mother of the early rays has revealed herself. She is spreading herself far and wide in all directions. Seated on the laps of her parents (heaven and earth), she fills them with loving radiance. 5

In this very manner most bounteous dawn shines for all and gives them the joy of sight. She ignores not the stranger, nor does she ignore her kindred. Proudly manifested in her stainless person, bright dawn transcends all things, big and small. 6

Dawn comes to the west, like a woman without a brother returning to her father's home, or like one going to reclaim her property. Dawn smiles and unmasks her beauty as a well-attired loving wife does before her husband. 7

The younger sister (the night) vacates her place for her elder sister (the day), and having made it known to her, she departs. Dawn adorns her beauty shining forth with sunrays, like women trooping to the festal meeting. 8

Of all those sisters who have gone before, a later one comes everyday in succession. Now may these future dawns shine brightly for us blessed with wealth like the former ones. 9

O bounteous dawn, may you waken the liberal devotees; let the faithless misers sleep on with none to wake them. Shine you, O dawn, with riches for the liberal givers of oblations. O inspirer of sweet voices and the diminisher of one's age, may you shine for the old and enrich the poets. 10

This young damsel has beamed forth for us in the east; she is yoking to her chariot a team of purple rays. Assuredly now she shines far and wide and dispels darkness. Let her effulgence come forth. Let the sacred fire be kindled in every house. 11

As the birds fly out of their nests, so do at the advent of dawn men go out of their houses to toil for their sustenance. O bright dawn, may you bring plentiful wealth to them, and also to those who work while staying at home. 12

Thus, you, worthy of praise, have been glorified by my hymns. And O dawns, favourably disposed as you are towards us, may we through your grace acquire wealth that is thousandfold and a hundredfold. 13

Every morning, the Sun bestows excellent wealth on all of us. The prudent one amongst us knows its worth and treasures it. Thereby he nourishes his progeny and his own life and, blessed with good and brave children, he spends his life in enjoyment and usefulness. 1

May such a person be blessed with excellent cows, sheep and horses and may resplendent God bestow plentiful food on him, who having got up early in the morning so liberally grants wealth to the deserving guest, as if applying snares to the game. 2

I have come this day in the morning in a chariot filled with riches for you, O Lord, with a request that you grant me a dutiful and virtuous son. May you be exhilarated with the request of mine made in devotion. Bless me with prosperity worthy of the head of a flourishing race. 3

To him who worships, and to him who undertakes celebrations, may blissful rivers and milch-cows send forth streams of milk. To him, who both propitiates (his progenitors) and serves (mankind), may plenteous streams of clarified butter flow from all sides. 4

He who gives food generously to the needy ascends to the top of heaven. He is exalted to the status of divines. To him the waters and the rivers flow in stream. To him the earth yields treasures in abundance. 5

These wonderful rewards are for those who give pious donations. For the donors of gifts the suns shine in heaven; they attain immortality and prolong their worldly lives. 6

With delight, I representing the people, compose these lively praises of a king, the head of a state, who lives on the bank of a mighty river and who, desiring renown, performs a thousand noble deeds for the benefit of the public. 1

I, a representative of the public, accept each day grants of one hundred gold coins and one hundred horses bestowed by the head of a state. I, a craftsman, accept one hundred bulls from that majestic king. I spread his imperishable fame in the heavenly world. 2

Standing by my side are ten bay-chariots drawn by bay horses given by the sovereign head of a state and carrying the ladies of my house. Then comes a herd of one thousand and sixty cows. The craftsman accepts them with gratitude towards the close of the day. 3

Forty tawny horses carry in front the wealth consisting of ten chariots and a thousand presents. Let the followers of a craftsman, born in the family of noble men, clean the coursers that are fiery and decorated with golden trappings. 4

O my brethren kinsmen, after the gifts already spoken of, I accept a prior grant for you of three and eight harnessed chariots, and valuable cattle. May you all attain prosperity and property, having lived together with affection as family members in one house. 5

The benevolent measures, applied with determination and firmness, would sustain a state, and keep enemies away as under the fear of corporeal punishment and give to me, the dedicated worker, hundreds of benefits. 6

[The State speaks to the people in ecstasy:]
"Approach me, listen to me, deem me not immature; I am hairy everywhere, like an ewe of an enchanted hilly tract." 7

I venerate the divine fire, the inspirer of pious works, the munificent, the giver of dwellings, the source of strength. He is aware of all that exists; like a sage he is endowed with knowledge; He is the divine regenerator of worship. Through his lofty blaze produced by the burning of liquefied butter which is offered in oblations with his flames, he invokes the Nature's bounties. 1

We, the institutors of the fire ceremony, invoke you, with prayers, O fire-divine, you who are most deserving of worship, and are the eldest fire of the fire-priests. And with prayers recited by the priests we adore you, who, like the revolving sun, are the invoker of the divine powers on behalf of men. You are bedecked with shaggy flames, and are endowed with strength. 2

Verily, that fire-divine, shining far with brilliant vigour, is the destroyer of foes. He like a hatchet cuts down trees. What is not solid and stable melts like water at his touch. Vanquishing the enemies, He stands firm and, like an archer, does not retreat. 3

Like wealth made over to a sage, they have made substantial donations to Him.By resplendent means He grants us grace so that we may preserve ourselves. The worshipper presents gifts to the fire-divine for preservation. He who accepts the offerings made to Him and consumes them as rapidly as He consumes forests. The standing corn ripens by His potency, and He consumes the harmful insects by the same potency. 4

Let us then place near the altar the sacrificial food for Him who shines more by night than by day. We offer it to Him who has more power at night than in the day. The libations are to be made to this fire-divine in the same way as the father's fortified house is made over to his son. These undying fires, discriminating between the edible and non-edible, grant protection. And accepting what is edible, they become exempt from decay; they do not die out. 5

He roars aloud like a thunderstorm in the course of the sanctified rites. This fire is to be worshipped and to be adored for victory over the hosts of enemies. He is the receiver of oblations and is the standard-bearer of the sacred works of the selfless. He deserving of veneration, consumes the oblations. Therefore, all men for their own good pursue the path of the fire-divine. Verily, they follow his path, verily, men follow his virtuous path for the sake of happiness. 6

The descendants of men of mature intellect celebrate the fire-divine in both his forms (fire in the sun and fire from the wood). They glorify him, and pay him homage and proclaim his praises. The descendants of men of mature wisdom churn him out (from the wood) for worship. The radiant fire-divine is the guardian of all these treasures. May the divine-fire, receiver of sacrifices, lovingly accept (our oblations). 7

We invoke you, the protector of all people, you who are the common Lord of all houses, to enjoy our offerings. He is the true carrier of our oblations. We invoke you, the guest of men, to whom all these immortals apply for their sustenance, as a son to a father. May all divinities come to receive our oblations,—may the divinities come. 8

O fire-divine, you, who destroy enemies by your strength, and the possessor of splendour most fiery, are born for the sake of all sacred works and worship. You are born for the sake of divine sacrifices. Your delight is most fiery and your valour is most victorious; hence the sacrificers wait upon you like envoys upon a prince, O undecaying one. 9

May your invocations, O priests, become acceptable to the fire-divine, who is deserving of laudation and who has the might to overcome the strong and who is awakened at dawn. May the priest be grateful to the fire-divine as if to a giver of cattle. The presenter of an oblation goes assiduously to every altar with the same expectations and invokes the fire, the first to come amongst the divines, in the same way as the adept chanters glorify their worldly patrons with praises. 10

O fire-divine, may you become visible and come close to us and, partake with benign intent of the sacrificial food along with the divines; bestow upon us abundant riches. Most mighty divine fire, may you make us illustrious so that we may behold and enjoy this earth, and may we be the possessors of excellent progeny. May you give us, your devotees, life's breath and may you destroy our enemies with your might and fury. 11

The fire-divine is the invoker of divine virtues, the assiduous promoter of sacred deeds. He is generated by devotees for the holy work like those who are born for benevolent actions. He bestows blessings on him who seeks His friendship, and is like wealth to an inspirer. He is the unobstructed offerer of oblations in the cosmic world; He is seated, surrounded by His divine priests like powers, on the holy place; He is, verily, seated on the holy place. 1

We propitiate that messenger of cosmic sacrifice by treading the path of truth, by reverential salutations with intense dedication. He accepts our offerings, and through his beneficence departs not. He is that divine fire, whom the divine cosmic wind brings from afar for the service of men,—brings from afar. 2

The divine fire, who is ever to be hymned, is the giver of food and the showerer of benefits. He comes quickly upon our invocation to the altar of the earth. He is vigorous and loud-voiced; virile and loud sounding; he travels fast when incited by praise. He manifests himself a hundred fold by his flames. The divine-fire comes quickly to the place of worship with abodes in high lands close by—in the high lands far away. 3

That fire-divine is the performer of excellent acts; he is like a priest in every house ; he takes care of worship and ceremonies and with wisdom takes care of worship. He bestows rewards on persons who are desirous of food, and he accepts all the offered gifts for the good of the worshipper. In sacred ceremonies he feeds abundantly on butter; he is born as a guest,—and this fire, the bearer of oblations, is born as an ordainer. 4

All devotees offer in holy rites food for His satisfaction in the blazing flames of divine fire; like the grains that are to be enjoyed by learned men, and like the food to be enjoyed by the needy. The worshipper presents gifts to Him according to the extent of his opulence. The divine-fire preserves us when we are oppressed by sin. He saves us from misery overwhelming, and from curse and from overpowering malevolence. 5

The universal, mighty, imperious divine fire holds his treasure in his right hand; and like the sun, he stretches forth his hand and stretches forth as if with the desire of obtaining oblations—but not for the wicked. Verily O fire-divine, you bear the oblation for every one of the righteous who desires it. You grant blessings to every benevolent pious worshipper and open for him the gates of heaven. 6

The divine-fire is a most amiable friend in human infirmity through the means of sacred acts like a lord victorious and like a dear lord in sacred rites. He alights upon the oblations of men when placed upon the altar. He preserves us from floods and from havocs caused by other natural forces. 7

The devotees praise the divine-fire, who is the invoker of divinities, the possessor of wealth, the beloved and benevolent. They have recourse to Him as to a sovereign; they have recourse to Him as the bearer of oblations. The divine fire is the life of all living beings and He knows all things. He is the offerer of oblations as well as the object of worship. He is also the sage. The sacred priests, desirous of affluence, sing His praises to obtain His protection. Desirous of affluence, they recite His praises in their hymns. 8

O resplendent Lord, inspirer of sacred acts, you fulfil the desires (of the devotee); you carry your chariot to him. O infallible one—you carry it ahead. And without delay you enable him to fulfil his desires; and you become wealth to such a one seeking food. O Lord, you who are quick and faultless, may you listen to the prayers of us the worshippers,—as ever of the worshippers. 1

Hear our invocation, O resplendent Lord. You have to be invoked by heroes reverentially in all battles for challenging and subjugating the enemies. You are the one, who, aided by heroes, seizes benefits from them and distributes it among the devotees. As the heroes take help from the swift war-horses, similarly even the mighty warriors propitiate the resplendent Lord for victory. 2

O resplendent Lord, you are the subduer of our adversaries; you fill the clouds and cause rain. O the brave one, you drive off every fleeting and transient cloud. And abandon it only when exhausted. For such a glorious deed, O Lord, I offer praise to you, the brilliant, the terror to the wicked, the life-breath of all beings, the most benevolent, the most widespread, and the bestower of bliss. 3

We desire, O resplendent Lord, to be present at the place of your sacrificial acts. You are our friend, the ally of your worshippers, the patient acceptor of viands. O Lord-supreme, may you guard our holy rites for our preservation, for in whatsoever contests you be engaged, no enemy, whom you oppose, would prevail against you; you prevail on every enemy whom you oppose. 4

O brave Lord, subdue the arrogance of every one of your adversaries by your protective and heroic powers which are as radiant as the fierce flames of burning wood. Guide us, O hero, as you have guided our forefathers, for you are honoured by all. You sustain all the world. May you remove all the sins of man and be close to us. 5

May I be competent to utter the praises of the blissful Lord who is vigorous, praiseworthy, like any other divine, and who goes with food abounding to every venerable rite. He is the destroyer of cruel people at each venerable rite. May that blissful one repress with chastisement the malevolence of him who reviles us; let the thief fall and perish, like water in a gutter running down a pit. 6

We glorify you, O the source of affluence, with inspiring hymns; we solicit that wealth which bestows vigour, which is agreeable, durable, and the support of progeny. May we, through surging praises, ever be possessed of abundant food. We know it is difficult to honour you adequately. May we attain communion with the resplendent Lord by true and earnest invocations,—by offering glorious invocations. 7

The resplendent Lord is powerful in the discomfiture of the malevolent by his self-glorifying aids, for us and for all. He is the destroyer of the malevolent and impetuous host sent against us by destructive forces to destroy us. It has been itself destroyed by Him; may this force of evil not reach us; may it, approach ing with speed, not reach us. 8

O resplendent Lord, come to us with abundant riches by a path free from evil and by a path unobstructed by cruel people. Be with us when afar ; be with us when near. Favour us, whether afar or nigh, with the objects we desire. Protect us by giving us adequate and desired aid ; protect us ever by your blessirgs. 9

O resplendent Lord, sustain us with the wealth that takes man across calamity; may we remain near you, O brave one radiant like sun, for our protection. O most potent protector and immortal Lord, ascend the same chariot, and come hither; O possessor of the thunder-bolt, come and repel anyone asasiling us. Turn your fury against the cruel ones, O possessor of the thunder-bolt. 10

O deservedly lauded Lord, preserve us from suffering; for, verily, you are ever the chastiser of the malevolent : you are the slayer of the wicked. You are the preserver of the virtuous, such as I am; the progenitor, the creator you have ever been an asylum of the needy; O you the destroyer of evils, an asylum for all men. 11

Come to us from afar, O resplendent Lord, the protector of good ; like a king, the protector of good, who comes back to one's home. We, the producers of food, are invoking you with our devotional prayers. Like sons inviting their father, we are inviting you for the procurement of food,—you the generous one for the procurement of food. 1

Accept our sweet devotional prayers that have been expressed by our thoughts and strewn as if with the sacred grass. Accept them with eagerness shown by a thirsty ox hastening towards a well,—as a very thirsty ox. May we be worthy of your loving, sweet and pleasing favours, and may your divine rays bring you hither, as the steeds convey the sun and as they carry him above the horizon day by day. 2

He, the Lord, finds out the stolen treasure, that has its abode in heaven and hidden like the nestlings of a bird in a rock, amidst a pile of vast rocks. Desiring to partake of the elixir, He the most vital, discovered the hiding place of the cows; and He, opened the closed doors of waters, shut up in the clouds,—the closed doors for food. 3

Grasping His sharp thunderbolt with both hands, the resplendent Lord, sharpened it to hurl it on His foes like the swift current of streams. He whetted it for the destruction of dark shrouds. He is fully endowed with strength, with energy and with might. O Lord, may you cut your enemies to pieces, as a wood-cutter cuts the trees of a forest,—you cut them to pieces as if with a hatchet. 4

Effortlessly you have created the rivers that flow to the sea, like the aurora of glory bearing you to sacrificial places, as those chariots who are proceeding on the way to battle. The streams flowing hither have gathered together their waters for a common purpose, like the cows that yield all things to man—that yield all things to people. 5

Men who are desirous of wealth have recited this praise of yours, as a resolute and provident man prepares a chariot for a journey; they have propitiated you for their good; glorifying thee, the resplendent Lord, as impetuous in conflicts, they have praised you as men praise a conqueror. We praise you for the acquirement of strength, wealth, and every kind of affluence, as they commend a courser for his good qualities in battle. 6

O resplendent Soul, dancing with delight in battle, you destroy ninety cities for the man in service of the learned. You destroy them with your sharp intellect, for the sake of the giver of offerings. For the sake of reverential man, the fierce Lord drives out the disrespectful person from the mountain, bestowing upon the brave men immense treasure, acquired by his prowess,—all kinds of wealth acquired by his prowess. 7

The resplendent Lord, the manifold protector of his votaries in battles, defends his virtuous worshipper in all conflicts that confer heaven; for the benefit of man he punished those who broke the law. He punishes people who indulge in sinful activities. As if burning with flame, he consumes the malignant; he utterly consumes him who delights in cruelty. 8

Endowed with increasing vigour, he hurls the wheel of law against the foes; and, with fury of anger, deprives them of speech; He, the sovereign king, deprives them of exitsence. When you, O saintly resplendent Lord, come from afar to the help of honest men, you come quickly, bearing all good things to us all the time, you come quickly. 9

Showerer of benefits, destroyer of the strongholds of enemies, propitiated by our new songs, may you reward us with gratifying blessings; glorified Lord, by the descendants of devoted servants of the learned, may you increase in power, like the sun in revolving days. 10

To sovereign Lord has verily bowed down the lofty cosmos, the source of all vital powers. To Him the wide earth has offered homage with precious treasures. With acceptable praises the worshipper has propitiated Him for the sake of prosperity. All the Divines, well pleased, have given precedence to the sovereign Lord; let all sacred work and worship of men be appropriated to the Lord; let all the offerings of men be presented to Him. 1

Hoping to partake of your gifts, your worshippers, one and all, seeking divine bliss, hasten to adore you in all their ceremonies. We meditate on you, the sustainer of our strength like a boat that bears passengers across an ocean; we mortals, indeed, propitiate him with hymns. 2

O Lord, the married couples, anxious to satisfy you and presenting oblations together, celebrate your worship for the sake of obtaining herds of cattle by offering you oblations. You know these couples are desirous of worldly prosperity and divine bliss. Then you display to your constant companion, the punitive justice, O resplendent Lord, the showerer of benefits. 3

Our forefathers have known your prowess, by which, O Lord, you destroy the perennial strongholds of the evil forces; you destroy them, humiliating their defenders. You chastise, Lord of strength, the mortal who does not perform noble acts; you deprive them of the blessings of the earth and waters; you take away these gifts from them. 4

O sovereign Lord, showerer of blessings, whereby, in your love and affection, you defend your worshippers, and whereby you defend those who are solicitous of your favour and desirous of your friendship, thereby they proclaim your valour on all sides. From you they obtain many many enjoyments. They receive and distribute wealth among themselves. 5

May the Lord be present at this our morning rite; may He be apprised of the oblation offered with due observances for the sake of obtaining divine bliss. And since, O dispenser of the punitive justice and showerer of benefits, you keep awake to destroy the malevolent, therefore, listen to the praises of a person like me, intelligent, though a novice; hear it from me who is still a novice. 6

O sovereign Lord, endowed with extreme strength, being exalted by our praises and being well-disposed towards us, enlighten the man who is sinful and unfriendly to us; punish each and every sinful man with your punitive justice. As you are quick to hear, listen to our prayer. Let every ill-intent, like a broken piece, be counteracted. Let ill-intent be counteracted. 7

O bounteous Lord, possessed of opulence, through your bounty as before and protected by you, may we overcome those who are arrayed in hostile acts against us. May we anticipate our assailants. When the auspicious day of sacred worship is near, may you be pleased to speak encouragingly to the presenter of the libation; may we choose you as the best performer and our chief in this sacred work. And may we increase our strength and adopt you as our leader in this battle, our leader in the battle. 1

In this combat which secures divine bliss, the Lord destroys the obstructing adversaries of that virtuous man who wakes at dawn and who is truthful in his dealings and who.celebrates his pious rites. Therefore, the Lord is worth to be adored by each man with humility and with head bowed. May your treasures, O Lord, come to us. May your benevolent gifts be auspicious to us. 2

O Lord, wherever an excellent altar has been constructed for the fire-ceremonial, there indeed the splendid gifts are dedicated to you as ever. Only you can guide us on the path of truth. May you declare it thus; men may thence behold you in the intermediate bright firmament by means of the rays of the sun. O Lord, you alone are the dispenser of truth and knowledge. You alone reveal the truth to such worshippers as live with you like your brother. 3

Your exploits, O Lord, are worthy to be glorified; now, verily, as always in the former times, when you break open the gate of knowledge for the sake of dedicated devotees, restoring to them their lost wisdom. Conquer for us, fight for us, as you always do for them; on behalf of those who present libations; may you subdue the faithless ones who offer no worship and rise against you. 4

When the brave Lord rightly judges men by their deeds, then in the struggle for sustenance they are enabled to acquire wealth and wisdom, to overcome their foes. They, desirous of fame, worship Him diligently. Then, accompanied by their children, they offer gifts and praises to Him, so that by their own strength they may overcome their foes. These pious and intelligent worshippers enjoy the divine bliss as if they dwell in the intimacy of the Lord Himself. 5

The Lord supreme and His strong powers, steady like mountains, are foremost in battles. They slay everyone who is arrayed against us; slay every such adversary with their strong will. The punitive justice pursues the adversary, however far, and brings about his destruction, even at the hiding-place to which he may have fled. O brave Lord, crush our enemies, and rend them asunder. 6

By sacred deeds I purify both heaven and earth. I burn down the wide realms of the land, the people of which do not repose faith in the resplendent Lord and who are wicked. Wherever the enemies have gathered they have been killed,—utterly destroyed; they sleep in a deep pit. 1

O wielder of punitive justice, having trampled on the heads of the malignant hosts, crush them with your wide-spreading foot,—with your vast widespreading foot. 2

Annihilate, O bounteous Lord, the troop of these wicked and malignant men; hurl them into the vile pit,—the vast and vile pit. 3

O Lord, you have destroyed such hosts by your assaults three times fifty (i.e. countless). This is a deed that is much praised by your devotees,—much praised by your devotees. 4

Strike down, O Lord, the yellow and the tawny-coloured, the frightfully yelling wicked; annihilate all the wretched men. 5

Cut down, O Lord supreme, the cruel and the wickeds. Here are our supplications. Verily (tormented by them) the heaven is in sorrow like the earth through terror. O wielder of punitive justice, the world is unhappy, as if caught in the flames of fire. Being most powerful, we request you to assail our adversaries with strong weapons and terrible blows, but kindly see that no injury is caused to your men. May you march forward, O invincible Lord, attended by the braves,—groups of three times seven braves. 6

Offering libations, the worshipper obtains a safe abode through his noble deeds and overpowers his manifold foes. He destroys the enemies of the divines, abounding with food, and, unsubdued by adversaries, he hopes to win infinite riches. To the devotee, who offers libations, the Lord grants bounteous wealth,—gives bounteous wealth. 7

May your swift and fast divine waves, bring you hither, the vital Lord, so that you may be the first to accept the sentiments of devotion. May our discriminating and sincere praises rise high to your standards. May you come with your aura of vitality for the devotional prayers presented to you; come, O vital Lord, to grant us the objects of our worship. 1

May our devotional loving sentiments of prayer, which are well-rendered, opportune and flowing out of our hearts in due season, be pleasing to you. May your divine waves bring you here, in this sacrificial hall, to accept our offerings. All pious and active worshippers praise you in this congregation with a view to obtaining your blessings. 2

The vital Lord yokes to his chariot of the aura of vitality his two unwearied cosmic red and purple breaths (incoming and outgoing), to bear the burden; for they are able to bear it. O vital Lord, arouse the intelligent sacrificer, as a gallant awakens his sleeping mistress; and light up heaven and earth; and light up the dawn, verily, the dawn to obtain prosperity. 3

For you, the brilliant dawns, rising from afar, spread their wide auspicious raimant in inviting rays,—the variegated and glorious rays; and for you, the eternal ambrosia-yielding cow grants all kinds of treasure. And you fetch water in the firmament from the rivers for the purpose of showering rain,—for the purpose of replenishing the rivers. 4

O vital Lord, the charming, loving and quick-flowing sentiments of devotion are addressed to you for your invocation, and they crave for your gracious blessings. Also, O vital Lord, even the timid and anxious worshipper praises you, for you are auspicious and capable of driving away misfortunes and miseries, and thus of defending us against calamities. And, as the reward of our righteousness, may you protect us from the fear of evil,—verily as the reward of our righteousness. 5

O vital Lord, preceded by none, you are entitled to be the first in accepting our libations; you are entitled to be invoked by our devotional prayers. May you accept oblations from the sinless and virtuous, and may you, like cattle, yield milk with cream for us,—milk and butter for us. 6

May you please be manifested in our hearts, O vital Lord; come with your thousands of waves of spirituality in response to our calls,—come with your hundreds of waves of spirituality. The learned people look to you as their reverential divine. You alone are entitled to worship and prayers. Sweet and loving expressions are being offered to to you for your invocation,—are offered here to receive from you your grace. 1

O vital Lord, we are offering you the sweet devotional prayers just as the sweetened herbal extract is prepared by pressing the plant between stones, filtered through cloth and received in a receptacle. Like that pure and brilliant elixir, our praises are being offered to you as your portion. You are the first to be invoked and none else amongst the learned. O vital Lord, may the waves of spirituality come to us from you; depart gratified,—depart well-disposed towards us. 2

Come with hundreds and thousands of your waves of spirituality to our place of worship to partake of the sacrificial invocations; Come, O vital Lord, to accept the oblations You alone are entitled to this portion and it is suitable for the seasons. The devotional prayers are brilliant like the elixir that becomes radiant when exposed to the sun. These prayers have been tuned and sung by the priests and are full of vitality. 3

Let the aurora of glory and vitality be drawn by the beams and waves of spirituality. They manifest to us the resplendent Lord who is also the Lord of vitality at the place of worship, for our preservation, and to partake of the consecrated viands and to partake of the oblations, and accept our sweet and melodious prayers. The pious acts of prayers offered to you have given increased efficacy to our selfless acts. For you the singer has tuned these songs just as the herbal extract is pressed out through a strainer or just as the grooms rub down the quick-running horses. May you accept our invocation and come hither, well-disposed towards us, for our protection. May you accept our devotional prayer which is so well offered as if the juices from plants are pressed out by stones. O God, you as resplendent self and vital Lord are the giver of food to us. 5

O resplendent and vital Lord, these sweet expressions of devotional prayers sung by the priests are all addressed to you possessing the qualities of radiance and vitality; pure prayers are meant for both of you, O resplendent vital Lord, these prayers have come out of our hearts just as herbal juices filtered out through an oblique strainer. They are meant to invoke both of your aspects : the resplendent and the vital. Prayers come out of our hearts just as plant juices come through wooly fleece,—the inexhaustible expressions of devotions. 6

O vital Lord, may you pass in the close proximity of the many sleeping worshippers and go to the house where the devotees are tuning their prayers. O resplendent Lord, go to that dwelling, go where the word of eternal truth is being heard; and where butter flows; go, O Lord, with radiance and the waves of spirituality,—O Lord, go to the place of worship. 7

Then, bring the libations of the sweet juice to the place of worship where the triumphant priests stand round the rock-born plant. May they ever be victorious for us. For you together the cows yield their milk; the offering of barley is cooked. And may your cows never grow weak; never may the cattle be carried off by thieves. 8

These your horses, who are strong of limb, youthful and full of vigour, bear you through the space between heaven and earth. They are growing in bulk and strong like oxen; they are not lost in the firmament, but hold on their speed, unretarded by reviling; difficult are they to be arrested as the beams of the sun,—difficult are they to be arrested by force. 9

May we offer most excellent and ample admiration and reverential regards to the two suns of summer and winter, while they occupy the two stations; the suns who have existed eternally and who confer happiness to the people of this earth. The suns in these two positions deserve most coveted approbations. These are both imperial suns. We sing the praises in devotional hymns and we glorify the summer sun and the winter sun at both these places on every sacred occasion. Hence the might of these is not in any way opposed, nor their divinity is resisted. 1

The most excellent dawn is proceeding to participate in the sacred cosmic ritual. The path of the revolving sun has been lighted up as if by the rays of the dawn. The eyes of people on the earth have been opened by the rays of the sun. The brilliant mansion of the sun, known as supra-life (during summer), the time-ordainer (during autumn) and the superb (during winter), has been lighted up by dawn's rays. And, therefore, may the sun accept the praiseworthy and copious adoration,—the praiseworthy and copious adoration. 2

The indivisible sun is full of luminosity and celestiality; it is the upholder of the people. You, O sun, come day by day,—you are worshipped day by day by those who wake up early in the morning. O summer sun and winter sun, both of you are the animators of the people on the right path. O time ordainer (the sun of the autumn season) you are the inspirer of men. 3

May these seasonal offerings be gratifying to the summer sun and the winter sun and may they be enjoyed by them as they accept it with due respect. This divine offering is fit to be enjoyed by the cosmic divine. May all the cosmic divines, enlightened, be united to enjoy it. Therefore, O royal divines, may our aspirations come to fulfilment. You, who are the sustainer of cosmic law,—may our aspirations be fulfilled. 4

Any-one, who offers adoration to the summer sun and the winter sun may be rendered free of evil thoughts. May the sun of autumns protect him from danger,—they save the worshipper from danger. The law-giver, pleased with his worship, protects him who also is dedicated to the winter and summer suns righteously. May you lead to prosperity him who toils in the rainy season also,—who toils and thus worships in the seasons of spring and autumn. 5

Let me proclaim veneration to the mighty sun, to heaven and earth, to the sun of summer and to the benevolent sun of winter, to the conferrer of happiness, the showerer of benefits. Let me glorify the resplendent sun to the super-fire, to the brilliant time-ordainer and the effulgent, so that, enjoying long life, we may be blessed with progeny. May we be happy through the protecting virtues of medicinal herbs. 6

Worshipping the resplendent sun, and favoured by the vital principles, may we rely upon our strength and receive the protection of the divine cosmic powers, and may we be affluent through their bounty. May we enjoy the felicity which the super-fire, super-life and the super-sun are bestowing upon us. 7

Come, O supra-life (summer sun) and Super Sun (winter sun) to our place of toil where we express the healing essence of herbs with stones. These essences mixed with milk are exhilarating. These elixirs are exhilarating. Come to us, O royal cosmic powers, dwellers in heaven and our guardians. These juices are mixed with milk for you, O source of light and bliss, they are brilliant and mixed with milk. 1

Come to partake of these dripping healing juices which are mixed with curds,—they are extracted and mixed with curds. They have been prepared just after the dawn at the appearance of the sun-rays. They are dedicated to the winter sun, as well as the summer sun for their acceptance, —the extracted juices are for the realization of the eternal and never-failing truth. 2

They milk for both of you the elixir by crushing the succulent creeper with stones like a productive milch-cow,– they milk the elixir by crushing with stones. Come to us as our protectors. Be present with us to drink the healing elixir. This has been effused, O the summer sun and winter sun, effused for your drinking. 3

Our Lord is the divine nourisher ; He is universally worshipped and His great strength is widely lauded. His greatness is never questioned ; His glory knows no bounds. Desirous of happiness, I adore Him, whose protection is always ready at hand and who is the giver of happiness. When devoutly worshipped, He helps in the performances of sacred works, helps to perform the sacred ceremonies. 1

I invoke you, O Lord, the divine nourisher, may your help come to us quick like a courser in a war, or like a camel across the desert. Therefore do I, a mortal, invoke you, the divine bestower of happiness, for your friendship. May you render our invocations productive,—may you render them inspiring at the time of battle. 2

O divine nourisher, those wise devotees who through your friendship enjoy countless riches, enjoy them due to your protection and their own hard labour,—mainly through their hard labour. Free from anger, and entitled to ample praises, may you be ever accessible to us, and may you be our leader in every encounter. 3

May our prayers be heard. We meditate on the supreme adorable God and solicit the divine strength. We adore the resplendent and all-pervading God. Inasmuch as the brilliant noble works have been perfoımed by us, so may our prayers be heard by the divine powers,—may our prayers reach the divine powers. 1

Inasmuch as, O supreme source of light and source of bliss, through your divine wisdom you discern everything that is false and everything that is true, and cause the valorous to govern with the aid of your own power, so may we realize in all the places of our worship your golden halo through our thinking, and through our vision and experience,—through our blissful vision. 2

O twin divines, the supervisors of law and education, these enlightened worshippers glorify you with their hymns and invoke you and pay compliments to your attributes. All your opulence, and every kind of wealth and abundant food, O omniscient, are vested in the aura of your vitality. The fellies of the wheels of your aura of vitality are dropping honey. The fellies of that golden aura carry you onward, O mighty twin divines. 3

O twin-leaders, your objective is clear; you have thrown open the routes of spaces. The pilots of your space ship have harnessed engines for your onward journey,--the engines that take you safe on the onward journey without accidents. Both of you have been conveniently seated in your richly decorated three-shafted craft, going along a direct path through space. 4

With your valorous deeds, O twin-divines, grant us, by day and night, all good things, having been pleased with our noble deeds; may your munificent grants never diminish,—never may our donations become less. 5

O resplendent Lord, showerer of blessings, these effused juices, pressed out from herbs gathered from the hills are for your acceptance. These herbal extracts have been specially prepared for you. May they satisfy you as an offering presented in the hope of receiving rich and abundant wealth. Accepter of laudations, may you come to us, glorified by our hymns; come to us well pleased. 6

O leader of people, do come and listen attentively when you are praised by us, and speak on our behalf to other distinguished colleagues, worthy of our respectful regards, worthy of venerable regards. The cow of prosperity you gave to the producers of wealth and which the lawgivers have also milked for the public good,—may we all comprehend the nature of that cow. 7

Never, O fighters for the public good, may your youthful energies be turned against us; may our glory never diminish; never before our time decay. May your favours, that have been wonderfully yours from age to age, and whatsoever is most difficult of attainment,—bestow upon us all that is most difficult to be attained. 8

The ancient men of spiritual austerity, vitality, kindness and men of wisdom, exempt from three types of pains, have known my origin; they, the men of wisdom, have known my progenitors; theirs is a very intimate relation with all the divines. Our forefathers have been among them. Following in their footsteps, I humbly propitiate with hymns; I worship the resplendent Lord and the Lord, the adorable, with hymns. 9

Let the invoker of the divines offer worship. And may they, desirous of the offering, partake of the acceptable libation. May the benevolent preceptor himself, desiring the libation, celebrate the worship with devotional chants with copious and excellent chants. We now hear from a distant quarter the sound of devotional songs, whereby the performer of pious acts has of himself secured many gifts and the performer of pious acts has secured numerous habitations. 10

O (the thirty-three) divines that are eleven in heaven, eleven on earth, and eleven in firmament, may you be pleased with sacred performances. 11

Select a proper spot as it were an offering for the radiant fire; construct an altar and place the fire on it, this being the seat dear to him. As with a garment, cover him with soft wood, whereupon it would blaze out as sacred, light-bearing, bright and gloom-dispelling. 1

This fire is twice-generated (having come out first between the two pieces of wood in the process of attrition and then caught in the dry grass), and it devours the triple food [i.e. wood fuel, butter, and other seasonal offerings], and at the close of the year, it renovates all that has been consumed. The food taken by the tongue and the mouth is consumed by one form of fire (the metabolic energy), and the forest wood is consumed by another fire (of fuel combustion). 2

Both fire-sticks, originators of this offspring, get charred by combustion, living close to each other, tremble and give birth to an infant whose tongue of flame glows in the east; (who) readily develops; who rapidly issues forth; who is ever to be cherished and fit to be protected, and who is the augmenter of the prosperity of his parents. 3

The flames coming out of the fire-altar, wishing to proceed on smoky track, quick-consuming, capricious, restless, lambent, formed by the wind, spreading wide, and assuring prosperity to the devotee, are kindled for the benefit of the worshipper,—dedicated to serve men. 4

When the fire proceeds touching and licking the great earth, hissing and tumbling, then those flames, the destroyers of darkness, easily fly about, exhibiting their black terrific great form, thundering and roaring. 5

And he, (the enraged fire) stoops down among the brown bushes as if embellishing them with his lusture, and rushes bellowing loudly like a bull amongst a herd of cows; and increasing in intensity, he adorns his form and like a terrific beast he violently brandishes his horns. 6

Now hidden, now revealed, he (the fire) seizes on the fuels as if understanding the purpose of the worshipper and even reposes amidst the conscious flames; again these (flames) break forth, and repair to the divine fire of the altar. And, blending with it, they give different luminous forms to their parents, the sun and the earth. 7

The curled tresses of the flames embrace him and, when dwindling, spring aloft again to greet their coming lord, rescuing them from decrepitude. He comes sounding aloud, generating in them intenser animation and invincible vitality. 8

He (the fire of the forest) passes through tracts, as is well known, licking up the vesture of the mother earth, and accompanied by the loudly crying animals. The dark tracks follow the forest fire, and the land is cleared for farming which provides food and sustenance to men and cattle. 9

Shine, O bounteous fire, in our opulent abodes, vivifying, showering blessings, and casting off infantine glimmerings. Blaze fiercely, repelling enemies repeatedly, and may you be like an armour to us in our struggles. 10

May this offering, carefully placed upon the rugged but agreeable pile of fuel, be most acceptable to you. May the pure radiance of your person shine brightly, and may you grant us abundant wealth. 11

Bestow, O fire, a boat for the pleasure of our family, fitted with oars and motor wheels, the one that may render our posterity prosperous, and may bear people across the ocean of life and lead them to happiness. 12

O Fire, be propitiated by our earnest praise, and may the sun and the earth and the spontaneously-flowing streams, accepting our oblation, provide for us the produce of the herd and of the field; and may the purple coursers of the dawn bestow upon us abundant food for all times. 13

Verily, that visible radiance of the divine fire, is enshrined by us all for the support of the body. It has been generated for this purpose by physical effort. That is why our mind is attracted towards that radiance and we propitiate it. All sacred prayers, together with oblations are carried to the fire alone. 1

The first form of this universal divine fire is that pattern of one which is reposed on the earth and has the faculty of ripening the crop in the fields and subsequently digesting the food. Its second form is that cosmic one which dwells among the seven auspicious mothers. (This refers to the spiritual fire which is generated with the help of the seven symbolic terms: bhuh, bhuvah, svah, mahah, janah, tapah and satyam, in the meditative repetitions in the system of the Yoga). The third form of this benevolent divine is that which is manifested in the process of attrition in which the ten fingers participate like maidens. 2

When powerful priests bring to life this mighty divine fire from the interior of the wood and when, for the sake of offering oblations, the cosmic wind churns it out of the altar where it has been lurking in the hiding place; 3

When excellent nutritious oblations are offered to this divine fire and the dry branches of wood are fed to the hungry flames under the directions of the institutor of the ceremony and the priest, the fire blazes out and becomes most youthful and radiant with effulgence. 4

The fire, having born out of the wood, is proceeding again to other pieces of wood like a child moving towards its mother; here pure and unharmed, it evolves into magnitude. Then it mounts on the heap of the wood nearby, and runs rapidly amongst the smaller pieces of wood which are constantly being fed to it. 5

Just as people adore a powerful prince, this fire is adored by the pious worshippers so that it becomes an invoker for the propitiation of other cosmic forces. This universally praised and all-upholding divine fire alone knows how to establish a link between the mortal worshipper and Nature's other benign forces for the procurement of sustenance. 6

Whilst the adorable fire-divine, impelled by the wind and unresisted, spreads in various directions, like an insincere and unrestrained chatterer, who utters indiscriminate praises, the world follows him and worships, who is the consumer of all, whose path is dark but who is pure of birth, and who travels in various directions. 7

Like a chariot drawn by ropes, this fire-divine, set in movement by his own revolving flames, rolls onward to the heavens with his ruddy limbs. Then the paths he traverses are blackened by smoke, as he consumes the fuel, and the birds (in terror) fly away from his radiance as enemies from the prowess of a hero. 8

Through your aid, O divine fire, the ocean remains within limits, the sun dispels darkness, and the rains become bounteous; and thus you have been born comprehending all of them universally in their functions, and encompassing them all as spokes in a felly. 9

O most youthful fire divine, you bring wealth and cosmic powers for the good of him who praises you and offers you libations. We, therefore, glorify you the new-born who are to be lauded and to whom rich offerings are to be presented. We glorify you in our hymn as men eulogize a powerful prince. 10

Just as you grant us, fire-divine, useful house-hold wealth, good fortune and powerful strength, in like manner may you confer these blessings upon them who are the performers of holy rites. Like the reins, you regulate both the lives of the associates, the past and future, and you add lustre to their fame. 11

Would he, who is full of radiance and who has fleet horses, who is the invoker of the divines, full of joy, and born in a golden aura of glory, listen to us ? Would that irresistible, yet placable divine fire conduct us by the most efficacious means to delightful happiness and blessedness ? 12

Fire-divine, with the capacitance of the supreme, universal kinship has been glorified by us with holy rites and with hymns. Let all, who are present, one and all enriched by his favour, ever reverberate with his praises, as loudly as the sun causes the rain-cloud to thunder. 13

142

Having been kindled, O fire-divine, bring to us the benign divine powers today. And extend your radiance for him who lifts up his ladle and who has pressed out medicinal herbs for offerings. 1

O the one with never-decaying body, may you grace the well-sweetened and butter-fed fire-performance, participated in by the wise devotee, liberal in charity, glorifying you like me. 2

O fire-divine, praised by us, bring us the resplendent and the beloved supreme Lord. This my praise is recited, O bright-tongued (i.e. with colourful flames), in your honour. 4

The priests, bearing ladles, are scattering the sacred grass in this holy place of worship and getting ready thereafter for the extensive laudable praises to be offered to the resplendent Lord. 5

Let the bright broad doors of divine knowledge and selfless service, the promoters of worship, the purifiers and dear to all, be set open for the divine sentiments to enter. 6

O beautiful night and dawn, praised by all, closely associated with each other, great sustainers of eternal law, may you join us of your own goodwill in the sacred worship. 7

May the two invokers, the inspired and the learned, possessed of pleasing voice, loud in pitch, officiate today at this our sacrifice which confers rewards and provides divinity to it. 8

May the supreme architect, favourably disposed towards us, send us for our nourishment and prosperity quick-flowing abundant water, provided by the clouds. 10

O God, bestower of the wealth of herbs and plants, we offer homage to you through our noble deeds and thoughts. May divine knowledge come to us as our reward. 11

With the auspicious invocation to our resplendent Lord, may you start your sacred performances in the house of a devotee. May we offer there our gratitude to the Nature's bounties also. 12

O resplendent Lord, be with us to cherish our offerings, presented with the words svaha. May you hear the invocations of devotees who are calling you to their place of worship. 13

143

I offer my most invigorating and entirely new hymns of praises, expressing hearty adoration to the dear fire-divine, who is manifested through great skill and efforts, and who is the energy pervading through waters. He appropriately exists in all seasons and is the ministering agent (of Nature's forces). He occupies a place on the altar along with other precious substances of oblations. 1

That fire-divine, as soon as manifested and assisted by space-wind, becomes visible in the highest regions, and his radiance, kindled by vigorous efforts, illuminates heaven and earth. 2

His radiance never fades; his rays are everywhere, brilliant and bright. His intensely shining, all-pervading, unceasing and undecaying rays, desist not from their functions. 3

Propitiate with praises in your own house that fire-divine, who is the possessor of all riches, and whom the descendants of men of mature intellect establish upon the navel of the earth, and who like the venerable Lord is the sole monarch of all wealth. 4

The fire-divine who like the roaring of the winds and like a victorious host, or like the thunderbolt in heaven, is not to be warded off; it devours and destroys with sharp jaws and as a warrior annihilates his enemies. He destroys and clears the forest. 5

May the fire-divine be ever worthy of our hymns. May it be the giver of wealth and satisfy our aspirations with riches. May it be the inspirer of our sacred actions and promote our prayers to the attainment of our wishes. I glorify that effulgent fire-divine with this hymn. 6

For your sake the fuel-fed fire, promoter of natural operations, well kindled, and blazing brightly at the furnaces, is propitiated; may he illumine our well-meaning plans. 7

The ministering priest, qualified by experience, and possessing exalted and graceful devotion, proceeds to perform the fire ceremony according to the disciplines prescribed. He moves, turns to the right and lifts the ladles which are first to come lovingly in contact with the ceremonial fire (at the time of offering oblations). 1

The rain-clouds, full of streams of water, envelop the sun, the original home of the fire-divine, and sing to Him His glory. So long as fire, as heat, abides in water, water is made enjoyable to people like nectar, and the fire becomes identified with water. 2

Of the same age and extensively dispersed and with a common objective, both the wooden sticks bring their bodies in loving contacts and embrace each other. Then the fire, divine, sacred as oblation, takes the reins in his hands, like a charioteer as those of a horse. 3

He (the fire) whom the two, the married couple of similar age, living in the same place, and engaged in the same work, worship night and day; He though born in olden times is still young and though He lives through many human generations, is still exempt from decay. 4

The ten fingers intertwined propitiate that divine-fire; we mortals invoke Him for our protection; He darts His rays like swift arrows from a bow, and assimilates the new praises uttered by those who gather round the altar. 5

O fire-divine, you, as a herdsman, reign over the dwellers in heaven and over those of the earth according to your own will. These two, (i.e. earth and heaven) vast, glorious, golden, beneficent and bright sweet-sounding, partake of the oblations. 6

O fire-divine, joy-giver, self-sustained and born of eternal law, performer of good works, may you be pleased and attend to our prayer. You are pleasant to look on when seen from every side. You are a storehouse of food, pleasant in appearance and the refuge of all. 7

145

May you submit to Him the adorable, for every place is within His reach and all things are within His knowing. He is full of wisdom. He determines what ought to be done, and is our only recourse. In Him are vested all powers to command, in Him the power of granting enjoyments. He is the giver of food and strength and He is the protector of the mighty. 1

Only wise sages know His greatness; no one else knows His magnanimity, for a man of determination fully knows His mind and does what he chooses to do. The adorable Lord does not tolerate an interrogation nor endures a rejoinder. He who is devoid of arrogance is favoured by His grace and protection. 2

To Him alone go all the invocations and prayers that are chanted. He alone hears all my prayers, is the inspirer of all and steers us across troubles. He is the instrument of success in sacred acts and the unintermitting preserver of life. 3

When the devotee invokes Him (the adorable Lord), He makes himself manifested and goes forward with His glory. And when worshipped with devotion and sincerity, He gratifies the aspirations of the tired and perplexed devotee. All the prayers and offerings go to Him alone for the fulfilment of the desires of the worshipper. 4

This adorable Lord is worthy of quest and attainment. He is to be sought in the innermost core of the heart where lies His abode. He is all-knowing law and truth personified, and He has revealed divine knowledge for the good of mankind. 5

I glorify the adorable God, subject to no diminution, sovereign master of the three worlds (physical, mental and spiritual), further represented by seven symbolic attributes, and extending through parental time and space. We glorify the universal radiance of the divine, illuminating the entire static and dynamic existences of the universe. 1

Adorable and potent God pervades through two worlds—heaven and earth. He is beyond decay. He is generous in bestowing protection. His feet are on the summit of this earth and His radiance licks the udder of the entire space. 2

The two beautiful milch cows, representing two philosphies, worldly and spiritual, walk towards a common calf, i.e. lead to a common goal. They point out the obstacles to be avoided on the path, and provide all the indications of the measures to be adopted. 3

The realized and wise sages seek the Invincible (adorable Lord) in the interior of their heart, cherishing Him in manifold ways. For those people who see all around them the ocean of divine bliss, the sun of enlightenment makes its appearance. 4

In all regions, He is the one that is worth being sought, victorious, glorious, and to be adored. He is the source of life to great and small. He is opulent and His glory is manifest to all. He is the progenitor everywhere of the things of which He is the divine source. 5

O adorable God, how does your all-pervading and purifying radiance support nourishment and long life? Blessed by these both how are the virtuous worshippers with their children and grandchildren delighted in chanting sacred hymns in their worship? 1

O adorable Lord, your fostering rays, perceiving the blindness of the son of a distressed mother, relieve him of his grief. Being omniscient, you offer protection to the righteous. Malevolent enemies would ever be unable to do them harm. 3

O adorable Lord, may he who does not allow homage to be offered and who does not offer homage himself and thus through ambiguity seeks to inflict injury on us, may his intentions be heavy on him and may his evil words injure him only. 4

And, O Lord, the source of might, whosoever assails another person, a worshipper of yours, with ambiguity, save him from this wicked. O adorable Lord, may you not consign us to misfortunes. 5

The cosmic wind, of the firmament has churned out the cosmic fire, the invoker of Nature's bounties, multipurpose-ful and multicoloured, from its sources. The cosmic fire, beautiful like the resplendent sun, has been duly established in men-folk for the sustenance of their bodies. 1

So long as I enumerate the glories of the cosmic fire, none can suppress me. The cosmic fire fully appreciates my approbations; and all the rest of the Natural forces are gratified in their turn whilst the fire is being glorified by us with praises. 2

Holy worshippers carry a fragment of this cosmic fire to their sacred place of worship and enshrine him with a chant of sacred hymns. Like the swift horses yoked to a chariot, they augment this fire quickly in the ceremonial place. 3

The destructive forest fire consumes numerous trees with his jaw-like flames. Then he brilliantly shines in the forest. The blowing wind then spreads this fire onwards, step by step, like the swift arrow of an archer. 4

The blind (of eyes) who sees not, and the blind of intellect detract not from his glory, whom no enemies, no malevolent adversaries harm even whilst yet in the embryo, for he is constantly defended by his admirers. 5

Great is the glory of the adorable Lord who rules over earth and heaven, and who, as well, guides the valour of men. It is He out of whom the creation has imbibed life, and who, entering into the womb, procreates (all living creatures). 2

He, who is wise and goes fast like the space wind, has lighted up the invincible city (the innermost cavity of the human body) and possessed of hundreds of forms is effulgent like a sun. 3

He, with his manifestation in the two realms, physical and spiritual, illuminates the three bright regions (terrestrial, interstitial and celestial) and shines over all the lustrous spheres. He is the invoker of all the cosmic forces and is present in the plasma of cosmic consciousness. 4

He, the invoker of divines (Nature's bounties), is manifested in the two realms (physical and spiritual). He bestows all excellent riches on that mortal who, with all his sincerity, surrenders completely to Him. Such a man is blessed with excellent progeny. 5

150

Whilst offering homage to you with reverence I, the humble one, implore you in many ways, O adorable. I come to your most honoured presence, as if (like a servant) in the house of a great master. 1

I ask you also to withhold your favour from those types of rebels who though rich, do not acknowledge you as their Lord, do not offer their riches for a noble cause and who disregard your authority. 2

O, wise adorable God, assuredly that mortal who worships you becomes a celestial moon, the beauty and happiness personified, and further becomes the most eminent of the divines. May we, therefore, ever be your most enthusiastic worshippers. 3

Heaven and earth have been very much agitated by the force and energy of the cosmic fire, who is like a friend and benefactor of mankind and who deserves our adoration. It is he whom pious devotees, aspiring to obtain wealth and wisdom have generated by their sacred acts in the vital life-force of the human mind and body. 1

They, the poets, your admirers, offer to you both cosmic lights and cosmic plasma, the abundantly flowing and spontaneous melodious praises. Therefore, may you both consent to contribute to the wisdom of the poets and their ability to sing and listen, O bestowers of bliss, to the prayer of the family. 2

People glorify, O cosmic light and cosmic plasma, your manifestation in celestial space and earth to attain great strength. May you assuredly grant the desires of righteous men as the reward of their selfless works, and go to the place of worship to accept the offering that is solemnized with praise and oblation. 3

O mighty gracious divines (the cosmic light and cosmic plasma), we have carefully made that place a spot of worship which is most agreeable to you. O guardians of eternal laws, may you proclaim the ceremony having been duly performed. And may you harness this little ceremony with the vast operations going on in the cosmos like yoking a bull to the chariot. 4

Upon this vast earth you have given excellent cows, who continue to live under your care and protection. The innocent milch-kine, yielders of large quantities of milk return to their stalls at the day-end, and at the dawn, on the cloudy days, they anxiously cry for the sun, just as one cries, when sees thieves having entered in the house. 5

O cosmic light and cosmic waters, wherever people acknowledge your existence, the lofty flames of cosmic (as well as of ceremonial) fire greet you; may you both bless us of your own accord with a discriminating matured intellect, since both of you are inspirers of poetic thoughts of the seer. 6

May both of you go to him and love his noble performance, who endowed with intelligence invokes you with his prayers, praises you, and worships you. Come, therefore, lovingly to respond to our worship, and be favourably disposed towards us. 7

O both of you, abiding by the eternal laws, the devotees honour you first with selfless work, discriminative intellect and disciplined mind, and trained senses. They offer to you praises and you then generously bestow wealth and wisdom on them. 8

O leaders, you graciously give food along with wealth, to all of us with your wide and ample provisions. Neither the heaven, nor the firmament, neither days nor nights, nor the oceans and nor the greedy wickeds attain your divinity or your grandeur. 9

152

O cosmic light and cosmic plasma, you decorate yourself with uninterupted vestments (of radiance). Your plans and activities are free from faults. You conquer all falsehood and closely cleave unto the eternal law. 1

Each one of you (cosmic light and cosmic plasma) is competent to discern the truth, is wise, commended by the learned and intelligent. The sharp four-edged weapon defeats the three-edged one (the well-armed slays the less efficiently accoutred one). The antagonists of divine forces, assuredly, are bound to perish ultimately. 2

O cosmic light and cosmic plasma, who could have thought that, assisted by you, dawn, devoid of foot, would march ahead of creatures possessing feet; and that your infant (the sun) would sustain the burden of this world. He diffuses the light of truth and dispels the darkness of falsehood. 3

We only behold the sun, the lover of the maiden dawns, ever in movement, never stopping for an instant, clad in inseparable radiance, and spreading far and wide its glory in the beloved abode of cosmic light and cosmic plasma. 4

Though without a horse and without reins, he moves with swiftness and then with its roaring grandeur ascends to higher and higher summits. The ever-youthful sun passes through the realms of cosmic light and cosmic plasma. May we praise and glorify him with hymns of deep meaning. 5

May the cows serve the attached loving devotee with their well-filled udders. May the invoker, fully conversant with the details of worship, pray for nourishing food. May the dedicated devotee attain spotless fame. 6

O cosmic light and cosmic plasma, may I offer oblation to you with all due reverence. May our dedication and offerings lead us to victory in our struggles. May we have showers of rain from space to make us prosperous. 7

O cosmic light and cosmic plasma, highly energetic and endowed with mutual affinities, our ministerial chiefs have been speaking of you both in the highest terms and therefore, all of us are also adoring you reverentially with our offerings. 1

O cosmic light and cosmic plasma, here is offered to you our devotional prayer. Here we think of you with affection as if belonging to one's own home. O mighty showerer of bliss, our learned invoker solicits happiness by performing fire-ceremony, offers his homage to both of you in these operations. 2

O cosmic light and cosmic plasma, may the productive milch-cow furnish abundant milk for the dedicated virtuous man, as when the ministrant priest glorifying you propitiates in the solemnity while performing the fire-ceremony. 3

May you both (cosmic light and cosmic plasma) make all deserving people prosperous with the supply of food, cows and water. And may the cosmic fire, the old patron, enrich us. May you both accept the sacrificial food and the milk of the milch-cow. 4

Earnestly I glorify the mighty deeds of the all-pervading God, who has made the terrestrial bodies, who is highly glorified and who upholds the extensive cosmos, possessed of three types of motions of translation, of rotation and of vibration. 1

The all-pervading God has been dominating by His prowess like a sturdy wild mountain lion. Within His three-extended paces, He covers the entire creation. 2

To Him alone, who has created the entire extensive universe with three components (macro, micro, and ultra-micro), and who is the showerer of bliss, the upholder of clouds, and the one glorified by all, are dedicated our learning and endeavours; 3 and to the one in whose imperishable, delightful and self-ordained three regions lives and rejoices the world, and who, verily, alone upholds the terrestrial and celestial regions with the three-fold elements (tranquil, active and inert). 4

May I occupy that enviable position of His in which the godly virtuous people find delight. In the exalted station of this all-pervading God, there is a (perpetual) fountain of felicity and He is ever a friend of the earnestly active. 5

May you respectfully offer wholesome drinks to both the invincible great sun and to the thunder-clouds who have ascended on the hill-tops with the speed of a fast moving horse. 1

O sun and thunder-clouds, the extensive and blinding effulgence of both of you has been very much augmented by the devotee by his exhilarating offerings. Both of you have given extensive support to the fire-projectile for the protection of men. 2

These offerings increase the virility of this sun, which He then establishes between the two mothers (earth and heaven) for generation and gratification. Just as the son has the inferior and superior, and a third (middle) appellations of the father, similarly the sun establishes its effulgence in the celestial space. 3

Therefore we celebrate the virility of this (sun) who is powerful and foe-less, and who is a gracious saviour and who traverses widely the interspace above the earth in three consecutive paces so that the world may live with its full existence. 4

The mortal man is able to track two steps of this effulgent sun, traversing in celestial space, but he comprehends not the third one; in fact, no bird soaring in the interspace can trace it. 5

He (the sun) by his gyrations, causes ninety into four (360) rotations (of the earth, 360 days in a year), like a circular wheel, moving on its axis,—the massive body of the sun again and again appears daily in many forms, ever-matured young, not immature, he comes as if to participate in our morning invocations. 6

156

O sun, producer of sap, resplendent, and accessible everywhere, may you be helpful like a friend to us. And, as, such, compliments are repeatedly paid to you by the wise and sacred fire-rituals solemnized by the offerer of oblations. 1

He who presents offerings to the Lord, the Self in the sun, the most ancient, yet also the recent, the self-born, and the one who describes the great birth of this mighty sun, that devotee alone verily attains prosperity and high status. 2

O singers, may you propitiate of your own accord that Self in the sun, who is existent from very old times and is the centre of all orderly creation. O sun, aware of your greatness, may we celebrate your name and enjoy your favour. 3

The royal sun works in perfect unison with space-winds, and Nature's forces and around him move the twins, the earth and the moon. The sun with his associates has the supreme control on the light that causes the day and he breaks open the cluster of clouds . 4

The celestial sun, the prime mover of cosmic activity, comes to assist the lower self (the soul), the accomplisher of noble deeds. He (the sun) being present in all the three regions, shows favour to the virtuous people and admits the performers of dedicated acts to their appropriate shares. 5

Fire is awakened on the earth ; the sun rises ; the refulgent dawn, exhilarating by her radiance, has adorned the horizon. The twins (the physicians and surgeons) have yoked their car and put it on road to help the sick and wounded. The divine sun has put the world on different routines. 1

O twins (physicians and surgeons), as you are harnessing your mighty bounteous chariot, we pray to you that with your car and treatment, may you refresh our brave soldiers engaged in war with honey and butter. May you also provide wisdom to our learned men in their endeavours. May our heroes obtain riches in their ventures. 2

May the three-wheeler chariot of the twins (physician and surgeon) drawn by swift horses (engines) laden with sweet nourishments, moving on three axles (to enable the chariot to move in three dimensions) all round well-set up bring prosperity to our men and cattle. 3

Bring us, O twins, vigour, animate us with your honeyed-sprays, prolong our lives, wipe away our pains, and ward off our enemies and be our associates. 4

Both of you, O twins, the showerer of benefits, are able to inseminate the germ of life in cows and other female cattle, within all living beings, and you supervise the supply of healthy fuel, water and plant materials (for our prosperity). 5

Both of you, physician and surgeon, are conversant with remedies, medicines and treatment. You ride in a quick vehicle drawn by well-trained steeds, and therefore, you, mighty divines, resolutely provide valour to the person, who with his intent devotion, offers his regards to you and seeks your help. 6.

O (twins) the possessors of wealth and defenders, both of you are exceedingly wise, great, full of virility, fulfillers of desires, and destroyers of adversaries, when the deserving devotee approaches you for assistance. May you come quickly forward with liberal help. 1

O twins, the possessors of wealth, who could have given us so liberally, as you have on our mere obeisance at the altar. May you grant us cows, rich in milk, since you have always the intention of granting the requests of others. 2

O twin divines, as your swift and mighty chariot, able to cross the sea, was harnessed and placed in the middle of the surging ocean for the rescue of the benevolent saviour, so may I swiftly reach your preserving protection as a victorious hero who returns home quickly as if by riding flying horses. 3

May the praise addressed to you, O twin divines, preserve the son of the righteous man. Let not these fast revolving days and nights exhaust me ; let not the tenfold pile of wood burn me : let it not be that the devotee of yours, now bound as slave himself, bite the earth. 4

The infidel adversaries (in wars and battles) so often hurl me down, even the old and decrepit, and yet the rivers, becoming kind to me as mothers, do not swallow me. Another heathen with tridentate spears inflicts injuries on my head, breast and shoulders. [Yet you could save me.] 5

This long-tortured son of an affectionate mother thus might remain for ten long years in terrible state, and become decrepit. He, however, under the protection and care (of the physicians and surgeons) could live a long and dedicated life, and become a leader amongst learneds. 6

I glorify with sacred ceremonies the vast heaven and earth of divine origin, augmenters of worship, and intelligent in regard to operations of public use and who bring forth the choicest blessings through wonder-working wisdom. 1

And by invocations I propitiate the benevolent attitude of my affectionate father (heaven) and mother (earth) who with their virility and protective measures made this far-flung world immortal for their children. 2

These charming children of yours, the performer of deeds, recognize you as their great parent for having received from you the first instructions. For the welfare of inanimate and animate creation, they preserve the status of their guileless son (the fire). 3

Those provident and wise divines, all of the same source, coupled to each other, living in the same place, knowing (their functions) and bright shining, they spread new, and ever-new warp and woof throughout the radiant cosmos. 4

So may we beg today for our growth the choicest wealth of the resplendent creator, our Lord, and through Him, may this benign heaven and earth bestow upon us riches of habitation and hundreds of things of value. 5

These two divines, heaven and earth, bestow happiness on all. They are bound by the universal law and sustain water (of rains in space) and are full of splendour. The resplendent sun proceeds in the inter-space for the discharge of his assigned duty. 1

Widely expanded, vast, not joined to each other, the celestial father and the terrestrial mother of all beings preserve the world. They are resolute on their paths and work for the good of all creatures. The father clothes everything with colourfully attractive forms. 2

Fire, the pure and the resolute son of these parents, sanctifies the worlds by his intelligence, and also sanctifies the milch-cow (the earth) and the vigorous bull (the heaven). He further daily milks the pellucid milk (of the heaven). 3

Uppermost are the actions of this (supreme Lord) amongst the actions of other divinities (natural forces); He has given birth to the all-delighting heaven and earth, and has measured them both, and for the sake of holy rites He has propped them up with pillars which shall never decay. 4

May the Lord of these far-flung heaven and earth, glorified by us, grant us abundant food and praiseworthy strength; whereby we may ever perpetuate our race everywhere. And may He bestow upon us commendable vigour. 5

Is this one who has come to us the most honoured, or just an ordinary ? Whose messenger is he ? What is it we should say ? O brother, the divine fire, we do not revile the one bowl of noble family. We describe only the attainments of the destroyer of adversaries. [The bowl is the unmanifested primordial matter]. 1

Divide the one lot into four. That has been told by the enlightened ones. That I have come to tell you. If you accomplish this, you will be entitled to perform sacred worship along with the enlightened ones. [The four transformations of the primordial matter are : air, fire, water and earth]. 2

Then they say to the fire, the messenger of divines : "The horse (physical force) is to be kept ready ; a chariot (mechanical force) is to be on road ; the cow (the intellectual force) is to be taken care of ; the two olds (traditions and rituals) have to be rejuvenated. Having accomplished these things first, brother divine fire, we are prepared to follow you." 3

Having heard all this, the wise men, the men of actions, may so inquire, "Where was the messenger born, the one who has come to us?" and the reply would be, "When the great architect had divided the entire bowl (the matter) into four transformations, this messenger (fire) was found moving amongst the cosmic regions." 4

The great architect may further instruct us, "They are worthy of being destroyed who despise the contents of the divine bowl, worthy of enjoyment by enlightened ones, when the divine exhilarating nectar is pressed out ; this is also known by other names ; the young maidens give it several other names." 5

The resplendent sun has yoked the rays as if on a pair of horses ; the twin-divines have harnessed their chariot ; the great preceptor has started using speech of multiforms ; therefore, O wise vigorous and strong men, go to the enlightened men, accomplishers of good deeds, and enjoy your sacrificial offerings. 6

O brave sons, by your efforts, you have nourished the cow who had been without skin (i.e. to the immature persons, you have given intellect) ; by your marvellous acts you have made your aged parents young ; from one energy (horse) you have harnessed energy in other forms, and used it in your chariot, and thus equipped you have gone to the enlightened men. 7

O sons of the wise men, the enlightened men have said, "Drink of this water of divine origin (morning sacrificial drink) or enjoy that herbal drink which has been filtered out through the acts of austerity (the midday-sacrificial drink) ; or if you are not pleased with either of these, be inspired by that exhilarating elixir which is taken at the third sacrificial acts of the evenings." 8

The divine waters are the most excellent, so says one ; the divine fire is the most excellent, says the other ; the third declares the divine earth to be the most excellent and thus speaking, each of the wise men speaks the truth ; they refer to the bowl in different ways. 9

The one takes the healthy cow (of knowledge) to a water reservior ; the second one takes the cow to nourishing fodder for the growth of flesh ; and the third at the sunset cleans the cowdung. The three sons thus by their service please their parents. (For the attainment of knowledge, one needs observation, thinking, and discrimination). 10

O realized wise ones, may you through your sincere efforts establish grass farms on high lands for your cattle and arrange for drinking water at the low lands. So long as you stay in houses, where you cannot keep comfortably your cows, you cannot prosper. [One should create healthy environments for acquiring knowledge]. 11

O wise divine radiations, as you glide along enveloping the regions in clouds, where do your parents live ? May you curse him who holds your hands ; may you bless him who favours you. 12

O divine radiations, reposing during the rainy season in the solar orb, have you ever inquired from the never-setting sun, as to who awakens us. The sun, the sustainer of all the world, on this replies that the awakener has been the wind divine. After a very long time in the year, there is again a sunshine. (The wind drives away the clouds). 13

Here we shall be narrating the attainments of a swift horse possessing exceptionally supreme qualities exhibited during battles. These attributes are to be appreciated by all classes of people—friends, learneds, men of judiciary, the wise, the illustrious and the intellectuals and by the people serving in defence departments. 1

Due care is taken of this royal horse, who should be cleaned and decorated with rich trappings, and whilst it fights bravely against the enemies, it gets laudations and favours from the king and commanders. 2

A charming novice horse, representing the commander, moves in the frontline, and it is followed by the royal horse. The novice horse is put under the care of a skilled trainer, and provided with all facilities for receiving honours and glory in future. 3

The persons, in-charge of the honour-awarding ceremony, conducted at the proper season, send forth the royal horse, who is taken thrice round the arena and whilst the royal horse moves, the novice horse representing the commander, marches on in the front, as if he is being trained for leadership. He moves in the first line, and as he moves, he as if goes on announcing to the learned audience the commencement of the royal sacrifice.4

At the ceremony are also present the priest, the minister of rites, the offerer of oblation, the kindler of fires, caretaker of medicinal plants, the directors of ceremonies, and the stage supervisors under their direction. The impressive ceremony continues in an orderly manner. Proper arrangements of water channels are also made. 5

Attention is paid even to all minor details in the arena. Care is taken of the post to which the horse is roped and special attendants are keen to take care of the horse. Rings are fastened on the top of the posts and in close vicinity are vessels in which the food and fodder of the horse are dressed. 6

Whilst the horse arrives at the place of honour, the chanting of the Vedic hymns begins. And there is rejoicing by singers and sages alike. The horse roped to the post is admired by the distinguished elites. 7

The distinguished visitors are delighted to see the halter and the heel-ropes of the fleet-courser and the head-ropes, the girths, and other parts of the harness. The horse looks noble as he shoves the grass into his mouth. 8

The horse is bathed clean so that the flies do not sit on the wounds. The filth from the horse is removed. Hands and finger nails of the attending physicans are cleaned. And thus all care is taken of the royal ceremony. 9

It is the duty of the caretakers of surgical operations to ensure that whatever undigested grass falls from his belly or whatever particles of raw flesh might have remained, everything is made perfectly clean and free from defect and the wounds are perfectly dressed with the help of hot and boiled lotions. 10

Any portions of the operated body which drops to the ground during the surgical operation are carefully picked up and consigned to fire and dispersed in atmosphere. 11

The horse is fed with a well-cooked meal of cereals of several kinds giving out such odours, so fragrant, that even the passers-by are tempted to say, "It is fragant, therefore give us some". 12

The stick that is dipped into the cauldron in which the meal is boiled, the vessels that distribute the broth, the covers of the dishes, the skewers, the knives, all do honour (to the horse). 13

O victory horse, the way you trot, the way you sit, you roll on the ground, the actions of your nimble foot, and also all that you drink and the grass that you eat—all these sights are enchanting to the distinguished visitors. 14

O victory horse, the smoke coming out of the kitchen may not cause irritation to you. The heat of the glowing cauldron with its fragrant contents may not terrify you. O horse, you have been declared victorious and the ceremony is in your honour and every one present in the distinguished gallery is honouring you with slogans of loud praise. 15

The victory horse is covered with highly attractive cloth, worthy of appreciation; with golden trappings and decorations. And the horse is provided with special head-robes and foot-robes. No wonder the distinguished visitors are impressed. 16

O victory horse, whilst on the battlefield you have been goaded forward, either with heels or with whips, and you have borne a good deal of hardship all through. Now you will enjoy rest and relax at this ceremony of welcome. For bringing you relief, the priests are offering oblation to the fire with prayers to the divine. 17

The victory horse has thirty-four ribs on both the sides which are exposed to attack during battle. O surgeons, dress up all these wounds with skill, so that the limbs may regain their vigour and dress up every joint, one by one, with care. 18

There is only one immolator which can kill the radiant horse, that is the time—killer of all. Whilst there are two to take care of him (the horse himself and his master rider), such of the limbs of the horse I take care of according to the seasons, (to give protection from heat and cold) and to heal up its wounds, hot fomentations are given to the swollen tumours. 19

Let not your precious body grieve you, O victory horse, for you will be healthy very soon. Let not the fear of surgical knives linger in your body. May you not be treated by greedy and unskilful surgeons giving undue pain to your limbs with their knives. 20

O horse, injured may you be, but we will not allow you to die. No more tortures for you, for you have served us nobly in an auspicious cause. You will be fit again to join the battles with redoubled valour, speed of the deer and the roar of the horse-chariot wheels. 21

May this victory horse bring to us all-sustaining wealth, cows, excellent horses of male offspring. May the spirited steed cure us of wickedness. May this horse, honoured in ceremony, procure for us bodily vigour. 22

O sun, we glorify your rising. At times you appear to be springing from the firmament or from the ocean with the roar of sea-waves. You rise higher and higher as if possessed with the wings of a falcon and the limbs of a deer. 1

The rising sun resembles a horse with a rider on. It looks like a gift from the supreme law-giver and harnessed by the divine floater. The resplendent Lord appears to be riding on him and the cosmic wind holds its reins. O cosmic architect, you have fabricated this horse from that luminous giant body. 2

O sun, you are the law-giver; you are the luminous giant and you float as if by a mysterious act. You are associated with the moon also. The sages say that you have three stations in the luminous space. 3

They also say that you have three stations in heaven and three on the earth and three in the interspace. You also seem to be one with the ocean and your form is most charming while arising out of waters. 4

O sun, you are the victory horse of the cosmic ceremonial. I have beheld your purifying regions, these impressions of your hoofs, participating in the ceremony. Here are your auspicious reins, which are the protectors of the rites that preserve it. 5

I recognize in my mind your form afar off, going from the earth below, by way of heaven to the midday sun. I behold your head soaring aloft and mounting quickly by unobstructed paths, unsullied by dust. 6

I behold most your excellent form as if anxiously looking round for food on this earth, whilst you come up. It appears as if your attendant brings you near your provender, which you start consuming with immense pleasure. 7

O sun, you look like a chariot with horses attached to it, and there are men to attend on you and cattle to follow you. It looks as if lovely maidens wait upon you; troops and demi-gods follow you ; they have sought your friendship. O sun, the Nature's bounties themselves admire your vigour. 8

His mien is of gold; his feet are of iron and fleet as thought. The supreme self seems inferior to him, in speed. All the beauties of Nature come to participate in the glory of the sun. And it appears as if the resplendent Lord himself first used this horse for his mount. 9

The full haunched, slender-waisted, high-spirited and celestial coursers (of the sun), may you gallop along like swans in rows, while the rays of the sun spread along the heavenly path. 10

Your body, O solar horse, is made for motion. Your mind is as rapid as the wind; the hair of your mien tossed in manifold directions and spread beautifully in the forest. 11

The swift sun-horse approaches the place of rest, meditating with mind intent upon Nature's glories. The setting sun is preceded by an evening dusk as if bound to him. The priests and singers chant their parting hymns at this hour. 12

The sun-horse reaches the loftiest place, the source of its origin. May he approach Nature's bounties and cause to bestow prosperity to the dedicated worshipper. 13

The all-pervading air is the middle brother of this sun, the benign priest, who is worthy of being propitiated and who is the protector of all and the butter-fed fire is his third brother. Of them, I behold the sun who has seven sons and is the lord of all subjects. 1

They yoke the seven to the one-wheeled car. One horse named sapta bears it along : the three-axled wheel (or the wheel with three hubs) is undecaying; it is always firm in its grip ; and in it all these regions of the universe abide. 2

The seven who preside over the seven-wheeled chariot are the seven horses who draw it; seven sisters ride it together, and in it are deposited the seven forms of sacrifices or utterances. 3

Who was the one, who could see the first born ? Who was that boneless from which the long-ones were produced ? Where were the breath, blood and the soul of this earth ? Who was the first to raise these questions to the sage ? 4

Immature (in understanding), undiscerning in mind, as I am, I inquire about those things (of those strides) which are hidden (even) from the super-powers. What are the seven threads in whom all abide, and which the sages have spread to envelop the sun ? 5

Ignorant, I inquire of the sages who know (the truth); not as one knowing (do I inquire), for the sake of (gaining) knowledge : What is that one supreme, who has upheld these six spheres in the form of the unborn? 6

Let him who knows this (truth) quickly declare it : The stride of the sun turning to the left (i. e. the divine half) is hidden. His rays pour down water from aloft. Putting on a visible form, they suck water with their feet. 7

The mother (earth) worships the father (the sun) with holy rites for the sake of water, but he has anticipated (her desires) in his mind; whereupon, desirous of progeny, she is penetrated by the dews of impregnation, and, (all) expectant of abundance, exchange words (of felicitations). 8

The mother (i.e., space) comes in contact with the southern yoke (southern hemisphere). Her embryo (water vapour) stood in the clouds. The calf (i.e., year) lowed (or desired to follow) the rays and saw the sun in all the three zones of the heavens. 9

The one alone (sun), having three mothers and three fathers, stood on high ; none ever over-weary him ; the (gods) on the summit of the sky take counsel, respecting him in a language all-comprehending, (but) not extending to all. 10

The twelve-spoked wheel of the true (sun) revolves round the heavens, and never (tends) to decay: seven hundred and twenty children in pairs, O sun, abide in it. 11

They call (him, i.e., the sun) a father having five feet and twelve forms and one possessed of rain-water in the upper half of the heavens. And these and some others call (the sun) as fixed in the chariot, having seven wheels and six spokes. 12

All beings abide in this five-spoked revolving wheel; the heavy loaded axle gets never heated; though in motion since eternal time, it knows no wear or tear (it does not give way from its hub). 13

The seven-fellied, undecaying wheel repeatedly revolves, yoked on the extended side with ten (horses) and it bears (the entire world); the orb of the sun proceeds, invested with water, and in it are all beings deposited. 14

Of these (seasons) born together, the seventh is called as born of one. The six alone are born in pairs; they move on and are born of god (the sun). Sacrifices pertaining to them are performed at proper periods, and for him who presides, the auxiliary sacrifices continue in various forms. 15

They, though females, have been called males, so we hear. He who has eyes beholds; the blind man does not see; he who is a sage-son understands this; and he who so discriminates is the father of the father. 16

The cow gets up, bearing the calf (which holds) the hind leg with the front and the front leg with the hind one. Whither does she go ? To which nalf does she go ? She delivers the young calf somewhere and not amidst the herd. 17

Where is such a wise man who knows its (calf's) father (the sun) as one traversing the lower from the upper half (in respect to the celestial region) and the upper from the lower half (in respect to the terrestrial region) ? Where is such a person who knows from whence the shining mind (moon) has been born ? Let him come and tell us if he knows. 18

Those which (the sages) have termed descending (or moving in the lower half), they have also termed ascending (or moving in the upper half) ; and those they have termed ascending, they have also called descending ; and those orbits which you, the moon and the sun, have made, bear along the worlds like (oxen) yoked to a chariot. 19

Two birds which are closely associated and intimate friends perch on the same tree. Of them one (the lower soul) tastes of its fruits ; the other (the supreme Lord) shines resplendently without tasting. 20

Where the beautiful birds (rays) cognizant (of their functions), constantly sing the glory of eternal ambrosia ; there has the Lord and steadfast protector of all beings consigned me, (though) immature in wisdom. 21

On the tree, whereon the beautiful birds taste the sweetness, where they all rest and again bring forth their offerings,—on its top, they say, the fruits are sweet, but the one who knows not the father (of the universe) has no privilege to enjoy them. [Tree=sun or the supreme Lord ; beautiful birds=rays of the sun, or lower selves]. 22

They, who know the support of gayatri on gayatri, the support of tristubh on tristubh, and the support of jagati on jagati, know the eternal. [Gayatri is a metre of 24 syllables, tristubh of 44 syllables and jagati of 48 syllables. Figuratively they represent fire, air and the sun of the terrestrial, interspatial and celestial regions]. 23

He, the Lord, constructs the Ṛks with gayatri prayers (of 24 syllables) ; with the ṛks he constructs the Saman ; and with the tristubh (of 44 syllables) the Yajuh couplet (or triplet) ; with the couplet (or triplet), he constructs the Atharvan hymns with (verses of) two or four distichs and subsequently with the syllable, they (the poets) construst the seven metres. 24

With the stanzas in the jagati metre (of 48 syllables), he fixed the milky way (or rain) in the heaven, and surveyed the sun in the interspace (or rathantara psalm). They have declared three divisions of the gayatri metre (divisions of time: past, present and future) whence the creator or Lord surpasses (all the rest) in authority and grandeur. 25

I invoke the milch cow (the cloud) that is easily milked, that the handy milker may milk her; may the creator acçept our excellent libation, that His cosmic energy (heat) may (thereby) increase ; it is for this, verily, that I earnestly invoke Him. [Cow=cloud, milk=rain, milker=wind; and again, cow=divine speech, milk=knowledge, milker=preceptor]. 26

She comes lowing, abounding in riches (products); desiring her calf in her mind ; may this cow grant her milk to the cosmic twins; may she thrive for our great advantage. [Calf=world or mankind; cow=cloud, milk=rain; and again calf=the seeker, or self ; cow=divine speech; milk= knowledge]. 27

The cow lows standing by calf with eyes half-closed, and caresses the calf with affection, licking the forehead ; she conveys her warm udders to the mouth of the calf; she bellows and feeds the calf with her milk. 28

He, (the calf), too, bellows, and encompassed by him is the cow uttering inarticulate sounds, as she repairs to her stall; (influenced) by her instincts, she behaves like a human being, and radiant as lightning, manifests her beautiful form. [Calf=cloud ; cow=earth ; refers to the thunder-clouds encompassing the earth, with occasional flashes of lightning]. 29

The soul, endowed with life-breath and fast speed, goes out and the dead body is left behind in the house. The immortal soul, hitherto living in the mortal body, keeps, on moving from life to life by its own nature. 30

I have beheld the unwearied protector of the universe, the sun, travelling (spirally) upwards and downwards by various orbits ; invested with aggregative and diffusive radiance, he revolves in the midst of the regions. 31

He who was brought to life in body does not know of it. He who sees it, is (now) concealed from it. It is hemmed in the womb of the mother, is subject to many births and finally merges into the eternity. [He=Brahman and also Eternal Time; it=lower self and also day]. 32

The heaven (or the sun) is my parent and progenitor; the navel (of the earth) is my kinsman; the spacious earth is my mother. In between the two extended flaps lies the uterus. Herein the father has deposited the germs (of the fruitfulness) of the daughter, dawn. [Father=sun, mother=earth, kinsman=earth's navel, daughter=dawn, germ=rain]. 33

I ask you, what is the uttermost end of the earth; I ask you, what is the navel of the world; I ask you, what is the fecundating power of the rain-shedding steed; I ask you, what is the supreme space of (holy) speech? 34

The altar is the uttermost end of the earth; this sacrifice is the navel of the world. The herb offering is the fecundating power (semen) of this rain-shedding steed. This Lord is the supreme space of (holy) speech. 35

The seven half-embryos (the semen of the universe) are employed in the work of supporting (the universe) by the Lord's orders. Those wise ones consciously whirl round and round the earth. [Cosmic intelligence, ego and five abstracts—colour, taste, sound, touch and smell—as the seven.] 36

I distinguish not if I am this all, for I go perplexed and bound in mind ; when the first-born (perceptions) of the Holy Law reached me, then of this speech I first obtained a portion (of the meaning). 37

The immortal soul associated with the mortal body ceaselessly moves the lower (inferior) or the upper (superior) bodies according to its own actions. They both go always together and everywhere together ; (we, the men) have comprehended the one (whilst in the physical body) but have not comprehended the other (the soul free from body). 38

The supreme Lord is omnipresent like space and eternal like his word and all Nature's bounties have their repose in Him. What will he, who knows not this (divine principle), do with the Veda ? But they who know it, they come close to Him. 39

Come, may you be rich in milk through abundant fodder, that we may also be rich (in abundance) ; eat grass at all seasons, and roaming (at will), drink pure water. 40

The divine speech has been uttered enabling the thoughts to flow, and is one-footed, two-footed, four-footed, eight-footed, nine-footed or infinite in the innermost region of heart. 41

From her (i.e. from the divine speech) the clouds (or words) shed abundant rain, and thence (the people of) the four quarters live : thence the glory of the imperishable spreads and the universe is sustained. 42

I behold near (me) the smoky clouds ; and by that one arrives at the universal concept of inference of cause (the cosmic heat) from the effect. The priests have glorified with affectionate laurels that causal fire in the fire-rituals for such are their first duties. 43

The three, with beautiful tresses, look down in their several seasons upon the earth; one of them (fire) comes forth only once in a year (the ritual fire is established once in a year) ; the second one (the sun), by his acts, brightens the universe ; the course of the third one (air) is visible though not his form. 44

Four are the definite grades of speech ; those learned who are wise know them ; three deposited in secret, indicate no meaning ; men speak the fourth grade of speech. [Four grades of speech ; Om, Bhuh, Bhuvah, and Svah, also known as Para, Pasyanti, Madhyama and Vaikhari ; Para is the innermost at the origin ; pasyanti, pertains to heart, Madhyama to intellect, and Vaikhari, the phonetically expressed through the organs of speech.]. 45

They have styled (Him, God or the sun) indra (the resplendent), mitra (the surveyor), varuna (the venerable), agni (the adorable), and he is the celestial, well-winged garutmat (the great), for learned priests call one by many names as they speak of the adorable as yama (ordainer) and matarisvan (cosmic breath). 46

The smooth-gliding waters (of the rain, the solar rays) clothing the waters with a dark cloud, ascend to heaven. They come down again from the dwelling of the rain, and immediately the earth is moistened with water. 47

The fellies (or arcs) are twelve; the wheel is one; three are the axles (or hubs); but who knows it ? Within it are collected 360 (spokes), which are as it were, moveable and immoveable. [Wheel=year ; fellies=12 months ; axles= 3 double seasons, summer, rains and winter ; spokes=360 days of luni-solar year]. 48

O divine mother (speech), that ever-full breast (with inexhaustive vocabulary), which is the source of delight, with which you bestow all good things, which is the container of wealth, the distributor of riches, the giver of good (fortune) ; that bosom do thou lay open at this moment for our sustenance. 49

The Nature's bounties (gods) glorify the sacrifice with sacrifice, for such are their duties ; those righteous ones, verily, attain the highest glory attained by the wise persons of yore. 50

The homogeneous water passes upwards (evaporates as vapours) and downwards (in the form of rains) in the course of days ; clouds give joy to the earth ; the sacrificial fires (rays) bring joy to the heaven (the sky). 51

I invoke for our protection the celestial, well-winged, swift moving, majestic (God or the sun or speech) who is the germ of the waters, the displayer of herbs, the cherisher of lakes, replenishing the ponds with rain. 52

The self:

With what kind of high aspirations are these vital senses invested, who are of the same age and dwell in the same place? From where having come, and with what kind of wisdom do these mighty ones pray to obtain strength? 1

The self:

Whose hymns do these ever-youthful ones enjoy? Who turns these vital senses to the place of work and worship. By what great hymns shall these vital senses who fly in the vast expanse of thought and action like eagles be pleased? 2

Vital senses:

Whither O mighty self, are you going alone? What has happened to you, O protector of the pious men? We speak to you whilst accompanying you. O brilliant one, speak to us; O possessor of radiant thoughts, say to us in sweet voice all that which you have to say to us. 3

The self:

May the sacred rites be mine; may the sacred songs be pleasing to me, and may the offering be delightful. May my adamantine will be hurled against evils. These hymns are for me and my praise. May these twin forces, vital and mental, carry us towards our destination. 4

Vital senses:

Therefore we, having joined with extremely swift mind and having adorned with brilliant radiance, use these variegated powers (to destroy obstructing adversaries). O self, you understand our nature. 5

The self :

Where then does that nature of yours go away, O vital senses, when you charge me alone to put an end to the evil forces? I myself am formidable, strong and mighty. I am able to bring down the arms of all my adversaries with death-dealing weapons. 6

Vital senses :

O mighty showerer, the self, much have you achieved but it has been with our concerted efforts for we too have done many things. Whenever we determine to do something, we also achieve it without fail ; whatsoever, we, the vital senses, intend to do, we do it with our own efforts. 7

The self :

O vital senses, I destroy evils with my own strength, and through my own determination, I became a superior power. I, with adamantine will-power at my command, can make these lucid softly-flowing pious thoughts accessible to everyone. 8

Vital senses :

O bounteous self, nothing done by you is unavailing. No nature's force could be as effective as you. No one that is to be born, nor any one that has been born could surpass you in these deeds which you have achieved, O exceedingly mighty self. 9

The self :

May the prowess of me alone spread all over, and may I accomplish whatever I contemplate in my mind. For, verily, O vital senses, I am formidable and conscious of my duties and to whatever I direct my thoughts. I am the expeller of pains and I rule over them. 10

O vital senses, my friends and leaders, the praises and the glorious hymns that you have offered on this occasion to glorify have gratified me considerably. May your invocations to me, the resplendent and showerer of benefits, be blessings to me for the enhancement of my personality, since they have been addressed from a friend to a friend. 11

The self :

O vital senses, you have affectionate regards towards me, and you provide me with proper nourishment and strength. May you, with your wonderful characteristics invest me with all-round splendour. 12

O vital senses, who has magnified you in this universe? May you go to the company of your friends. O wonderful ones, may you not be uncognizant of my merits. May you be regardful of my virtuous actions. 13

O vital senses, may we obtain that wisdom which assists the worshipper to perform the sacred ceremony with devotional hymns. The devotee sings these praises for you, and therefore, may you quickly turn towards him. 14

O vital senses, this praise is for you ; this sacred hymn sung by the venerable poet is for you. May you confer delight on the singer ; may this praise reach you, for the good of your persons; may we thence obtain food, strength and long life. 15

O brave soldiers, may we say that you have from your previous life inherited the germ of heroism and become leader of strong men. O loud roaring and mighty heroes, (perform your deeds of valour) advancing on the way to the battlefield to destroy enemies like the blazing fire. 1

Just as father provides nourishment to son, in the same way, O heroes, bearing goodwill towards all, skilful in warfare, in battles you playfully exhibit your brave actions. These vanquishers of enemies come to the god-loving persons for their protection, and as they are self-made they suffer no harm. 2

To that devotee, who presents offerings, these protecting and immortal heroes, gratified by dedication give abundant riches. On him, like loving friends, the heroes bestow happiness and supply plentiful water to the regions (i.e. to their agricultural land). 3

When your vehicles, which move speedily through the regions and proceed self-directed, people are alarmed and damage is done to buildings ; for so swift are your advances and so great is the dread of the thrust of your spears. 4

When these heroes advance with vigour, their dazzling rush makes the mountains echo and though friendly to men, they shake the clouds of the firmament. Even the forest lords get alarmed at your approach and the shrubs wave to and fro, as a damsel in a fast-running chariot. 5

O brave and terrible heroes, free from malice in your kindly thoughts, you fulfil our aspirations with your benevolence. Wherever your lightning missile strikes, it crunches up the enemy, as a well-hurled weapon wounds a cattle. 6

These heroes are liberal in giving shelter, possessors of inexhaustible riches, devoid of malevolence and are glorified in self-sacrifice. They go to the battlefield and dedicate themselves to the service of men for enjoying exhilarating rewards ; for they know the exact responsibilities of an ideal hero. 7

O brave, mighty and glorified heroes, may you give the person, whom you have loved, forts with all the myriad provisions for his protection. May you guard him from ruin as well as from sin. Further, may you defend him from calumny and provide amply for the nourishment of his children. 8

O brave heroes, all benevolent things are stored in your vehicles. From your shoulders hang innumerable weapons. At your resting places, when you take a long journey, ample refreshments have been provided to feed you. The axle of the chariot holds the wheels firmly together. 9

O brave heroes, in your manly arms are many good things; on your chests are golden plates; on your shoulders are brilliant ornaments; sharp are the edges of your weapons. These heroes wear various decorations, as birds with multi-coloured wings. 10

These heroes are strong with their mighty power, full of grandeur, full of splendour like the stars (or constellations) of heaven, prudent, joyful, sweet-tongued and eloquent. They are helpful to the state and deserve to be glorified in all respects. 11

O brave well-born heroes, that is your greatness. Your munificence is as extensive as the firmament. Even the head of a state favours the one who receives assistance from you. 12

O brave heroes, your alliance with us is of a long duration. O immortals, you have always listned to our invocation, and protected us. And having accepted our laudation, you have become leaders of people through your dedicated services. You are so well-known because of your favourable disposition towards mankind. 13

O quick-moving heroes, may we flourish for a long time through your greatness and through your help. May we triumph in combats. May we by these sacred acts fulfil your high expectations. 14

O brave heroes, this praise is for you ; this sacred hymn is for you, which is sung by the venerable poet, capable of conferring delight by his laudations. May this praise reach you for (the good of your) persons, so that we may thence obtain food, strength and long life. 15

O resplendent Lord, the source of gravitational forces, you know a thousand ways of protecting us ; you have a thousand types of most nutritive nourishment ; may all these be ours. You have, besides these, a thousand varieties of exhilarating wealth, and thousands of cattle; may all these be given to us. 1

May the most sapient cloud-bearing winds come to our presence with benefactions ; may they come to us with choicest celestial blessings. May they come to us with treasures alongwith the glorious lightning from the sea's farthest limits. 2

(The cloud-bearing winds are such) in whom the water-shedding, well-grasped golden coloured lightning clings in the firmament, like the wife of a man moving in seclusion under a cover, or like a spear carried rearward, or like divine speech in an assembly of the learned. 3

These brilliant, fast-moving cloud-bearing winds cling to the lightning, and drench forth the interspace and earth with rains, and yet do not upset them with their overwhelming roars. May, in the same way, the learned wish the general prosperity of all through friendly regards. 4

This lightning, with dishevelled tresses and mind devoted to her lords, wooes the cloud-bearing winds to associate with her. She, radiant in form, ascends the chariot of the restless (the cloud-bearing winds) as dawn, the daughter of the sun, on the chariot of twin-divines, and comes here with (the speed of) the sun. 5

O youthful cloud-bearing winds, when you get this ever-young lightning, who is full of life, highly accomplished and social, seated (on your chariot) for glory, then the revered worshipper, presenter of oblations, singer of devotional prayers chants melodious songs in social gatherings. 6

I celebrate the greatness of the cloud-bearing winds which is true and worthy of laudation, inasmuch as their firm-minded, benevolent, highly-respectable and fortuitous maiden bears and supports a flourishing family. [Maiden=lightning ; family=rains]. 7

O cloud-bearing winds, Nature's bounties such as the sun, oceans and rains, defend our cosmic creation from all that is reprehensible, and destroy all that is unworthy. They cause the yet unfallen and showering rains to descend, and then the rainy season brings prosperity to this world. 8

None of us, O cloud-bearing winds, have attained, either nearly or remotely, the limit of your vigour. These cloudy winds, increasing in energy and vigour, overwhelm their enemies—obstructing forces—like waters (or ocean). 9

Let us, who are the dearest friends of resplendent Lord, glorify Him today; let us glorify Him tomorrow in our sttuggles of life ; let us praise Him for our good in future days as of old, so that the supreme Lord may ever be favourable to us among men. 10

O vital principles, this praise is for you, this sacred hymn is sung for you by the venerable poet capable of conferring delight by his laudations. May this praise reach you for the good of your persons, so that we may thence obtain food, strength and long life. 11

O cloud-bearing winds, dedicated action brings forth a swift and uniform response. Verily, your intention is to discharge your duties for the benefit of mankind. So may I invite you through these glorious hymns to come down here for the protection and sustenance of inter-space and earth (by your rains). 1

These cloud-bearing winds, who are self-born, self-invigorating, and ever-moving, have been in existence to confer abundance of food and happiness. They are like thousands of undulations of the waters in a state of turmoil. They are to be admired so that they may remain near us for shedding water like cows (yielding milk). 2

They are like persons who have taken pressed out medicinal elixirs to their satisfaction; they abide like devoted adherents, in the hearts of men. Upon their shoulders rests a warrior's spear, like a youthful maiden, and in their hands they hold a sword and iron gloves. 3

Mutually supported, they descend readily from the sky. O immortal cloud-bearing winds, you animate us by your own whip. These cloudy winds, who are pure, renowned for strength and armed with their shining spears (lightnings) have shaken even the firmest rocks. 4

O cloud-bearing winds, armed with lightning spears, you drive the people to cultivate fields. Who is the being who, standing amongst you, sets you in motion, as the jaws are set in motion by the tongue ? As falling rains are essential for obtaining food so (persons desirous of sustenance) excite you in various ways like a horse undergoing daily training. 5

O cloud-bearing winds, where is that limit of the vast region (whence you come) ? Where is the other end ? When do you scatter the dense vapour like light grass ? And when do you hurl down the brilliant rain-cloud by the bolt of lightning ? 6

Like your bounty, O cloud-bearing winds, is your liberality : you are bliss-bestowing, brilliant, fruitful, full of plenteousness and benevolent. It is like the donation of a wealthy donor prompt of distribution and like the all actively-engaged subduing forces of Nature. 7

The rivers cry aloud like thunderbolts in tune with the roar of clouds. But the lightning smiles upon the earth beneath them, when the cloud-bearing rains sprinkle water on the earth. 8

The Lord of cosmos brings forth the glittering army of the quick-moving, cloud-bearing winds to fight out the mighty battle. The joint efforts of these cloud-winds soon made them realize that the desired food could be produced. 9

O cloud-bearing winds, this praise is for you; this sacred hymn is for you, which is sung by the venerable poet, capable of conferring delight by his laudations. May this praise reach you for the good of your people, so that, we may thence obtain food, strength and long life. 10

O supreme sun, yours is the greatness, since you take under your protection, with an unattached attitude, those who are also great. Therefore, O all-wise, controller of the cloud-bearing winds, grant us those blessings which are dearest to you. 1

O resplendent sun, these cloud-bearing winds which favour agriculture, and which impel the rains towards men, they all are working in co-ordination with you. The host of cloud-bearing winds is proceeding forward to win the bliss-bestowing wealth with delight. 2

O resplendent sun, your protective weapon is available to us for our aid. These cloud-bearing winds always send down the long accumulated rain. The sacred fire-divine is set ablaze for the ceremony. The oblations encompass him as the waters surround an island. 3

O resplendent sun, may you grant us quickly that wealth (which you possess), for which we would be bestowing on the donor the most worthy present. Devotees offer you, the giver of boons, their respectful prayers; and they cherish your blessings as a child cherishes nourishment and sweet milk from the bosom of its mother. 4

O resplendent sun, you possess most bounteous riches that inspire everyone who lives a dedicated life. May these vital principles show us loving kindness. These Nature s forces have always gone out to assist sacred projects. 5

The roar of the formidable dark coloured, swift-moving and advancing cloud-bearing winds is every-where echoed. They strike down the mortal opponent by their self-defending blows and throw down like a debtor who borrows money. 7

Associated with the cloud-bearing winds,· O resplendent sun, may you, for your own honour and the good of all, pierce the exhilarating containers of waters (who obstruct the shedding of rain). You are glorified by all the cosmic powers. May you help us in obtaining food, strength and long life. 8

[A dialogue between the Frustrated Self and the Inner Conscience]

Self : There is neither a certainty of today, nor of tomorrow. Who knows what a mystery it is ! Whatsoever we have accomplished through other's thinking, or whatever has been profoundly studied by us is all vanishing !! 1

Conscience : Why do you want to injure us, O resplendent self ? The vital airs are your bretheren; treat them with kindness. Do not kill us in internal conflicts. 2

Conscience : Let the priest decorate the spiritual altar and kindle the inner fire as a first step. Both of us then shall nourish and enlighten for your sake the inner fire, the inspirer of immortal wisdom. 4

Conscience : O Lord of wealth, you are the custodian of treasures; O protector of friends, you are the supporter of friends. O resplendent self, may you treat the vital airs with affection, and partake with them in the seasonal offerings of the inner sacrifice. 5

171

I (the flickering mind) come to you, O vital airs, with this reverential homage, and with this hymn, I implore your favour against the approaching impediments. Having been pacified by our praises, may you suppress your anger and send out your horses in action. 1

[This refers to the control of mind to be achieved through breathing exercises.]
O vital airs, this praise, along with proper offering is for you, and it comes out of the sincere heart; O divines, may you, accept it with favour. Since you are the augmenters of the sacrificial food, may you come with willing intentions to receive these laudations. 2

May the vital airs, now invoked, come to bestow happiness on us. May the inner self, now glorified, be propitious to us. O vital airs, may all the days of our life, yet to come, prove gratifying and be full of enjoyment. 3

O vital airs, through the fear of that vital inner self, I (the flickering mind) fly trembling. These oblations had been prepared for you, but have not been offered for this reason. Nevertheless, may you make us happy. 4

The rays of divine enlightenment in the inner realm are favoured, O inner self, by your vigour; and as they shine, they confer a spiritual consciousness. May, you, the showerer of benefits and bestower of strength, along with the highly active vital airs, grant us spiritual food and nourishments. 5

May you, inner self, protect the sense-organs, leaders to the sensualities, and be free from displeasure against vital airs. Let us gain victory over obstacles, and may we have your support in obtaining food, strength and long life. 6

When the learned wise men speak highly and unreservedly of the most illustrious dedicated man, holding a post of honour, let us greet him with sacred Vedic lores. May we extend our devotion to him by singing blissful and inspiring hymns. 1

When that dedicated man expresses his force of vigour like a lion impelled by hunger, then other strong persons also follow him and offer their assistance for the accomplishment of the desired objective. O mighty, only then assiduous and devoted men co-operate to accomplish the benevolent act initiated by you. 2

Assuredly the dedicated person achieves his objective of the sacred act, and his fame acquired thereby extends across the dimensions of time (year) and space (earth). Being brave whilst he approaches, and moves, he gathers the vitality of a horse and the benevolence of a cow, and his voice becomes effective in both the worlds. 3

We offer (to this dedicated person) the highest laurels ; the admirers of the learned and wise also present to him their homage. May he, of conspicuous lustre, occupying an eminent position, be pleased with our adorations like the immortal ones. 4

May we glorify that dedicated illustrious man who is mighty, brave and bounteous. When he proceeds speedily on a mission he becomes intensely involved in it and overcomes all difficulties. His strength is boundless and all-sided. He drives away all kinds of gloomy influences. 5

Thus he is truly superior to all others through his majesty. The vast heaven and earth are not sufficient to hold his extensive glory. This mighty resplendent soul encompasses the earth as if it is his garment and with his superior power he wears the heaven as if it were a frontlet. 6

O brave dedicated leader, the head of a state, to you alone people look for guidance during wartime just as they pay you homage with determination and assurance. At all other times, warriors and soldiers look upon you as their supreme commander. 7

When the sparkling waters of oceans rise up to form clouds for the benefit of mankind, and when fire-ceremonies are performed to bring down rain, O illustrious brave one, you express your supreme satisfaction and joy. All praise is acceptable to you and you reward with understanding, those who speak highly of you. 8

So may we be blessed by you and through your blessings achieve our higher aspirations and the friendship of honest men. May the resplendent leader of ours carrying our adorations be with us in all our benevolent deeds and thus may our worship attain its objective. 9

The followers contending for the favour of the illustrious leader vie with each other in propitiating him with devotion. Like those, who desirous of his friendship, conciliate the head of a state, with good government, so do our representatives propitiate (the leader) with benevolent activities and participations. 10

Of the two types of followers, one propitiates the illustrious leader, augmenting him by selfless unmotivated action; another is the group of insincere ones, praising him with mind averted (with selfish motives). To the first type of group, he is like a lake to a thirsty pilgrim near a sacred spot. To the other, he is like a long road, which retards the end (of the journey). 11

O resplendent illustrious leader, associated with your brave comrades, abandon us not in the grim struggle of life which confronts us at every step. For O mighty one, the best-ower of blessings and kind accepter of our oblations, whilst we have the greatest regard for you, we have no less regard for your brave associates also, and we have all praise for them too. 12

O resplendent illustrious leader, this hymn is addressed to your honour, reflecting the deep yearning of our heart towards you. May you respond to our love and be our guide. May you bless us with food, strength and long life. 13

174

O resplendent Lord, you are our sovereign king. All the Nature's forces are under your aegis. O the vital source, may you protect and foster us. You are the defender of all righteous men, the possessor of wealth, and extricator of us from sin. You are the embodiment of truth, giver of shelter and strength. 1

Resplendent Lord, you help us to subdue our sins arising from all the seven (five sense organs, vital breath, and mind). You subjugate violent people speaking offensive language. O irreproachable Lord, you let the thoughts flow freely and destory darkness to help men of discretion. 2

Resplendent Lord, invoked by all and aided by brave warriors, you reveal your glory and drive away the evil forces. May you preserve the blazing and ever-surging flames of the spiritual fire which always burns in men like the fury of a lion. 3

Let the evil forces be humbled by the might of your firm and unyielding determination and let adversaries be made inactive in their own places. When you, armed with your will power, come to force, you make virtuous thoughts flow freely. You rejuvenate the pious wise men, and brighten up their spiritual radiance. May you by your enhanced power grant purity of thought to your followers. 4

Resplendent Lord, may you turn your radiant spiritual beams, swift as the wind, to that aspirant and earnest man of discretion who is completely dedicated to your service. May the sun bring near the wheel of his chariot and may he as the lord of punitive justice subjugate our adversaries. 5

O resplendent Lord, master of strong spiritual power, invigorated by our animating praises, may you destroy unbelievers and misers. But may you bless those who are law-abiding and dedicated to you; may they lead a courageous life of bravery and obtain from you food and progeny. 6

O resplendent Lord, the sages glorify you to obtain blessings. You throw the evil forces obstructing the path of their progress and crush the evils once for all. O bounteous Lord, you set open the doors of the three-fold progress — physical, mental and spiritual, and annihilate demoniac forces which put obstacles in our progress. 7

O resplendent Lord, you are the terrifier of evil forces. You set the stream of pious thoughts to flow in torrents. And when the earth is filled with water and takes the form of the deep ocean, you take the glorious and assiduous people across it. 9

O resplendent Lord, you have been our benign protector and preserver of all. You furnish strength to all our dedicated and noble works. May we have your support in obtaining food, strength and long life. 10

175

O resplendent Lord with brilliant radiance, may you be delighted. May your own bliss be consummated. Your delightful creation, the holder of your bliss, is as exhilarating as the bliss itself. For you, the vigour, equally invigorating is the bliss, O mighty, the giver of thousand pleasures. 1

O resplendent Lord, may our offering of the spiritual delight be acceptable to you ; for (it is) invigorating, inspiring, strength-giving and most precious to us ; it is the vanquisher of adverse tendencies and is immortal. 2

Ascetic's wife :

Many years, many days and nights have passed. Dawns have come and gone. I have been intelligently working all this time. Now old age impairs the beauty of my youth. Better only strong men should approach their wives and make life fruitful. 1

The ancient sages truly obeyed the eternal laws of Nature and were honest to express their heartfelt feelings and respond to the natural urges. They did not keep the vow of absolute continence. Therefore, it is advisable that wives should be approached by strong men, and life be made fruitful. 2

Ascetic :

No penance is practised in vain since the divine powers protect all. Ultimately natural forces prevail and win over unnatural restraints. If we exert ourselves together, we can triumph over hundreds of adversities. 3

Suppressed desires overwhelm the mind arising either from this cause or from that like an obstructed stream. Then the young impatient maiden, passions suppressed, approaches her husband under deep emotional stress. She approaches her ascetic husband, snoring in deep slumber. 4

I beseach the loving God seated in my heart, that He may fully expiate the sin, which might have been committed. After all, man is subject to many desires and natural urges. 5

The ascetic, a venerable sage, following the rightful course, works as if a farmer with implements in a field desiring progeny, offspring and strength, and practises both types of obligations (the one of household life and the other of austerity) and receives true benedictions from God and elders. 6

O twin lords of cosmic vitality and consciousness, when, round the cosmic sea of space your cosmic chariot proceeds to its desired quarters, your golden fellies scatter drops of moisture. May you, accepting our sweet devotional prayers participate in our sacred morning ceremonies. 1

Direct downwards the course of your cosmic chariot which is holy, swift-moving, multi-directional and friendly to men. May the adorable sister, the dawn, prepare for your welcome, and the institutor of the ceremony worship you for the sake of obtaining strength and food. 2

You have restored milk to the cow. You have matured the first raw milk in the udders of the milch cow. The devout and earnest devotee worships you, truth personified, with dedication. He is as vigilant in the midst of the ceremony, as a snake in the midst of a thicket. 3

You render the fierce heat soothing as sweet butter to the really detached person ; for the sake of relief, you invest it with the coolness of water, therefore, for you, O cosmic twins, inspirers of the sacred works, the fire-offering is made. The sweet expressions flow towards you like chariot-wheels (down a slope). 4

O destroyer of enemies, may I by means of my prayers bring you hither, to bestow upon me that aid, which you could give to the infirm son of the saviour. Your greatness compasses earth, heaven and ocean. May this, your aged worshipper, enjoy long sinless life. 5

O bounteous ones, when you come speedily with your yoked cosmic chariot, you replenish the earth with food. May this, your worshipper, be swift as the wind to propitiate and please you. Through your great favour may he, like a pious man, obtain plenty of food and become great. 6

We, your sincere adorers, verily praise you in various ways. Our heart, the container, is full with your devotion. O blameless cosmic twin powers, showerers of benefits, may you both freely participate in the sparkling glory of God. 7

O pair of cosmic vitality and consciousness, the steady-minded sage, eminent amongst the leaders of men, arouses you daily with numerous invocations, like a musical instrument with thousands of notes so that torrents of blessings may flow from you to him. 8

When, by virtue of your cosmic chariot, you come quick to the place of worship and when, like the ministering priest, after discharging his function, you depart, gliding away, you give to the devout worshippers a reward, say, of vehicles or good horses. May we be rich, O ever-true cosmic twins, through your grace. 9

We invoke today, O pair of cosmic twin powers, with hymns for our welfare and invoke your praiseworthy cosmic chariot of undamaged wheels, while traversing the sky. May we obtain through you food, strength and long life. 10

O cosmic twin forces, bestower of protection and prosperity, we glorify you with our dedicated actions. O dearest twins, while coming to our place of worship when will you bring from the cosmic ocean, riches and nourishment? 1

O cosmic twin forces, may your celestial waves, pure, rain-drinking, swift as the tempest, heaven-born, quick-moving, rapid as thought, vigorous, well-backed and resplendent in its own light bring you hither. 2

O cosmic twin forces, firmly founded in your own station, may your cosmic chariot, which is strong, swift as mind, venerable, equipped with charming face, vast like earth, extensive, speedy, come near us for our welfare. 3

You have been glorified together, as faultless by your many famous names. One of you is victorious son of inter-space and promoter of dedicated sacred actions; the other, the auspicious offspring of cosmic stellar regions. Both of you thus uphold the entire cosmos. 4

O twin forces, may down-gliding, exalted golden coloured space-chariot of one of you, traversing at will the quarters of space, come to promote our dedicated actions; and may our men supply to the motor engines of the other the fuel and the twins shall stir the regions with roars. 5

One of you is eternal disperser of the clouds like the sun, the annihilator of foes, acceptor of devotion and bearer of numerous nourishments. The other controls the vigorous, extensive and upward going streams, capable of providing nourishments. Let these streams of favour come swelling to us. 6

O cosmic twins, hymns of devotional songs flow across three paths to secure your steady favour. May you protect him, whosoever solicits your favour and whether moving or stationary. May you hear his invocation. 7

This praise of your resplendent forms is uttered in the hall of worship, where three-fold dedication is offered. O mighty showerers of benefits, may the swollen rain-cloud, proceeding to man, nourish him like a sprinkling of cow's milk. 8

Like nourisher, the wise offerer of oblations praises you, O cosmic twin divines, as he would praise supreme God and the dawn. I am invoking you with devotion. May you help us in obtaining food, strength and long life. 9

O wise learned men, the information has been received; be ready with your praises, for the benefit-showering cosmic chariot of the twin divines has appeared. Rejoice and be ready to welcome them, For they are abiders of benevolent laws. They are sustainers of the cosmos, beneficent to mankind and giver of wisdom to the performer of noble deeds. 1

O foe-destroyer twin divines, in truth you are most imperial like resplendent Lord, and vital like wind. You are most active; you are indeed eminent riders and most distinguished charioteers. You drive a cosmic chariot, fully heaped up with ambrosia. May you come with that chariot to the dedicated worshipper. 2

O destroyer of evils, mighty cosmic twin divines, what do you do here ? Why do you linger for a man who makes no oblation, still honoured ? Pass over him; take away the life of the miser; grant light to the pious man who is eloquent in your praises. 3

O holder of eternal seed of life, annihilate them on every side who bark at us like dogs ; slay our enemies ; you know them well. Give reward and excellent wealth to the poet for the praises he offers you. Accept, O truth-abiding twins, my devotional praises. 4

You construct, amid the flood water, that animated ship with wings to fly for the saviour of the pious, whereupon, with God-devoted mind, you bear him up and quickly descending from the cosmos, you make a path for him out of the mighty surge. 5

Four ships move into the midst of the floods, sent by the cosmic twin divines. They bring safe to shore the son of the saviour. He is cast headlong into the flood by his foes, and plunges into the thick inevitable darkness. 6

What tree or cosmic chariot is that which stands fixed in the surrounding cosmic ocean, and to which the supplicating son of saviour clings? O cosmic twin-divines, as twigs are caught hold of for support by a falling creature, you bear him up to safety. 7

May this hymn, which your devout adorers utter, be acceptable to you, O ever-true cosmic twin divines. May you today, in this sacred place of worship help in obtaining food, strength and long life. 8

O showerers of benefits, make ready that cosmic vehicle which has triple seat, three wheels and is as quick as thought. With this vehicle, embellished with three elements, you come to the dwelling of the pious worshipper. With this you fly like a bird with wings. 1

Full of action, you mount this easy-rolling cosmic vehicle alighting upon the earth for the sake of sacrificial food. May this melodious hymn delight you and promote your well-being; and as you travel, may you unite with the dawn, the damsel of the cosmic region. 2

O ever-true cosmic leaders, ascend your easy-rolling cosmic chariot, filled with sacred offerings. This vehicle takes you both, to carry out your assigned work. Mounted on this you come into the house of the worshipper, to encourage him and his children to proceed to the place of worship. 3

O ever-true cosmic twin-divines, we invoke you both this day as on any other day, when the priest has kindled the fire and is singing hymns at the break of dawn, the dispeller of darkness. O twin-divines wheresoever you be, come here for the benefit of the benevolent worshipper. 1

O brave cosmic twin-divines, may you be delighted by our constant chant of sweet expressions of devotion and destroy the unfaithful misers who do not offer homage. May you graciously hear with your own ears, my pious praises, as you favour the true devotee and retain his prayers. 2

O bounteous nourisher, cosmic twin-divines, in whom is no untruth, you carry dawn, an offspring of the sun, for glory and go straight like an arrow. Your giant steeds move on, today as in the ages past, sprung from the cosmic ocean of the mighty venerable Lord. 3

O cherishers of sweet devotions and bounteous cosmic twin forces, may your grace be with us. May you be pleased with the hymns sung by earnest and active devotees. May we all be joyful in your glorious realm and obey your commands to secure fame and renown. 4

O bounteous ever-true lords of cosmic vitality and conciousness, this hymn is recited with respect and regards. Therefore, please do come to our house and be favourable to the sages of mature wisdom and bless them and their children. 5

We have crossed the sea of this darkness, O lords of cosmic light and vitality. This hymn is addressed to you; come hither along the paths by which all the Nature's forces have travelled. May we find strengthening food in abundance. 6

185

Which of these two (heaven and earth) is elder and which is younger, and how are they born, who knows, O sages ? Both of you independently support the entire universe, and day and night revolve very much like wheels. 1

These two heaven and earth, though apparently motionless and footless, sustain creatures moving and footed. As a son is nursed on the lap of his parents, similarly, O heaven and earth, defend us from perils and miseries. 2

I solicit the unrivalled bounty of the sun which is perfect, celestial, deathless and exempt from any kind of harm. May heaven and earth produce this wealth for him who adores them. O heaven and earth, defend us from perils and miseries. 3

The heaven and earth are the source of natural forces, are not subject to annoyance, and satisfy all beings with food. May we live in harmony with them all the days and nights. O heaven and earth, defend us from perils and miseries. 4

Going always together, young and of the same limits, these twin sisters exist as if lying in their parents' bosom, kissing the navel of the world together. O heaven and earth, defend us from perils and miseries. 5

I invoke these two, heaven and earth, who are beautiful to look on, who sustain ambrosial showers, who are vast and mighty and the progenitor (of rain and corn), for the protection of enlightened devotees. O heaven and earth, defend us from peril and miseries. 6

O heaven and earth, splendid, extensive of varied forms, bounteous, all-sustaining, and of limitless bounds, I address you with this hymn of praise; O heaven and earth defend us from perils and miseries. 7

Whatever sin or offence we may have at any time committed against Nature's forces, against our friends, or against the Lord of the universe, thereof may this hymn be expiation. O heaven and earth, defend us from perils and miseries. 8

May both these blessed benefactors of mankind preserve me. May heaven and earth equip me with all the means of protection. O divine forces, may we, while enjoying plenty of food, be blessed with wealth for liberal charity. 9

Endowed with understanding, I have recited this excellent hymn to you, O heaven and earth, to be heard around. May father, the heaven and mother, the earth, preserve us from reprehensible iniquity and be always close to us to offer protection. 10

May this my prayer, which I address to you, be fulfilled, O earth and heaven—father and mother. May you always be ready with your protection in the proximity of those who praise you. May you help us in obtaining food, strength and long life. 11

186

May the divine sun, the benefactor of all men, come benignly to our cosmic sacrifice together with Nature's other divinities. May you, ever young, gladden all our people by your participation. 1

May all the bounties of triumphant Nature, such as cosmic light, cosmic order and cosmic plasma, come here in unison for participation in the sacrifice of creation. May they all be promoters of our welfare, and with great might may they preserve our strength from slackness. 2

I praise with hymns, O Nature's bounties, your best beloved participant, the cosmic fire, who is prompt to partake of the oblation, and who is well-pleased along with you ; so that thereby the cosmic plasma, the possessor of renown, the subduer of foes, the animator of men, may provide us with the power of creativity. 3

I approach you, night and dawn, with reverence as willingly as a gentle cow comes to be milked, mixing for you on the appropriate day the sacrificial food, consisting of the many preparations of milk within the same udder. 4

May lightning grant us happiness. May river nourish us as a cow does her calf, whereby we may propitiate the grandson of the waters, the fire divine, whom the clouds, swift as thought, convey. 5

Moreover, may the architect of creation come to this sacrifice, equally well-pleased with those who praise Him at the excellent rite at which He is present ; may the most potent resplendent Lord, the protector of man, the destroyer of darkness, come to bless the benevolent actions of men. 6

May our minds too, yoked together like horses, tend to the ever-youthful resplendent Lord, as cows to their calves and may our songs yield to Him, the most delightful Lord, as husbands embrace their wives. 7

May the vital principles too, all of one nature, come from heaven and earth to the sacrifice ; may they who are a mighty host, who have many-coloured steeds, who are like protecting chariots, and who are devourers of foes, come like friendly deities. 8

For, verily, their greatness is well known, as they diligently discharge their functions ; by which their spout pours rain upon every arid soil, as light spreads universally on a fine day. 9

Propitiate for protection the pair of twin powers and the provider of nourishment, independent and perfect in their own spheres. Friendly may be to us the omnipresent, omnipotent and omniscient God. I express my regards to all of them for my happiness. 10

O reverent devotees, may that wealth-abounding effulgence which manifests itself amongst the Nature's bounties and gives animation to their perpetual existence help us to obtain food, strength and long life. 11

187

Now I will glorify food that bestows great strength and by whose vigour creatures in all the three regions (water, earth and air) are able to overcome obstacles and acquire wealth. 1

O delicious drinks and sweet food, we adore you; may you be our protection. 2

Come hither to us, O nutritious food, benevolent with favourable aids, source of happiness, unkind to none, friendly, benign and indiscriminatingly one to all. 3

These saps which, O food, are yours, are diffused in space throughout the regions like vapours. 4

O nutritious delicious food, those who enjoy you sharing you with others are dear to you. Those, on the contrary, who relish your flavours alone are vain ones. 5

O nutritious food, even the mind along with the sense-organs depends on you (for their vigour). Under your banner and protective help, the intellect is helped to get over the evil thoughts. 6

O nourishing food, when water-laden clouds arrive in plenty then, O sweet food, may you be available to us at hand in abundance for eating. 7

May we enjoy in abundance the food, milk, butter and condiments, and may thereby our body grow healthy and strong. 8

O gracious food, we enjoy you, combining milk products along with barley preparations ; may thereby our body grow healthy and strong. 9

O cake of fried meal, may you be wholesome, substantial and strengthening. May thereby, our body grow healthy and strong. 10

We draw from you, O nourishing food, by our prayers, the sacrificial gifts for offerings as we draw milk from cows for oblation. You are as delightful to the elite as to us. 11

188

O divine conqueror of thousands, kindled by the dedicated worshippers you are shining brilliantly today. You are the prudent messenger of cosmic forces. May you convey our oblations to them. 1

The sacred metabolic fire proceeds to react with the nutritious food and produces thousands of types of body-building units. 2

O metabolic fire, you are adorable and endowed with thousands of glories. Invoked by us, may you bring hither such Nature's bounties as are benevolent. 3

Devotees, with their prayers, prepare facing to the east, such sacred seats, on which countless dedicated worshippers take their place. O suns, may you also grace this place with your presence. 4

They have sprinkled water (and oil) on the doors of the fire-place variously and perfectly radiant, manifold, excellent, many and numerous. 5

May the brilliant and beautiful day and night, shining with surpassing lustre, participate in the sparkling glory of God. 6

Let these two chief, eloquent, divine sages who are invokers of Nature's bounties help us in performing all dedicated actions. 7

O divine mother of culture, wisdom and speech, I invoke you all that you may guide us on the path of prosperity. 8

The supreme author of this universe has fashioned all forms of beings and has given distinct shapes to all animals. 9

O forests, create nutritious food on your own, for all living beings, for the consummation of the metabolic fire. 10

The fire divine, preceder of cosmic bounties, is honoured with the sacred metre of Gayatri. He glows when oblations are offered commencing with the word Svaha. 11

O adorable God, may you lead us along the wholesome path for our prosperity, since O Lord, you are in knowledge of all our actions. May you cleanse us of the sin that forces us astray. With humility, we offer you our most reverential homage. 1

O reverential adorable God, lead us beyond all danger and affliction. May our city be spacious and land extensive. May you bless our children and offspring with prosperity and happiness. 2

O adorable God, keep us away from disease and from those men who are non-believers and adverse to us. O protector of noble deeds, may you ordain all immortal cosmic bounties to work for our welfare. 3

O adorable God, cherish us with incessant protective bounties; shine always in our hearts with your divine consciousness. O ever-youthful adoıable God, let no danger touch him who praises you. O mighty one, let no danger touch any one else too. 4

O mighty adorable God, keep us away from the wicked, voracious and malevolent enemy that brings us trouble. Abandon us not to one who has fangs and who bites, nor to one without teeth, nor to the one malignant ; O powerful one, nor may you give us up to disgrace. 5

O adorable God, sustainer of eternal laws, your honest worshipper glorifies you to seek protection for his physical body. May you guard him from all who are inclined to harm or revile him. O divine God, surely you are the adversary of those who are oppressive. 6

O all-wise adorable God, you discriminate between both of them (godly and godless). May you bless the worshipper at the appropriate time and be the bestower of his wishes. May you instruct men, like the priest, who directs the institutor of the sacred ceremony. 7

We address our pious compliments to the terrestrial fire, born of mechanical attrition, and which is the subduer of foul odours. May we, by these sacred invocations, obtain food, strength and long life. 8

Glorify with hymns the universal preceptor who is blameless, worthy of adoration, showerer of benefits, sweet-tongued and mighty. He is the one to whose sermons the enlightened and pious devotees listen with respect. 1

To Him are addressed the hymns appropriate to the occasion and they serve Him well. Verily He is the creator of those worshippers who aspire to be enlightened. He, the universal preceptor like the cosmic wind, manifests His extensive power in the vast jurisdiction of the universe. 2

May He accept the compliments, the verses which narrate His details. May He bring forth His light, like the outstretched arms of the sun. Opposed by none, He maintains His daylike glory and he is mighty in vigour like a terrible wild beast. 3

His glory spreads through heaven and earth like the sun; He is remarkable, worthy of adoration, source of wisdom and bestower of happiness. Like hunter's weapons the justice of the universal preceptor chases daily the wicked. 4

O universal preceptor, you do not bestow wealth upon those stupid men who are sinful and mean and live merely on your bounty, considering you as an old ox. But you favour him who is dedicated to you. 5

He is like a fair path where grass is pleasant and like a friend who is, though hard to win, yet very affectionate. May those sinless men who instruct us, though enveloped by ignorance, come out of their covering (from their stupidity). 6

To whom hymns of praise go forth as men assemble round a master; and as rivers rolling between their banks flow to the ocean, in the same way the universal preceptor, the wise, eagerly looks at the rivers and the boats going across. 7

So, the universal preceptor the mighty, the beneficent, the powerful, the showerer of benefits has been glorified. May He thus lauded give us vigour, wisdom and wealth. May we find strengthening food in full abundance. 8

Creatures, poor or rich in venom or some venomous aquatic reptiles; creatures of two kinds stinging and unobserved, both infect me with poison. 1

This (antidote herb) destroys the unseen venomous creature, destroys the seen and departing creature. It destroys them even (by its odour) and while being ground, crushes these venomous creatures. 2

Some reptiles live in small grass (Saccharum Sara), some behind long grass (Poa Cyanosuroides), some in soft grass (Saccharum spontaneous), some in the meadow grass (saccharum munja, Andropogon muricatum etc.) adjacent to the rivers, some in the jute grass. All these unobserved reptiles have infected me with poison. 3

When cows settle down in their stalls, the wild beasts retreat to their lairs, the senses of men go to rest, then the unseen reptiles infect me with their poison. 4

These reptiles are like lurking thieves at an evening time. They appear to see everyone but remain unseen themselves. Therefore, O men, be vigilant. 5

Heaven is your father, earth your mother, moon is your brother, sunshine your sister. Live in your own holes, unseen and yet seeing all; enjoy your own pleasure. 6

Those who move with their shoulders, those who move with their bodies, those who sting with sharp fangs, those who are virulently venomous, why are you here, ye unseen? Depart together away from us. 7

The all-seeing sun rises in the east, the destroyer of the unseen, driving away all the unseen (venomous creatures) and all evil insects of the night. 8

The sun has risen on high destroying all poisons. The sun, the all-seeing, the destroyer of all-unseen things, rises behind the top of the hills for the good of living beings. 9

I deposit the poison in the solar orb, like a leather bottle in the house of a vendor of spirits. Verily, the sun will not die, nor shall we die ; for though afar, yet with all his powerful beams he will overtake the poison. The science of antidotes shall convert the poison into sweet ambrosia. 10

This little insignificant bird has swallowed your venom; she does not die; nor shall we die; for, although afar, yet with all his beams of rays, he, the sun, will overtake the poison and the science of antidotes shall convert the poison into sweet ambrosia. 11

May the thrice-seven sparks of fire consume the influence of the venom; they verily do not perish; nor shall we die; for, although afar, yet with all his beams of rays, he, the sun, will overtake the poison and the science of antidotes shall convert poison into sweet ambrosia. 12

I recite the names of ninety and nine rivers, the destroyers of poison; although afar, the sun with his beams, will overtake the poison; the science of antidotes has converted you, poison, into sweet ambrosia. 13

May the thrice-seven peahens, the seven-sister rivers, carry off, O body, your poison, as maidens with pitchers carry away water. 14

May the insignificant mungoose carry off your venom, poison ; if not, I will crush the vile creature with a stone ; so may the poison depart from my body, and go to distant regions. 15

Hastening forth at the command, thus spoke the mungoose, (who was familiar with an antidote herb): the venom of the scorpion is innocuous; scorpion, your venom is innocuous. 16

Book I

Hymns 122-191

प्रथमं मंडलम्

सूक्तानि १२२–१९१

Hymn-122

For verse 4 see Nir. VI. 21.

1. Raghumanyavah, mild tempered (लघुक्रोध:) —Daya.; little wrath (raghu=laghu).

2. Starih na, from stara, cover, the boat covered with mechanical devices; like the boat —Daya., like the sun invested or clothed with light (Sayana); also destructive of foes (स्तरी: शत्रूणां हिंसक: तेजसाच्छन्न: वा आदित्य: —Sayana).

3. Vasarha, one capable of providing residence, or comfortable (वसानां वासहेतूनामर्हक: —Daya.). ·Also means Agni or fire, as assuming various vestures (vasa) or forms in the Garhapatya and other fires; or as destroying the vesture of the earth, the trees; or as causing the revolutions of day and night.

Indra-parvata, like the sun and clouds; another name of Indra, as regulating the parvas, the joints or periods of the day or year (Sayana).

4. Napatam-apam, the grandson of water (Agni is regarded so. From water or moisture, trees and shrubs come out, and the fire procceds from timber and hence fire is the grandson of water)—Sayana and Wilson; cf. Manu IX. 321. According to Dayananda, Na-pata is not falling (of rains); it means also the ever continuing path; never coming to an end.

Matara, the one loving as mother; also day and night; a pair of measurers or surveyors, (मानकारकौ;—Daya.).

5. Ausijas, see I.18.1; 112.11; 119.9; 122.4; 5; IV.21.6; V. 41.5; VI. 4.6; X.99.11; the son of Usij, the son of a lover of knowledge.

6. Sindhuh, a river; Sayana regards it as a deity presiding over waters (जलाभिमानी देव:).

7. Pare, in the conveyer (गमके, Daya.). See I.116.7; 117.6; 122.7.

Srutarathe and Priyarathe, in the enjoyable or famous chariot; in the charming or favourite chariot (Daya.); Sayana refers the two terms to mayi (मयि), "on me possessing a famous car, a favourite car."

8. Mahimaghasya radhah, the wealth of an honest and respectable dealer or a business magnate. Also company or assembly of the gods.

Nahusa, a man, bound by the cycle of his actions, good or vicious (Daya.), (Nigh. II.3).

9. Abhidhruk, one offending or opposing from the front (Daya.).

Aksnayadhruk, one offending or opposing in a crooked manner (Daya.). Offends by a wheel (चक्रेण) or a way (मार्गेण); or in other manner (अन्यथा प्रकारेण)—Sayana.

Yaksmam hṛdaye nidhatte, he places or deposits consumption (a disease) in the heart. Yaksma may also be regarded a sickness in general.

11. Amṛtasya nahusah havam sureh—nahusa=a learned person, havam = a word of sincere advice (Daya.); sureh=person adept in knowledge, well-versed man. "The invocation of the immortal deity by me a mortal worshipper." (Wilson).

12. Dasatayasya, one well versed in ten disciplines of knowledge (Daya.); a decade; Sayana renders it as food, by which the vigour of the ten senses is augmented; also Soma juice offered in ten ladles (Sayana).

13. Dasatayasya, of ten sorts; of the ten indriyas (organs of sense).

Dvi-panca, two times five : by five, we have teacher, preceptor, student, disciple and general people (Daya.); Sayana interprets it as ten ladles for some oblations.

Istasvah, the one who gets the horses.

14. Arnah, purified water; also a synonym of form or rupa; a son (Sayana).

Hiranyakarna, one with rings or kundala in ears; manigriva, with a necklace of precious stones in neck (Daya.).

15. Sisvah, the one worthy of being instructed or trained

(Daya.); infants; childish.

Hymn-123

1. Daksinayah, from the south side (Daya.); or the clever one; one who is skilled in her own function (Sayana).

Cikitsant, healing, remedying the malady of darkness or ignorance; bringing health.

2. Vajam, moving, motive; vijnanam or knowledge (Daya.); jayanti vajam, victoriously gathering divine knowledge (Daya.); the darkness, that goes away with the dawn (Sayana); also producing food as the reward of morning sacrifice.

3. Bhagam, share, participation.

Suryaya for the enlightenment from God (Daya.). (So that the sun or enlightenment may come).

4. Ahana, by the day; by the dawn; Ahana may be synonymous with dawn (Yaska, Nir. XI. 6).

7. Ahani, day and night (aho-ratri).

8. Varunasya, of the sun (Sayana); of the wind (Daya.).

Trimsatam yojanani, 30 yojanas = 120 kroshas.

Varuna may be identified with the sun as the remover of darkness, who according to Sayana, revolves daily round Mount Meru, the centre of the earth, performing diurnal circuit of 5059 yojanas; the dawn being always 30 yojanas in advance of his rising; or first apperance from behind the mountain in the east (the period called dawn is reckoned from the disappearance of the stars to the appearance of the sun, and is measured as to the duration by 21 ghatikas and 26 palas or paras. Taking the ghatika at its lowest valuation = ½ of a muhurta = 24 minutes; and a pala or para = 1/30th of a ghatika, we should have in a day or 60 ghatikas more than one third allotted to the dawn, which is definitely an error. Again if the sun travels 5059 yojanas in 24 hours, he travels at the rate of about 84 yojanas in one ghatika; and as the dawn is in advance only 30 yojanas, it is in time less than half a ghatika before the sun; a more correct estimate than the 22 ghatikas of Sayana's commentary (Wilson).

12. Gomatih, one possessing earth; or rays (Daya.).

Hymn-124

For verses 4 and 7 see Nir.IV. 16 and III.5 respectively.

1. Ityai, for going; for getting or acquiring (प्रापयितुं, Daya.); for our use (Wilson); for carrying on our own affairs (Sayana).

2. Aminati, not leaving, not injuring (अहिंसन्ती—Daya.); not opposing, not unsuited to.

Praminati, particularly injuring (प्रकृष्टतया हिंसन्ती—Daya.).

4. Sundhyuvah, the solar rays (आदित्यकिरणा: —Daya.).

Vaksah, the achieved thing (Nigh. IV. 2); according to Sayana, sundhyuh is the name of the sun; also a water bird of white colour, to whose white plumage the morning light may be compared (Wilson). Also when used in plural, it means waters (शुन्ध्युरादित्यो भवति शोधनात्). (शकुनिरपि शुन्ध्युरुच्यते शोधनादेव आपोपि शुन्ध्युव उच्यन्ते शोधनादेव—Nir. IV.16).

Nodhas, a learned person, well-versed in different disciplines of study; a seer, composer or interpreter of a new hymn. (Nir. IV. 16). As he makes his desires apparent in his songs of praise, so dawn manifests her beauteous forms.

Admasat, of the one that evokes the food (adma=food or dwelling); sad=who goes or abides; the mistress of the house, that rises with the dawn and wakes up the sleepers of the household.

5. Aptyasya, of the extensive world.

6. Ajamim, one that is not one's wife (Daya.).

Jamim, belonging to one's own species (सजातीय—Sayana); one's own wife.

Also jamim, gods or divine beings (of same species); ajamim, human beings or विजातीय, or of different species.

7. Abhrateva. like the daughter, who has no brother.

Pumsah, of the person, or for the support.

Pratici, looking or going to the West (Usa's face towards the West),

Garta-arugiva, like the one lying in the pit of poverty and trouble.

Sanaye dhananam, for the division of property.

Like the one who ascends (aruh, to mount) a house (garta-gṛha) for the gift or receipt of riches; (applicable to the dawn and to the girl who has no brother).

We have in the Nirukta (III. 5) : Like a brotherless maiden, who goes towards men, i.e. parental ancestors to render the duties of offspring and to offer the funeral cake, but not to her husband. Like one who ascends the pillar of the assembly room* in order to obtain wealth, i.e. a woman from the south. Garta signifies the pillar of the assembly room (गर्तः सभास्थाणुर् गृणातेः सत्यसंगरो भवति, Nir. III. 5); it is derived from the √गृ, to invoke (गृ निगरणे); transactions made under it are true. There she, who has neither son nor husband, ascends. There they strike her with dice; she obtains wealth. The cemetry heap is also called garta being derived from √गुर, to raise; it is raised up (श्मशान संचयोऽपि प्रगर्त उच्यते, गुरुतेरपगूर्णो भवति, Nir. III. 5).

Jaya-via patye etc. Like a well-dressed wife, eager for the husband at the proper seasons, dawn displays her beauty as a smiling damsel her teeth (or her form). According to Yaska, there are four similies: one should not marry a brotherless maiden, for his (the husband's) son belongs to him (to the father of the girl). From this the prohibition of marrying a brotherless maiden and the father's right to appoint his daughter as a son are evidnent. When a father selects a husband for his unmarried daughter, he unites himself with a tranquil mind. Now, some law-givers cite the following stanza in support of the denial of a daughter's right to inheritance (Manu IX. 134). Some are of opinion that the major share belongs to the appointed daughter (cf. Ṛv. III. 3.2. See also the Atharva, I.17.1).

Hymn-125

For verse 2 see Nir. V. 19.

---

*Durga remarks that the custom of the South Indian people is that a woman who has lost her son and husband approaches the dice-board, and the gamblers make a collection for her.

2. Muksijayeva padim ut-sinati—A net is so called from being let loose on the ground (मोचनाच्च), or from lying on the ground (शयनाच्च) or from being spread on the ground (ततनाच्च, Nir. V. 19).

3. Isteh putram, son of the householder's position (इष्टस्य गृहाश्रमस्य स्थानात्—Daya.); son of sacrifice. Sayana explains putra as पुरु त्रातारम्, much-protecting, or कर्त्तारम्, performer. Dayananda renders putra as one pure, or the son (पवित्र तनयम्).

4. Prnantam ca papurim ca, one who gives pleasure, repletion or satisfaction (पृणन्तं, पुष्यन्तं, पपुरिं, पुष्टम् —Daya.). Sayana associates prnantam to progenitors (pitr)—पृणन्तं पितॄन् प्रीणयन्तम्, and papurim, to all living beings (प्राणिनः पृणयन्तं पुरुषम्) (पपुरिं प्रीणनशीलमिष्टदातारम्).

5. Iyam daksina, the fee or gifts obtained from teaching (Daya.); Sayana interprets daksina as earth or bhumi, that is able (daksa) to bear crops.

6. Daksinavatam, the givers of gifts, as well as the acceptor of gifts.

Imani citra, these wonders, these variegated things (चित्राण्यद्भुतानि); also personal decorations, as garlands, sandals, jewels and pearls.

7. Anyas tesam paridhir astu, may some other one be their surrounding defence (Wilson); or be their kavacasthaniya (कवचस्थानीय, in the place of armour)—Sayana. Sayana is not clear about the sense of anyas (may be any person—तेभ्योऽन्यो यः कोऽपि पुरुषः).

Hymn-126

2. Satam niskan, hundred gold coins (niskan sauvarnan—Daya.); one niska=4 suvarnas (another gold coin)—Manu. (VIII. 134); but according to the Amarakosa, it is rated at 108 suvarnas; Panini also refers to niska.

4 -5. Pajrah, available to others प्रपन्नाः पद्यन्ते गच्छन्ति मार्गान् यैस्ते—Daya.).
See also I. 51. 14; 116. 7; 117. 6; 10; 126. 5; 167. 6; 190. 5; VI. 59. 4; VIII. 4. 17; 6. 47; 63. 12; IX. 82. 4; X. 106. 7.

Vah, those who proceed or accompany,ये व्रजन्ति,—*Daya.*Nigh. IV. 2.

Aridhayaso gah, to be held or attained by rich man (Sayana); by braves dealing with enemies (Daya.).

5. Visya iva vrah, by troops of people having mutual affection (Sayana); like the business people or like the one prominent amongst common men (Daya.).

Anasvantah, the one possessing numerous carts (Daya.); having carts or barrows (Sayana). (Small carts are used to carry Soma plant in Soma sacrifices).

6. Parigadhita, mixed all around; the well-meant policy from all sides (for gadhyati, see Nir. V. 15). Gadhyam is derived from √ग्रह्, to seize. Like food which is to be seized, they desire to unite themselves with the straightforward (IV. 16.11). The verb √गध् means to mix; mixed on all sides, mixed all around (आगधिता परिगधिता, I. 126.6).

7. Romasa, the one with profuse hair on body.

Gandhari, the queen-empress (पृथिवी-राजधर्त्तृं, Daya.).

Hymn-127

The hymn consists of 11 verses in asti (verses I-3, 8, 9); bhurig-asti (verses 4, 7 and 11) atyasti (verses 5 and 6), and bhurig-atisakvari (verse 10) metres.

In this hymn and the twelve following, the verse is arranged in three lines and the number of syllables varies from 57 to 79, being in most of the lines 65, 66, 67; the distribution of the feet does not seem to follow any definite rule.

It is a peculiar feature of this and other twelve hymns, to reiterate a leading word which occurs the third or fourth from the end of the first line, and sometimes also of the third, and to repeat it as the last word of the line, (सूनुं सहसो जातवेदसं विप्रं न जातवेदसम्; and so on). This is for verbal beauty of the lines, alliterative and musical. It is in no way easy to retain the beauty of the original parucchepa hymns in translations.

4. Vaneva, like rays (vana=rays —Nigh I. V).

5. Uparasu, in the cardinal directions (upara=directions, दिश्; Nigh. I. 6).

7. Kistasah, men of wisdom (Nigh. III. 15).

Bhṛgavah, the destroyer of pains (Daya.).

10. Ksasu, on the earth (Nigh. I. 1).

Jurnih, suffering from fever etc. (Daya.).

Hymn-128

1. Ila, or Ida—Reverence.

पदिदिडस्पदे परिवीत इडस्पदे—On a spot or site of ground, on the earth i.e. the altar; they call the altar the utmost end of the earth; so much, verily, as is the earth as much as is the altar.

According to Sayana, Ida (Ila) is the daughter of Manu, and pada refers to the spot where in the form of a cow, go-rupa, she placed her feet, alluding to the legend of Manu's daughter being the first institutor of sacrificial rites (Wilson). Ida, the daughter of Manu, was the institutor of sacrifice; glory to the butter-charged footmark of Ida.

6. Aratih, one who is not easily pleased; a sovereign; one who helps in attaining right conduct (Daya.).

Taranih, one that helps in coneying across (Daya.); one who conveys across the sea of life; also an epithet of the Sun or Agni.

Na may mean iva or like and not (negative) both. In the negative sense, it is attached to sisrathat, loosened, let go.

7. Trasate varunasya dhurtemaho devasya dhurteh, preserves us from the malevolence of the obstructor of religious rites (Sayana); varuna=varaka, the impeder.

Hymn-129

For verses 6 ond 8, see Nir.X. 42 and VI. 4 respectively.

2. Nṛbhih, by leaders, officers (Daya); by men (i.e. by maruts)—Sayana; also by worshippers.

3. Yavin ararum sura martyam pari-vṛnaksi martyam—Thou mixest with the departing mortal, thou abandonest the mortal (Wilson). Sayana interprets the first martyam as cloud, the skin that contains the rain; vṛsanam, tvacam, trying to escape; like an enemy, from the hero, sura; the second martyam is also cloud, but it is after it has parted with its waters, like an enemy who has been killed and whom then victor abandons (Wilson).

4. Pṛtsusu, in the battle (संग्राम)—Nigh. II. 17.

9. parake, in the distant land (Nigh. III. 26).

10. Tva mahima saksat avase mahe mitram, great is present to thee for protection, as to mitra for great protection (Wilson).

Mitra, the friend (Daya.)—as praise animates a friend, with great attachment.

Adrivah, from √ad to eat : devourer of foes. (Nir. IV. 4); adrih, thunderbolt, is so called because with it he splits (mountains), or it may be derived from √अद् to eat.

11. Tva janita jijanad vaso—Here vasa is an abode of all; one who resides in the hearts of good people (Daya.). यः सज्जनेषु वसति तत्सम्बुद्धौ (Daya.). Asylum of all men (Wilson).

Janita, genitor, the first maker of the universe (Sayana).

Hymn-130

1. Vidathaniva satpatir astam rajeva satpatih—Here vidatha=a battle or samgrama (Daya.); sat patih, lord of virtuous people, (Daya.); cherisher of the good (Sayana); rajeva, like the one shining, (Daya.).

Vidatha, is also an apartment of sacrifice.

2. Avatam na vansagah, tatṛsano na vansagh—Tatṛsanah, very thirsty (Daya.); vansagah, first, the good distributor; the second, an ox (vṛsabhah)—Daya.; man going swiftly (Sayana),—like a thirsty ox to a well; like an ox.

3. Nihitam guham nidhim, the hidden treasure. According to a legend, this refers to the soma plant, brought from heaven by Gayatri, (Taittirya School legend).

Isah parivṛtah—According to Sayana, it refers to the rains shut up in the clouds. In the second reiterated phrase, the same may mean the seeds shut up in the earth, germinating on the fall of the rain, and affording in either case food (isah=food).

4. Gabhastyoh, of the arms (बाहु, Nigh. II. 4).

Ksadmeva, like the water; ahi-hatyaya, for the destruction of cloud (Daya.).

5. Vṛtha, without a purpose (Daya.); without an effort (Sayana); fruitlessly or in vain.

7. Nṛto, of a twister of the body parts for acquiring knowledge (Daya.); of a dance; of one dancing in war.

For Divodasa, atithigvaya and Sambaram, see earlier notes.

Atithigva : I. 51.6; 53.8; 10; 112.14; 130.7; II. 14.7; IV. 26.3; VI. 18.13; 26.3; 47.22; VIII. 53.2; X. 48.8.

Divodasa : I. 112.14; 116.18; 119.4; 130.7; 10; and other references.

Sambaram : I. 51.6; 54.6; 59.6; 101.2; 103.8; 112.14; 130.7; II. 12.11; 14.6: 19.6; 24.2; IV. 30.14; 26.3; VI. 18.8; 26.5: 31.4; 43.1; 47.2; 21; VII. 18.20; 99.5; IX. 61.2.

8. Tvacam krsnam. black skin; stripped of skin, (√कृष्, to draw); atractive skin. There is a legend also. An asura, named kṛsna or 'black' advanced with ten thousand followers to the bank of the ansumati river, where he committed fearful devastation, until Indra with the Maruts, was sent against him, by Bṛhaspati, when he was defeated by Indra and stripped of his skin.

9. Surascakram pra bṛhat, he threw the sun's wheel (Sayana), or the wheel of the chariot of the sun. There is a mythological legend in this respect :

The asuras obtained a boon from Brahma that they should not be destroyed by the thunderbolt of Indra, and having in consequence defied him, he cast at them the wheel of the sun's car, which was equally fatal. This is a baseless legend, more of a Pauranic character than the Vedic. (Sayana as quoted by Wilson).

Vacam musayati, deprives them of speech or existence, steals or takes away speech. (Wilson).

Musayati, behaves like a cutter (खंडक इवाचरति—Daya.).

10. Divodasebhih, by the giver of enlightenment (Daya.).

Hymn- 131

3. Mithuna, a pair of man and woman (Daya.); couples consisting of husband and wife; this verse gives wife a right for full participation in sacred duties of life, like agnihotra etc. Sayana discusses this verse with his conservatism and reconciles only to the extent that whilst a wife cannot independently study the Vedas, and cannot alone perform the sacred rites of agnihotra, she would do all these with her husband and recite the Vedic mantras too. See Purva Mimansa, for sanctioning right to women in yajnas (Chapter VI, adhikarana 3-4.). Mithuna tatasre, husband and wife (the yajamana and his patni) perform yajna together.

4. Purah saradih—As defended for a year by walls and ditches (Sayana).

5. Pṛtanasu, amongst men (Nigh. II. 3)—Daya.

Cakartha karam, uttered a shout; karasabda, a noise or sound (Sayana). This may be a war cry or an exclamatory slogan.

7. Ristam na yaman, like one wearied on the road; towards whom evil design may be entertained by robbers (Sayana); to punish as deserved (हिंसितं इव यामनि —Daya.).

Hymn-132

For verse 1 see Nir. V. 2.

1. Vanuyama vanusyatah : vanusyati means the action of slaying; its grammatical form is not known. "May we slay those who seek to injure us". This is a Vedic quotation. "May we, in battle, conquer those the perverse and him who seeks to injure the long-spread (dirgha-prayajyum) (sacrifice)". May we, in battle, conquer the perverse (dṛdhyam. दृढ्यम्), i.e. the pernicious, the sinful person (पापधियम्) who desires to spoil our long-spread (dirgha-pratata) sacrifice. (दीर्घप्रततयज्ञम्, Nir. V. 2).

Bhare krtam, pious rites concerning sustenance; also concerning war (Nir. IV. 24, भर इति संग्रामनाम)—Daya. May our pious rites attain the gods; attain the presence of gods (Wilson).

2. Svasminnanjasi, in both places, epithets of vakmani, which according to Dayananda, means upadese (in the teachings), otherwise marge, on the road or path. The first is as usual, peculiar, the latter is explained by Sayana as honest, straight, free from fraud, etc.

To Dayananda, the first anjasi is prakata. (प्रकट) i.e. in the open, and the second kamayamane (कामयमाने) in the desired or aspired manner. In fact, it is always difficult to expound the puns or double meanings of the reiterated terms.

3. Ṛtasya varasi ksayam, thou art possessed of the place of the abode of the sacrifice, termed ṛta, or the true, as giving unfailing reward, or ṛta means water, and then, we have: "Thou abided in the dwelling of water", equivalent to the sender of rain. Ṛta also means the sun, and then we have: "Thou caused (the sacrificer) to go to the region of the sun".

According to Dayananda: Ṛtasya var asi (=वा:+असि) ksayam= सत्यस्य जलमिव असि प्राप्तव्यम् ।

Varam akrnvata ksayam= वर्तुं कुर्वन्तु निवासम् ।

Gavesanah—(i) यो गां वाणीमिच्छति स:, here go=speech; (ii) गवां किरणानां इष्ट: सूर्य इव; here go=rays.—Daya.

Gavesanah, (i) possessed of, or practising the seeking after water; the sender of rain; (ii) maker of search after the cows; or the seeker for the reward of the worshipper (Sayana).

4. Vrajam—This occurs twice; Dayananda gives two meanings: (i) ज्ञातव्यम्, worth knowing and अधर्ममार्गम्, the non-virtuous or vicious path. According to Sayana, the two meanings are (i) a cloud, and (ii) the cattle cf the angirasas stolen by Pani. The word gavesanah= cow-pen or pasture.

5. Sravasyavan—This occurs twice, with meanings: (i) आत्मन: श्रव: श्रवणमिच्छव: (the desire to hear own self) (ii) आत्मनऽ श्रवमिच्छव इव वर्त्तमान: (like the one who desires to hear ownself),—Daya. According to Sayana, (i) from sravas, food or fame, implying a wish or desire for either. They desirous of food and (ii) desirous of offering of food—oblations to Indra.

Indre okyam, in the magnificent beautiful dwellings (Daya.); In the heaven of Indra (Sayana).

6. Indraparvata, one like the sun and clouds; cloud and the deity presiding over clouds (Sayana).

Hymn-133

1. Vailasthanam: Vaila from vila, a hole, a cavern, a pit; one pertaining to vila is vaila. According to Sayana, in this verse and in the third verse, this represents smasana or a place where dead bodies are burnt (or buried-Wilson). Sayana suggests another meaning: The Naga-loka, the Serpent World, or the regions below the earth—which is rather Pauranika than Vedic (Wilson).

2. Yatumatinam, of the army where we have a host of killers (Daya); of injury-inflicting armies, or those possessing weapons; or of hosts composed of Raksasas (Sayana).

3. Vailasthanaka, vailastha, from vila, hole, pit or cavern; as in verse 1.

4. Pisacim, one who creates trouble (Daya.); a malicious being; also it means "decay".

5. Adrivah, twice occurring: (i) one spreading like a cloud. or like the sun; (ii) one pertaining to vast stretch of hills and mountain. (Daya.).

Susmi, strength, power or valour.

6. Ghṛnanna bhisam, of blazing fire personified, like the one blazing in terror.

Tri-saptaih, i.e. 3x7=twentyone. In rituals, an allusion to seven platters, offered to the Maruts, repeated at the three daily rites; or attended by Maruts, to whom thrice seven offerings are presented (cf. I. 72.3).

Hymn-134

For verse 2, see Nir. IV. 19.

1. Purvapitaye—First drinking; (i) of the earlier drinkers; (ii) of the early drinkings (Daya.).

Sayana for the second gives 'before other gods'.

Niyutvata, the one in which a large number of horses are yoked (Daya.); with the car having the niyuts (Sayana), i.e. horses of Vayu.

Davane, to the giver; Sayana gives two meanings: (i) Come for that which is to be given by us; (ii) for giving to us that which we solicit.

3. Rohita, pink or red like blood; aruna, substances (like smoke or water) capable of conveying or transporting things (from √रुह् to carry or convey. (Also river and finger, Nigh. I. 13; II. 5)

4. Dansu, the process in which people acquire control over mind. (Daya.). According to Sayana, dansesu karmavatsu, doing their work. Dansa may mean a house and hence, in rays investing or covering the world like a house; or it may mean the chamber of sacrifice.

Bhadravastra, fine or excellent or auspicious clothes.

Sabardugha, fulfilling all desires (Daya.) (Sabar—amṛta or ambrosia); the one that yields ambrosia.

5. Bhurvani, twice repeated with two senses :

(i) धारणवति, the one upholding, (ii) पोषणवति, the one sustaining. (Daya.).

Sayana also gives two meanings ; (i) sacrifice or yaga, (ii) a cloud.

Takva-viye, the path where we have no robbers or thieves (for causing to go elsewhere thieves—Sayana).

6. Asiram, repeated twice with two meanings :

(i) the nourishing milk etc. भोगम्. (ii) the wholesome and nourishing—समन्तात् भोग्यम्—Daya. Sayana gives two meanings: (i) milk, (ii) ghṛta or clarified butter, both being material of oblations and the like.

Hymn-135

Satinibhih, an army with hundreds of brave soldiers (Daya.); sahasrena niyuta etc., the army with thousands of horses and hundreds of soldiers. Numerical figures represent indefinite large numbers.

2. Pariputo adribhih, purified by effusion. (Soma is purified by straining through Kusa grass).

Pari kosam arsati, it goes to the ladle, as it were, in place of a receptacle (Sayana).

3. Sarasmin surye saca, the offering is simultaneous with sunrise (Sayana and Wilson).

4. Candrena, by gold (Nigh. 1.2).

Vayava radhasa agatam, indrasca radhasa a gatam—Dayananda interprets vayu as the killer of vicious people; and indra as electricity. Radhasa, means to attain the objective. The repetition indicates the pairing in two ways; (i) Indra and Vayu; and (ii) Vayu and Indra.

5. Marmṛjanta, intensely cleaned with care (अत्यन्त मार्जयन्तु शोधयन्तु—Daya.); as the groom rubs down; have strained, cleaned and rubbed. (Sayana).

Vajinam, one with good speed (Daya.); asumatyam, going quick; like a quick horse going quick (Sayana).

Second vajinam has been interpreted by Dayananda as बहुशुभलक्षणान्वितम् i.e. one possessing numerous good qualities.

6. Ayansata, (i) should give. (ii) should receive—(Daya.).

Pavitram, the filter, the purifier; usually applied for kusa grass, which is used for filtering the Soma juice.

Ati romanyavyaya somaso atyavyaya, romani,, hairs; avyaye, unexhausted, not subject to deterioration or destruction; somasah owes prosperity; second avyaya such pleasures which are lasting (Daya.).

According to Sayana, in the first place, the Soma juices having gone through the unclipped hairs, or (अव्यया=अवि+मयानि, made from the sheep). Sheeps' wool; fall into the vessel that receives them; (ii) in the second place, अव्यया is said to bear its ordinary meaning, unexpended, unexhausted.

7. Gacchatam, in both places (Daya.).

Adhvaram, (i) virtuous characters like non-violence etc., (ii) noble deeds and sacrifices, yajna (Daya.).

8. Asvattham, religious fig tree, like the pippala, (Daya.); but Sayana translated it as पर्वतादि व्याप्ति प्रदेशे स्थितम्; one found spread through mountains etc.

Na upa dasyanti dhenavah—na apadasyanti; upadas=infirm or wasted (Sayana) by sickness (क्षयन्ति-Daya.); apadas, to be carried by thieves.

Dayananda gives two meanings of dhenavah: (i) cows, (ii) speech or vani in plural (वाण्य:).

9. Agiraukasah=agira+okasah, अगिराऽओकस:, the place of stay of the non-manifested speech; having no dwelling by speech . They are not brought to a stop by abusive speech (Sayana).

Hastayor durniyantavah, difficult to be checked by both hands (by physical forces); they are not to be deterred by words, or by pulling up the reins from coming to the sacrifice (Sayana).

Hymn-136

For the verse 3, see Nir. II. 13.

Sari bhava, be famous and well known, be our leader; be ever accessible to us.

4. Ajasva, pertaining to one where we have goats and horses both (Daya.); he who is drawn by goats or has goats for horses. "Be near us, O goat-teamed one, gracious and bounteous". (Nir. IV. 25).

Hymn-139

1. Srausat—Dayananda translates it as the offerer of the substances constituting oblations (हविर्दात्रीम्). The word does not occur anywhere else in the Ṛgveda. In ordinary use, this word is an exclamation uttered when the butter is poured upon the fire, on the altar, as an offering to the gods. Sayana translates astu srausat, as "may there be a hearing of this hymn", or "may Agni or other deity be a hearer".

Dhitayah, occurs twice: (i) fingers; (ii) the upholder (Daya.).

Nabha, the navel; the centre of attraction (मध्यभागाऽऽकर्षणे—Daya.). Sometimes, the yajna or sacrifice is called the navel of the world (यज्ञमाहुर्भुवनस्य नाभिः).

Vivasvati, shining; in the solar corona (Daya.); in the sun.

2. Svena manyuna, by one's own wrath or anger (Daya.).

Svebhiraksabhih, by one's own (i) sense organs. or (ii) consciousness. (स्वकीयैरिन्द्रियैः or स्वकीयैः प्रज्ञानैः—Daya.).

3. Hiranyaye rathe dasra hiranyaye, hiranyaye rathe is golden chariot; dasra, the dispeller of pain. Sayana gives two interpretations of hiranya—(i) madhu--purna or rich in sweetness, and in consistence with it, he translates prusayante pavayah, as "the circumferences of the wheels distil (क्षरन्ति स्रवन्ति), or scatter honey as they revolve". In the reiteration, he proposes to render it by "pleasing, heart delighting." Prusayante=मधूनि स्रवन्ति, or scatter honey; pavayah, चक्राणि or wheels (Daya.).

4. Divistisu, twice repeated in the sense (i) in the space; in the space routes, (ii) in the heavenly behaviours (Daya.).

Saca, the helper or sympathizer.

Angirobhyah, to those who are adept in the vital sciences; dhenuh, cow and speech. Sayana quotes a legend in this connection: The Angirasas having propitiated the gods, solicited the gift of a cow; the gods gave them the cow of plenty, but they were unable to milk her, and applied to Aryaman, who drew from the cow milk convertible to butter for oblations to fire (Wilson).

Esa tam veda me saca—He knows her along with me, and Sayana adds to it "either I, Aryama, or I and Aryama know her." (Why ?—not known; it is conjectural as Wilson remarks).

8. Uta jarisuh, ma uta jarisuh, twice repeated. Jarisuh—(i) the spoiled ones, (ii) may not be spoiled.

Yat ca dustaram—Here dustaram is the strength to get over troubles and pains.

Ghosat, from the sound; from speech (Nigh. I. 11); also sounds, noises (ghosah); and by metonymy, those who utter them, men or cattle.

9. Dadhyan, see I. 80.16; 116.12.
For Priyamedha, Kanva, Atri and Manu, see earlier notes.

Priyamedha : I. 45.3; 4; 139.9; VIII. 2.37; 3.16; 4.20; 5.25; 6.45; 8.18; 32.30; 69.8; 87.3; X. 73.11.

Kanva : I. 36.10; 11; 48.4; 112.5 and others.

Atri : I. 112.7; 116.8; 117.3; 118.7 and others.

Manu : I. 36.19; 80.16; 114.2 and others.
A person with loving intellect is priya-medhah प्रिया मेधा प्रज्ञा, यस्य सः—Daya.)—a common name, not a proper noun. A man of wisdom is Kanva (मेधाविन्); the enjoyer of pleasure or happiness is Atri (सुखानामत्ता); a rational or thinking beings is Manuh (मननशीलः). Name gira, homage to speech (वाणी).

11. Ekadasa, eleven i.e. (i) ten pranas and the eleventh, the soul or jivatman, and again (ii) ten organs and mind (Daya.). Also eleven in heaven, eleven on the earth, and eleven in the mid-air.

Hymn-140

1. Dhasim, food, the supporter of life, (Nigh. II. 7, anna).

2. Dvijanma, two-fold generated, a dvija or twice-born (Brahmana, Ksattriya and Vaisya), the first birth from mother's womb and the other from the preceptor after the sacred thread ceremony. Also it refers to fire, either as produced by attrition from the two sticks, or in the first instance by attrition and in the second from consecration for sacrificial use. (मथनेन and आधानसंस्कारेण—Sayana).

Trivṛdannam, triple food: clarified butter, purodasa (cakes fried in butter), and Soma juice (Sayana); the food, inspiring for acquiring knowledge; noble selfless actions, and love and dedication towards God; i.e. jnana, karma, and upasana—Daya.

Jagdham im punah, the same stuff (or type of food) eaten repeatedly, or rennovates what has been eaten (i.e. the same articles offered annually—Sayana).

Vaninah, forest trees or waters (vana—water or udaka, Nigh. I. 12).

Ava—asyena, by mouth (Daya. and Sayana).

Anyasya, of the other (Daya.); of the oblation (Sayana); or with the mouth in one form (or sacrificial fire), he receives the oblation through tongue of another; that is, the ladle of the ministering priests; in another form, that is, the fire that burns forests (davagni), he consumes the trees.

3. Trisu cyutam, readily fallen down (क्षिप्रं पतितं, trisu=ksipra, readily, with speed, Nigh. II. 15).

4. Raghu-druvah, going lightly (Sayana); the procurers of sweet and tasty foods (ये रघून्यास्वादनीयान्यन्नानि द्रवन्ति—Daya.).

Kṛsna-sitasah, black-pathed or dark-tracked (Sayana); agricultural track of ploughshare (Kṛsna—kṛsi-sadhini, pertaining to agriculture, sita=furrow or track of ploughshare—Daya.).

Juvah, quick, speedy (जववन्तः—Daya.).

Asamanah, not with one mind (Daya.), not same-minded, some going east, some west; or it may mean of different colours.

Ajirasah, graceful, one with refined manners (Daya.), moving (Sayana).

Raghusyadah, light-gliding.

Vatajutah, wind-impelled; those who move with speed like wind.

Asavah, pervading; pervading in good characteristics (Daya.).

Mumuksvah, aspirers of liberation (Daya.); giving liberation (Sayana).

6. Patnih, the one that sustains (पालयित्री:—Sayana); the ladies participating in the yajna-karma (Daya.). Sayana conjectures that here patnih represents bushes, timber, who cherish Agni (the fire); or even cows

8. Agruvah, the foremost in category (अग्रगण्या:—Daya.); also fingers; (agruvah kesinih) those that are in forefront; or crooked or curved like fingers. Kesinih, young girl with charming hair (Daya.).

9. Tuvigrebhih satvabhir viyati, proceeds with resounding existences; he goes variously with living beings, sounding loudly, or going quickly; accompanied by the cries or the flight of animals when he sets fire to forests.

Tuvigrebhih, with loud sounds (Daya.).

Satvabhih, with animals (Daya.).

Syeni, the female eagle or hawk.

Padvate, bi-peds and quadrupeds; that which has feet (Daya.).

Navam nityaritram padvatim, boat ever fitted with oars; boat is the yajna or sacrifice; the oars etc. are the priests; materials are the fuel and apparatus, and the feet are the divinities, the prayers and offerings.

Ratha, a means of transport, here a boat.

Aritra, apparatus for measuring the depth of the sea (स्तोतम्भनानि जलगाम्भीर्यपरीक्षकाणि यस्यां ताम्—Daya.).

13. Dyava-ksama, heaven and earth; yavyam, barley-fields; isam, grain, food; varam, jewels etc;, arunyah, dawns (Daya.).

Hymn-141

1. Balittha, bal+ittha, enlightenment or truth, its halo.

2. Pṛksah, worth of inquiry (Daya.); अन्न-साधक or the perfecter or digester of food (Sayana).

Vapuh, handsome appearance; having body; the cause of the growth of body (Sayana).

Sapta-sivasu, pertaining to seven processes or factors of advantage; with matṛsu, seven auspicious mothers or the rains fertilizing the seven lokas or worlds (Sayana).

Vṛsabhasya, pertaining to the cosmic yajnas which bring rainfall (Daya.); pertaining to the showerers. Asya vṛsabhasya dohase, Sayana refers to an allusion intended to the rays of the sun. Earlier, we have referred to the three forms of Agni; terrestrial, maturative or digestive fire, or as the electrical or ethereal element, or lightning in the antariksa or firmament. Here he is identified with solar fire, or the sun in heaven or as the solar rays, which in the hot season milk, as it were, the earth by the evaporation of its moisture, which is thus conveyed to the solar region, where it is transferred to the clouds, and in due season descends again in rain (Wilson).

3. Budhna, antariksa or inter-space.

Mahisa, great or big (Nigh. III. 7).

Savasa, by force ((बलवान्,—Daya.), or by bodily strength applied to attrition as producing fire.

Matarisva, breaths or vital forces.

4. Pṛksudhah, exceedingly hungry for enjoyment (Daya.); expects or desires to be consumed (Sayana).

Damsu, in control (दम् ऽ सु), or in teeth.

Yavisthah, the youngest; young in all respects.

Pituh paramat, from the excellence of the sacrificial or the other nutriment.

Pituh from pitṛ, which is figuratively the garhapatya agni from which the fire is taken, niyute, to the ahavaniya (Sayana). Flames of fire are its teeth (damsa).

6. Bhagam iva, like the prosperity (Daya.); according to Sayana, a great prince; may also be the sun (aditya) (Wilson).

7. Hvarah, crooked, crookedly behaving.

Vakva, the speaker, very much-talkative (बहुवक्ता).

Anakṛtah, unrestrained, not obstructed (न निवारितः—Daya.).

Jaranah, praises (स्तुतिः).

8. Angebhir arusebhir iyate, by limbs, or flames, having motion (arusebhih, by the red ones, i.e. by flames).

Vayah, normally birds; all creatures having mobility, beasts, birds and the like.

9. Agne, vocative of Agni, venerable, learned; varunah, best, most venerable.

Dhṛtavratah, pledged to accept, and adopt truth; mitrah, friend, kind to everyone; aryaman, law-abiding, and law-dispensing, a judge; sudanavah generous in giving; nemih, the circumference of a wheel; aran, spokes.

10. Devatatim, God, the highest deity.

Mahiratna, most valuable and attractive in noble qualities; ratnam, attractive, means for acquiring knowledge (Daya.).

11. Rayim, riches; svartham, capable of yielding good fruit; damunasam, capable of maintaining control; bhagam, prosperity; daksam, clever and skilful; dharnasam, clever in acquiring and possessing knowledge etc; ṛte, in truth.

Ubhe janmani, in the two lives, the present one and the preceding (Daya.).

Hymn-142

For verse 10, see Nir. VI.21.

Like the hymn 13 of book I, this hymn 142 is also called the Apri Sukta, being addressed to a variety of devatas, or divinities, called apris or Agni in personification. (Dayananda does not call them Apri hymns). Many of the expressions of the two hymns, 13, and 142 are identical, and the difference arises chiefly from the difference of metre, which in hymn 13 is gayatrī but in the present one anustubh. There are 12 verses in the earlier hymn, and 13 in the present one.

3. Trira (त्रि:+आ), three times; he comes thrice, or he thrice bestows rewards, (or it refers to three daily sacrifices); madhva, with honey or sugar.

6. Mahi, earth (Nigh. I. 1), or speech (Nigh, I.11).

7. Yahvi, born of the causal form. (कारण-सूनू, Daya.).

Matara, the measurer; one who plans and draws out the project.

8. Mandra-jihva, the one with notable tongues; the two flames that give delight.

9. Ila, Saravati and Mahi, see earlier references.

10. Nabha—nabhau, in the centre; it refers to rain; Sayana regards Tvastṛ as personified electric fire or lightning, in which capacity, he is the sender of rain.

11. Vanaspati, the fire or Agni or the sacrificial post, yupa, from its being of timber (Sayana).

12. Gayatra vepase, in the form of gayatra, according to Sayana, a name of Indra. Gayatram is the protection of one that sings. Gayatra vepase is "गायत्रं गायन्तं त्रायमाणं वेपो रूपं यस्मात्, तस्मै"—Daya.

13. Savaha-kṛtani, with the utterance of the syllable SVAHA, also the performance of a rightful action (Daya). The personification of agni is, however, syaha, as one of the Apris (Wilson).

Hymn-143

For verse 4, see Nir. IV.23.

1. Apam napat, grandson of water. For this, a few of the references are I. 23.6; 122.4; 143.1; 186.5; II. 31.6; 35.1-3; 7; 9; 10; 13; III. 9.1; VI. 50.13; 52.14; VII. 34.15; 35.13; 47.2; VIII. 19.4; X. 8.5; 92.13.

Dayananda translates "napat" as the one not falling, not getting degraded (यो न पतति सः); apam is, of course, of waters.

How Agni is the grandson of waters (apam napat) has been thus explained: vegetable substance are the progeny of rain; and fire is the progeny of vegetation like timber or fuel.

2. Matarisvane, for the wind in the mid-space; this has to be fanned into flame; of. त्वमग्ने प्रथमो मातरिश्वन आविर्भव (I.31.3) be first manifest, Agni, to the wind.

3. Na rejante, desist not, flicker not (कम्पन्ते,—Daya). They do not move, or are moved in burning, maturing and the like.

Bhatvaksasah, persons possessing the strength of enlightenment. (Daya). Tvaksa is strength or force (Nigh. II. 9).

4. Bhṛgavas, those who dispel ignorance with knowledge, such learned persons (विद्ययाऽविद्याया भर्जका निवारका विद्वांसः—Daya.)

7. Akrah, that one which could not be dominated by others (derived from √kram, to go, and hence akranta or anukranta, not surpassed or exceeded by—Sayana).

Hymn-144

1. Ninsate, kisses, dhama prathamam hi, which first kisses his dwelling; which are the first to present oblations.

2. Svadha, water (Nigh. 1.12).

3. Savayasa, two of the same age (also in the verse 4—dva savayasa). The two refers to husband and wife, associated in the performance of yajna; (or two pupils of the same age,—Daya.).

Samayansta sarathih, as a charioteer gathers; rasmin, reins (of a horse). (Streams of butter, spreading like rays—Sayana).

5. Vrisah, by transposition of letters vasya (वस्य) became vrah (व्रः) (varna-vyatyaya) Daya.; prajah or progeny.

Hymn-145

1. Iyate, and nu-iyate, he proceeds; he goes,(प्राप्नोति, and goes or attains quickly—सद्यः प्राप्नोति—Daya.); or is gone to or worshipped (सेव्यते—Sayana).

Tasmin santi pra' sisah tasmin istayah, in him is the power of restraining or controlling; he is able to accomplish what may be affected (isti, sacrifice or enjoyment—Sayana; good company—Daya.).

2. Na mṛsyate prathaman na aparam vacah, nor endures a rejoinder; he is never vague or indifinite regarding the first, nor the subsequent one—Daya.).

3. Vacansi, words (speech) in the qusetion form (Daya.); rabhah, great; a great person (Daya.).

4. Svantam, one with matured experience (श्वान्तं-श्रान्तं, परिपक्वज्ञानम्, a case of transposition of ra and va—Daya.).

Tatsara, approach in a crooked way (Daya.), from सर, to go; yujyebhih is that as may be joined with.(Sayana provides several interpretations: as being joined with abilities; that may be associated with their objects; also Wilson; or with energies fit to be connected with their consequences; or with his horses to his car).

5. Vanarguh mṛgah, moving or staying in a forest, the wild animals.

Hymn-146

1. Trimurdhanam, the three-headed; with the heads capable of dealing in the best, ordinary, and worst circumstances (Daya.).

Saptarasmin, seven-rayed, with rays of enlightenment pertaining to seven metres (Gayatri etc.), or the seven worlds (bhuh, etc.) Daya.; seven colours of solar spectrum.

According to Sayana, three heads are the daily sacrifices or three household fires (garhapatya, ahavaniya and daksina), or the three regions, heaven, earth and mid-air. The seven rays are seven flames of fire (Kali, Karali, Manojava, Lohita, Dhumravarna, Visvarupi, Visvaruci), or rasmi, ordinarily a ray, may be used in the sense of rein or measure, when it may allude to the seven Vedic metres.

3. Samanam vatsam, two calf-like day and night; or heaven and earth (Daya.); abhi sancarati, both cordially moving together; two well-disposed milk-cows (either the institutor of the rite and the priest; yajamana and purohita; or yajamana and his wife). The calf or offspring is agni.—Sayana.

Ketan, impressions or knowledge (बोधान्—Daya.).

Hymn-147

For verse 2, see Nir. III. 20.

Yavistha, most prominent amongst youngs; mamhisthasya, of the most intelligent. For this also see Yv. XII. 42.

Piyati tvo anu tvo gṛnati, one half reviles (demons) one half praises (gods); tvah and nemah are synonyms of half (नेमे देव नेमेऽसुर:; here neme means half ; Maitr. Samhita II. 9). Also त्वो नेम इत्यर्धस्य—Nir. III. 20.

Tvah, the other one (द्वितीय:, Daya.). The verse also occurs in Yajurveda, XII. 42.

3. Andham mamateyam, the blind sons of Mamata. Sayana refers in this connection the Pauranik legend of the birth of Dirghatamas from Mamata, the wife of Utatthya; the persons are obviously allegorical and in the text, there is no hint to the legend. According to Dayananda, mamata is praja, the people or progeny; andham, the ignorant one; blindness is of nescience.

Dirghatamas, means long darkness: mamata is mine-ness or selfishness also.

Aghayuh, one desirous of vicious or sinful acts—Daya.; dvayena, by the two sorts of actions (Daya.). Wilson regards in this verse a reference to an allusion to the use of maledictory prayers or imprecations.

5. Dvayena, by the types of actions, teaching and preaching (or instructing)—Daya.

Hymn-148

1. Vapuse, for the form (Daya.); for the accomplishment of sacrifice or of its object (Sayana).

2. Karoh, of the one adept in technology.

3. Su=su (सू=सु) (Panini VI. 1. 70); rarahanah=rarahanah (रारहाणाः=ररहाणाः) (Panini V. 1. 7). Pranayanta, this alludes, according to Sayana, to a especial part of ceremony; the solemn conveyance of fire from the garhapatya (or household), to the ahavaniya or sacrificial fire.

Hymn-149

1. Dan, दाता, the donor (the Vedic exception).

2. Nabhanyah, नभन्यो वायुः one that exists in space, i.e. wind (n on account of the transpositon of letters, varna-vyatyaya). See Nigh. I. 4.

4, 5. Dvijanma, the one born of the two (space and air—Daya.); from the two pieces of stick, from attrition; or from the two (earth and heaven); this refers to the terrestrial fire or agni.

Hymn-150

For verse 1, see Nir. V. 7.

1. Simya, by actions (Nigh. II. 1). I, who am a liberal giver, invoke thee along. Arih means an unfriendly person (amitra); it is derived from √ऋ, to injure. The master, i.e. isvara, is called arih, also from the same root. Having seen that oblations offered to other deities are sacrificed in fire, the seer declared, "as in the cavity of some great well," i.e. as in the opening of some great chasm, Nir. V. 7.

Todasya, the teaser; a tormentor; one who creates trouble; a tyrant, (व्यथकस्य,—Daya.).

Dasvan, the liberal giver (दाता); arih=master; mahatah todasya, of great well; also of a great teacher or a mighty master. Sarane, in the cavity; in the dwelling (शरणे, गृहे, in the house—Daya.).

The verse occurs in the Samaveda (verse 97) also.

Arih is also arta (a servant) according to Sayana: 'since I, agni, going veril y into thy presence for the purpose of conveying oblations, I am a servant'. We can render it as; "I take shelter in thee, as a servant does in his chief master's house (or a pupil in his preceptor's abode)."

3. Candrah, the rejoicer of all, आह्लादकारक:, (Daya.), or the moon. See the Chandogya Up: 'from pitṛs to the akasa, from the akasa to the moon; this is Soma the king' (V. 10.4). See also Prasna Up. V. 4; Mundaka I. 2. 5. 6.

Hymn-151

For verse 7, see Nir. VI. 8.

1. Mitrasah na, as a friend (Daya.). Simya, by action (Nigh. II. 1). Mitra may refer to the fire of firmament, i.e., lightning also.

2. Purumidhasya, of the one, consecrated with many noble virtues. Sominah, of the one possessing abundance and prosperity (Daya.); abundantly flowing. The traditionalists erroneously regard Purumidha a prince.

3. Janma rodasyoh, your (of you two) birth from heaven and earth. Vam=yuvam, you two; vṛsana, showerer of knowledge (or benefits)—Daya.

4. Divo bṛhato daksam a bhuvam gam na dhuri upayunjathe apah: you to join the work (apah, Nigh II. 1), able (to support the burthen) of heaven, and applying to all creatures, as a cow to a load (Wilson), or in other words, as the cow is able to bear a burthen suited to her bodily strength, or it may allude to her ability to give milk. etc. (Sayana).

7. Accha, in the best manner (nipatasya ceti dirghah—Panini VI. 3. 135), accha (अच्छ) has became accha (अच्छा).

9. Mahinam, most venerable, अत्यन्तपूज्यम्; (Daya.); great (Nigh. III. 3).

Panayah, the traders (व्यवहारमाणाः); businessmen; asuras (Sayana).

Hymn-152

1. Pivasa, robust, stout, fat, (स्थूलानि—Daya.); (as an epithet of matarisvan—Wilson), or untorn (as an epithet of vastrani); also intense radiance.

2. Etaccana tvo esam=एतयोर्मध्येत्वश्चन एक एव=one of you two (Sayana); any of you (Daya.). Trih-asrim, (i) acquired through the three agencies of speech, thought and actions (Daya.); triangular one (Sayana); (ii) Catuh—asrih, acquired through four Vedas (Daya.); quadrangular one (Sayana). According to Sayana, he who has a quadrangular weapon kills him who has a triangular weapon; i.e. the one with a superior weapon (अधिकायुधवान्) gains victory over the one possessing an inferior weapon.

3. Apad, the dawn, the one without a foot, footless; the integrated knowledge, the knowledge without divisions (Daya.). Dawn is so called as it does not move by its own feet or steps, but as depending upon the motion of the Sun.

4. Jaram kaninam, the lover of the maiden (कामयमानानां वयोहानिकारकम्, —the age depriver of the loving one—Daya.).

5. Acittam brahma yuvanah, Brahma=food and wealth (Daya.), yuvanah, young; acittam, without life (Daya.); connecting the inconceivable mystery (Wilson); acittam, not an object of mind or thought (Sayana); brahma, the act of which the nature is declared very great (Sayana).

6. Sasmin=svasmin; in the Vedic usage, there is a disappearance of va=well-filled.

Udhan=udhani=in the udders (दुग्धधरे—Daya.).

Pitvo bhikseta, let him beg of food (pitvo=of food).

Vayunani, actions, to wisdom or learning.

Mamateyam, the son of Mamata, or attachment (self-possession).

7. Vavṛtyam=varttayeyam (Vedic exception शप: श्लु:). Supara, well across, let the rain be carrying us well across, or to the completion of our duties by causing the growth of grain, to be used in yajnas.

Hymn-153

For verse 4, see (Nir. IV. 19).

2. Prastutir vam dhama na prayuktih ayami—the previous purpose of praising you is not the fulfilment, but I come to your abode well attached (Wilson—literal).

Mitra-varuna, two friends; teachers and preceptors (Daya.).

Vidathesu, in the disciplines of knowledge. Surih, learned.

4. Dan=dadan=giving (vedic exeeptional usage—शपो लुक्).

Vitam patam payasah usriyayah—eat, drink of the milk of the cow; eating refers to curds and butter. (vitam=eat; to pervade, व्याप्नुतम्, —Daya.).

Hymn-154

For verses 2 and 6, see Nir. I.20 and II. 7 respectively.

1. Parthivani, belonging to earth; Sayana includes all the three worlds in the word pṛthivi (lower middle and upper)—See Yv. V. 18.

Parthivani rajamsi, particles of earth; rajamsi=worlds, लोकान्; also dust.

Visnoh, of all pervading Lord.

Vicakramanah tredha, thrice (or in three ways) traversing; going in the three regions, as Agni (on the earth), Vayu (in the midspace) and Aditya (or sun, in heaven).

2. Mṛgah—wild beast. गिरिष्ठा:=गिरिस्था:, residing in hilly regions; bhimah kucarah, wild and fierce, roaming everywhere. This refers to a lion; giristhah also means one dwelling in prayers.

As a fierce animal roaming everywhere, haunting the mountains. Mṛgah is derived from√मृज्, to go. Bhimah, fierce: of whom all are afraid (बिभ्यत्य). (Bhismah or dreadful is derived from the same root also). Kucarah means 'one who moves in a crooked manner'. When it is an epithet of a deity, it means, "where does he not go?" Giristhah, haunting the mountains, living in mountains. Girih means a mountain; it is raised (Nir. I. 20).

3. Giri-ksite, here giri, is mountain or cloud; one who dwells in a mountain is giriksit; one who abides in high places.

Tribhih, the aggregate of three, pṛthivi, jala and tejas (earth, water and light) or three periods of time (past, present and future) or three qualities (sat, rajas and tamas—Daya.).

5. Priyam abhi pathah, his favourite path, the firmament (Nir. VI. 7).

Visnoh parame pade, also vṛsnah paramam padam (वृष्ण: परमं पदम)—(verse 6)—The highest step of the wide striding Visnu.

6. See Nir. II. 7.—We long to go to those regions of you two, where are rays (many-horned) having a large number of horns. The word bhuri is a synonym of bahu or many, so called because it produces much. Sṛnge (horn) is derived from √श्रि, to rest, on, or from √शृ (to stay), or from √शम् to destroy; or it is so called because it grows up to protect, or it comes out of the head. Ayasah means nimble. There shines forth brightly the highest step, i.e. the loftiest step, of the wide-striding, i.e. of the great-paced visnu. Padah (foot) is derived from √पद्, to go, when it is placed down, (the same word in the neuter gender) means a foot-step. The word also signifies a quarter of division from the analogy of a quadruped; and other quarters from the analogy of the pada (पाद) of division (Nir. II. 7).

The verse occurs in Yv. VI. 3 also with some difference of reading; and for avabhati (अवभाति), we have in the Yajurveda avabhari (अवभारि) (an interchange of r and t which is permissible in the Veda).

Hymn-155

2. Kṛsanoh astuh, on fire, the scatterer (of good things), or the disperser of enemies. Astuh, प्रक्षेप्तु:, scatterer, Daya.

Indra-visnu, a pair of lightning (or electricity) and the sun, or teacher and preceptor. (Daya).

3. Dadhati putro varam param pituh nama tṛtiyam: The son of the father has an inferior name or that of grandson; a superior or that of son; and a third, which with respect to them is that of father. The ecclesiastical meaning is, that oblations, ascending to the solar region, nourish Indra and Vishnu, as the two of the Adityas, or forms of the sun, who thereupon sends down the rain, whereby the earth is rendered fruitful, and the generations of man are sustained, whence fathers, and sons and grandsons, are successively engendered (Wilson).

5. Tṛtiyam asya nakih, but he apprehends not the third; his path on earth and in the midspace is visible, not so in the heaven.

Vayascana patayantah patatrinah, vayah, birds, patayantah, those who fly up and down; these two may be maruts; patatrinah, again birds, like garuda; may also mean winds.

Caturbhih sakam navatim, 90+4=94 periodical motions; the year, two solstices, 5 seasons, 12 months, 24 half-months, 30 days, 8 ghatikas, and 12 zodiacal signs (1+2+5+12+24+30+8+12=94).

Yuva akumarah, not infantine; young, not a boy. (One of beyond 65 years of age—Daya.).

Hymn-156

1. Bhava=(भवा) bhava (भव), short a (अ) has become long a (आ) according to द्व्यचोऽतस्तिङ् (Panini, VI. 3. 134); and adha (अधा)=adha (अध), according to निपातस्य च (VI. 3. 135).

2. Sravobhir yujyam cidabhyasat Sravobhih, by hearing, thinking and realizing (Daya.), or by food, or by fame, he attains what is to be joined with (Sayana).

3. Janusa pipartana, attain through birth (of enlightenment) or propitiate of your own accord (Wilson), or pleasure, or propitiate him by your birth, or svata eva, of yourself, or spontaneously without any motive or self-interests.

Ṛtasya garbham, the germ of sacrifice (Sayana); ṛtasya=of truth; garbham, the germ, the initiation of enlightenment (Daya.).

Kratum sacanta marutasya vedhasah, assisted by the company of priests (Wilson); vedhas, creator (विधातुः, Daya), =Visnu attended by Maruts.

Dadhara daksam uttamam aharvidam, possesses heaven-conferring power; or superb power (प्रशस्तं बलम्, Daya.); aharvidam, cognizant of day (योऽह्नानि विन्दति तम्, Daya.); also स्वर्गोत्पादकम् (generative of svarga, Sayana).

Vrajam, cloud; apornute, removes the shrouds; brings to light out of the darkness (Daya.); sits upon the clouds or sends down rain (Sayana).

5. Trisadhasthah, knowledge, action and worship (Daya.); or three daily celeberations of worship; or three worlds.

Ṛtasya bhage, blessings of truth (Daya.); share of the sacrifice or the share that follows the rite; the blessings granted as a reward.

Hymn-157

1. Asvina, a pair of learneds, teachers and preceptors (Daya.).

Jmah, out of earth or ground.

2. Ghṛtena, by water (Daya); pṛtanasu, in the armies. (Pṛtana= man, Nigh. II. 3), children and dependents (Sayana).

Madhuna ghṛtena, with trickling honey, or with sweet water; ambrosia with trickling nectar. (See verse 3 also where the chariot of Asvins is madhuvahanah, honey bearing).

3. Dvipade-catuspade, our people (bipeds) and our cattle (quadrupeds).

4. Madhumatya nah kasaya, with your honeyed speech. Madhumatya, associated with a large quantity of water—vapour, or speed—Daya. Kasaya, by motion; by education mix us with your honeyed whip (literal); but kasa is also speech, vac.

Hymn-158

1. Rekna=wealth (dhana, Nigh. II. 10).

Vasu, granters of dwellings (वासयितारो —Daya.), or possessors of wealth.

Rudra, dispellers of sin; from √रुत्, to cause pain, or sin; dru, what drives away.

Rudra is the name of that Brahmacarin, who has led a disciplined life of celebacy up to 36 to 44 years of age (Daya.); the vasu, the one who leads such life up to an age of 24; the aditya the one who continues up to 48 years.

2. Pade goh, to the desired place of the earth (Daya); to the site of the altar (Sayana), or vedi.

Revatih purandhih, wealth-possessing, sustainers of the body, or cows abounding in milk (Sayana). Purandhih, also sustainer of the city; revatih, rich towns (Daya.).

5. Taugryeya, superb in strength (Daya.) (For tugra see I. 116. 3)

Arnaso madhye, in the midst of the water.

Pajras, strong and mighty (Daya.). See I. 116. 7; 117. 6; 10; 120.5; 126. 4; 5 and others.

4. Tmani khadati ksam, may he eat up the earth in the self; should of himself bite the earth (Dayananda takes up ma (मा) also in its connection, and then he negates the idea). According to Sayana, being unable from age and infirmity, to walk, he crawls or rolls on the ground.

5. This verse has been very popular, cf. Nitimanjari, vol. I p. 267; see our note on dvita and trita (I. 52. 5).

Siro yadasya traitano vitaksat—There is a superstitious usage of this verse. The silent repetition of this verse is said to be a sure protection against a murderer, a wolf or a tiger; and a traveller who repeats it for three nights, each time until sunrise, becomes invisible to robbers, and is able to screen others from their attack (Wilson).

Traitanah, the provider of three types of comforts, physical, mental and spiritual (Daya.).

6. See our previous notes on Dirghatamas mamateya (I. 147.3; 152. 6; IV. 4. 13). For Dirghatama, also see VIII. 9. 10. The Mamateya Dirghatamas (one who stays long in darkness) becomes ill in the 10th yuga (a yuga=5 years), and leads the life of dedication (yati) after this period (Daya.). This is not the historical description of a particular person. Dirghatama is a historical person also (a ṛsi), who meditated on this and several other hymns of the Ṛgveda, and made visual observations in the long nights, and laid the foundation of the science of astronomy.

Hymn-159

1. Devebhir ye devaputre sudansasa, cherishing their worshippers as children, or who having the gods for children are reverenced by the gods. (Wilson). To Sayana, deva is yajamana. Dayananda renders devebhih, by the divine substances like water etc., and deveputra as born of the divine Nature like sons.

2. Heaven (dyuloka) is said here to be the father, and Earth, pṛthivi, the mother (द्यौर्वः पिता पृथिवी माता, I. 191. 6; see also Nir. II. 8 Mata=antariksa, inter-space; मातान्तरिक्षम् । निर्मीयन्तेऽस्मिन् भूतानि । योनिरन्तरिक्षम।).

3. Advayavinah, having no second parent, or protector; no other to depend upon for subsistence (Wilson); the only one, of which there is no second (न विद्यते द्वितीयो यस्मिंस्तस्य—Daya.).

4. Mayinah, the possessor of divine knowledge or prajna. Ditih =diptih (The Vedic exception, allowing the disappearance of a letter).

5. Satagvinam, the one in whose possession are hundreds of cows.

Hymn-160

3. Vahnih=वोढा, bearer; bearer of rewards of pious rites (Sayana); pitroh, of father, i.e. of wind and sky (Daya.); pṛsni=the sun.

Duksata=dhuksata, milk out (प्रदुहन्ति—Daya; d is used for dh, as a Vedic usage; वाच्छन्दसीति भष्भावः, Panini, VI .1.102; also III 4.88).

Hymn-161

1. Wilson quotes a legend from Sayana regarding this verse; of course, it is not to be taken up seriously. The three Ṛbhus being engaged in a sacrifice, and about to drink the Soma juice, the gods sent Agni to see what they were doing. Observing that they exactly resembled each other, Agni assumed the like form; and it is to this that the verse refers in calling him brother, and questioning his comparative age. One purpose of Agni's visit is stated in the next verse to be the order to convert the one spoon or ladle, camasa, used for drinking the Soma juice, or for libations into four. For Ṛbhus see hymn I.20; I.110 and I.111.

Ajagan (आजगन्)=ajagan (अजगन्), (यङि लङि बहुलं छन्दसीति शपो लुक्) (a vedic exception).

Nindima=nindema(a Vedic exception).

2. Camasam, cloud (Daya.).

3. Saudhanvana, sons of sudhanvan, well adept in handling excellent bows or defence weapons (Daya.).

4. Cakṛvamsah, the creator; ṛbhavah, men of wisdom (Nigh. III. 15).

Camasam, to cloud.

5. Tvasta, the penetrating like the sun; a learned; a sculptor.

Devapanam, drinkable through sense organs or rays (Daya.).

6. Indrah, the sun; hari, forces of attraction and gravitation etc.

7 Yuvasa—(युवशा) yuvasa (युवस) (see Panini, लोमादिपामादिपिच्छादिभ्यः शनेलचः, V.2.100) a change of श for स.

8. Saudhanvana, see our note on verse 3. Some of the references on this are I. 161.2; 7; 8; III. 60.1; 40; 1V. 35.1; 8; and also for the differently accenied word I. 110.2; 4; 8; III. 60.3; 5. The word means archers and also surgeons.

For Ṛbhus getting share in the oblations, see I. 20.8 also.

They may be the participants of the libations offered at dawn or at noon, or in an evening sacrifice. According to the mythology, Ṛbhus were three sons of Sudhanvan, a descendent of Angiras—Ṛbhu, Vibhu and Vaja, and styled collectively as Ṛbhus from the name of the elder. (Nir. XI. 162 and Nitimanjari for the legend, which has no basis). Ṛbhus are men of wisdom, employed in Yajnas also. Ṛbhu, Vibhu and Vaja are the architects of transport vehicles moving in space, on sea and on land respectively. (IV.33. 9).

9. Vardhayantim, a line of clouds or the earth (Sayana); earth (Daya.). It is an assignment of super importance. Some assign it to water, some to fire and some to earth.

Camasan, clouds.

10. Ṛbhus as three priests in the last rites of the dead body, offered to fire: one represents red water or blood, the other flesh; and the third excreta (शकृत्). Dayananda translates sronam (श्रोणं), as srotavyam; mansam, (मांस), the parts of the dead body, and sakṛta (शकृत्) as excreta; pitarah as parents.

11. In this and the subsequent stanzas, ṛbhus are identified as the rays of the sun, as the instruments of rain and the causes of fertility —Nir.XI.16. (The rays of the sun are called ṛbhus also).

Agohyasya gṛhe, in the abode of the sun. Agohya is another name of the sun, which is not to be hidden (गोहितुं रक्षितुमनर्हस्य—Daya.). The Nirukta says: when you slept in the house of the unconcealable one, because (you were there); hence, O Ṛbhus, you did not come here today (so long as you were there, you were not here). As long as you are there, you are not here, यावत् तत्र भवथ न तावदिह भवथ—Nir. XI. 16.

Adya idam anugacchatha, Anugacchatha=अनुसृत्य न गच्छथ, having come forth, go not away without doing this; idam, your office of sending down rain for so long a period as you repose in the solar orb. (Sayana).

12. Tatya pitara, parents of that occasion (Daya.). It refers to the sun and the moon, the protectors of the world, which during the rains are hidden in the clouds.

Prabravita, to speak harshly or kindly both; with affection or without respect; to instruct without a reservation (Daya.).

13. Svanam bodhayitaram, bodhayitaram the awakener; svanam, अन्तरिक्षे स्वपन्तं वायुं the wind, the reposer in the mid-space, (Sayana). Svanam प्रेरकम्, the inspirer (Daya.).

Samvatsare idam adya vi akhyata—You have made this world today luminous, (i.e. after the close of the rainy season, when the sun and the moon are both visible since there are no clouds to hide them).

Hymn-162

For verses 1, 2, and 7, refer to Nir. IX. 3; IX. 2 and VI. 22 respectively. The whole of the hymn is given in the Yajurveda, XXV. 24-45.

Ṛbhuksah, the same as ṛbhavah, men of wisdom (मेधावी), Daya.; also a synonym of Indra, and also Prajapati.

Vajinah, one moving with speed; horses (वेगवत:—Daya.).

Ayuh, the knower (ज्ञाता—Daya.), a synonym of Vayu. For Mitra. Varuna, Aryaman, Indra and Maruts, see earlier notes.

Devajatasya, sprung from Devas, the one possessing illuminating character—Daya; also born as the type of various divinities –Sayana.

2. Nirnija, ever pure, Nigh. III. 7 (रूपनाम).

Indrapusnoh, the one with prosperity, and sustenance.

Ratimgṛbhitam, the prepared offerings; the procured gifts (Daya.); the ritualists like Katyayana and Mahidhara refer to the offerings to be made for the horse (the remains of the burnt-offering made the night before one to be given to the horse.)

Supran-ajah, goat going before him (Sayana). The ritualists refer such passage to pusan, synonymous with Agni, and the instruction that enjoins the goat being tied to the front of the horse at the sacrificial post. Such a goat, black-necked, Kṛsnagriva, being always regarded as an agneya pasu or a victim (Katyayana Sutra 98 etc.). See also

Yv. XXIX. 58, for black-necked goat. Such interpretations are derogatory, and refer to latter practices of a dark period of the Vedic Age.

3. Esah Chagah, goat going before the horse; purodasam, or preliminary offering , of well-cooked foodstuff; an offering or cake and butter; (lit. that which is to be first offered).

4. Atra (अत्रा) atra (अत्र) (ऋचि तुनुघेति दीर्घः—Panini, VI. 3. 132). Ajah refers to the same goat. It refers to the immolation of moon as it goes round the earth.

5. This refers to certain terms, which in the usual sacrificial rites became indicative of different types of priests; hotṛ (होतृ), adhvaryu (अध्वर्यु), (familiar ones), avayah (आवयाः) (pratiprashatṛ प्रतिप्रष्ठातृ)—who brings and places the offerings; agnim-indhah (agnidh, अग्निमिन्धः अग्नीध्), the kindler of the fire; grava-grabhah (ग्रावग्राभः), the praiser of the stones that bruise the Soma plant; sanstṛ (शंस्तृ), prasastṛ (प्रशास्तृ), and the last suviprah (सुविप्रः), which may be the Brahma (ब्रह्मा).

Dayananda gives hota (होता), the executor of the sacrifice (यज्ञस्याध्यक्षः), adhvaryu ((अध्वर्यु), the one who aspires to save himself from immolation; avayah (आवयाः), the one who associates himself with a noble act; agnim-indhah (अग्निमिन्धः), the kindler of fire; grava-grabhah (ग्रावग्राभः), one who receives invocations; samsta (शंस्ता), the one who utters the praises; and suviprah सुविप्रः), the intelligent and learned.

Vaksanah, the rivers; a pṛnadhvam, replenish; fill the rivers, or offer rivers of butter, milk etc.

6. Yupavraskah, the cutters of wood for the wooden post; yupavahah, those who carry the wooden posts; casalam, a specific tree; asvayupaya, a post for binding the horse; taksati, it should be in plural, they cut (vacana-vyatyaya) i.e. singular for plural.

Katyayana and others give the description of the sacrificial posts which are said to be twenty-one in number, made of different kinds of wood, each 21 cubits long, and 349 ordinary+260 wild animals (609) in all are fastened to these posts. Our Ṛgvedic text refers to only one post. This is not a long sacrificial post; only domestic short posts (or pegs) to which the horse is fastened.

8. Dama is a rope fastened round the horse's neck (for controlling or restraining, (दमन-साधनम्—Daya). Sandana, a rope that fastens the feet. Rasana-rajjuh, the head fastening rope (खलीन-रज्जुः).

9. Kravisah, one who moves with measured foot (क्रमणशीलस्य).

Svarau svadhitau riptam, riptam=liptam=smeared, or anointed; svarau is the instrument (or substances) with which the animal is anointed (or grease or fat); svadhitau is usually axe, or self-possessed (स्वेन धृतौ) (an instrument for dissecting).

10. Sṛtapakam, ripened by boiling.

11. Gatrat agnina pacyamanad, by the hand warmed or ripened with the heat of anger (Daya.).

Sṛta-pakam of the previous verse implies boiling; we have a reference to a pot or caldron, ukha, in verse 13.

Sulam, spit (Wilson concludes that a part was boiled and a part roasted). Dayananda interprets sulam as the pain-inflicting enemy.

Ma Srisat=ma slisat, may not fall upon.

12. Im=jalam, water (Nigh. I. 12).

Mansa-bhiksam, the non-availability of flesh (मांसस्य भिक्षामलाभम्—Daya.).

Ya imahuh surabhir nirhareti, who say of it, it is fragrant, therefore, give us some; nirhara, take off or give.

13. Yanniksanam manspacanya ukhayah: niksanam is the wooden stick for trying if the cooking is complete. (मांस्=मास)

Patrani yusna asecanani, the vessels that are the sprinklers of the boiled juice or broth (Sayana).

Carunam, cooking utensils (Daya.) .

Apidhana, covers for cooking vessels.

Ankah, slips of cane (वेतस-शाखा).

Sunah, implements of dissection, the knives.

14. The verse indicates the details of horse-training, grass, the fodder.

15. Jaghrih, smelling with heat, odoriferous.

16. Vasah, a cover, a cloth for cover; adhivasam, the upper cloth; a screen (Katyayana refers to the obscene practice, implying the lying down of the queen during the night by the side of the horse behind this scre~n!).

18. Catus-trimsat, thirty-four, perhaps ribs (other animals have 26 ribs—Mahidhara and others). Dayananda refers to a dynamo or electricity generating machine with 24 interceptors.

Achidra gatra, dissectors to name the parts, as heart, tongue, breast, as they divide them (earlier commentators); द्विधा भावरहितानि गात्राण्यङ्गानि— Daya.

19. Ṛtuh, season, time, one with time.

Dva yantara, they are two, day and night, to regulate; ṛtutha, in the season and season; according to season.

21. The first half of the verse occurs in Yv. XXIII. 26; and the whole as in XXV. 44.

Hari, the one with the character of attraction and sustenance.

22. Aditi, explained by the commentators, as 'not poor or mean', adina as an epithet of asva; Dayananda explains the term as 'indivisible', or undivided, not prone to destruction.

The horse of this entire hymn is not a horse of sacrifice as is normally supposed. Dayananda sees in it the science of harnessing energy. The allegory of horse, at places, has been utilized to explain astronomical phenomena too, and as Wilson also says, "there is no obvious indication however, of the same ceremonial that, is described in the text of the Yajuh, (as understood by Mahidhara etc.), or the Sutras of Katyayana or even in the Ramayana, and which evidently belongs to a later and more corrupt state of manners".

Hymn-163

For verses 2, 7 and 10 refer to Nir. IV. 13; VI. 8 and IV. 13 respectively.

The hymn occurs in the Yajuh, XXIX 12-24.

1. Prathamam jayamanah ut-yan samudrat ut va purisat, first born out of samudra or of purisa. Samudra is inter-space or antariksa, Daya. Purisa, the full-cause, purna-karana, the material cause. It refers to the birth of the sun. Syenasya paksa, wings of a falcon. Harinasya bahu, limbs of a deer.

2. Tritah, a synonym of Vayu; the float (संप्लावकः—Daya.). Yama, the ordainer (नियामकः—Daya.); name of Agni (Sayana).

Gandharva=Soma (Sayana); one which sustains the earth (gam=pṛthivim), the Vayu. (Daya.).

Surat=सूर्यात्, from the sun.

Vasavah, personified solar rays; the Brahmacarins who have lived with discipline up to an age of 24.

3. Guhyena vratena, by a secret or mysterious act; by an act of universal character (गोप्येन शीलेन—Daya.).

Trini bandhanani, three bindings (उत्पत्तिकारणानि, media of origin): Vasu, Aditya, and Dyau. It may even refer to the sun who diffuses his warmth to the three regions.

4. Trini bandhanani, three bindings in the heaven (दिवि), three in waters or earth (अप्सु) and three in mid-space (समुद्रे=अन्तरिक्षे—Daya.). These are the bindings of the Sun or of horse. The three are food, site and seed (अन्न, स्थान and बीज) on the earth (अप्सु); the three in the inter-space (समुद्रे) are clouds, electricity (lightning) and thunder (megha, vidyut and stanitam), and in the heaven are Vasu, Aditya and Dyu-sthana (Sayana); भूलोकोऽपि अप् (दिवि) शब्देनाभिधीयते; ap=the earth.

5. Sapha, the one that gives comfort, (शं फणन्ति तेषाम्—Daya.).

Rasanah, tasty (आस्वादनीयाः—Daya.); saphanam nidhane, the place of sacrifice; the field in which he is pastured.

Rasana ṛtasya gopah, the guards attending on the horse or the priests (Sayana).

7. Anat, attains (naksati, to go, गतिकर्मा, Nigh. II. 14).

8. Bhagah kaninam, loveliness or prosperity or good fortune of the maiden (or the dear one).

9. Hiranya-sṛngah, golden-horned; his mane is of gold (Wilson); golden halos like the horns of a moon.
